SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

SENATE

THURSDAY, JUNE 14, 1934

(Legislative day of Wednesday, June 6, 1934)

The Senate met in executive session at 11 o'clock a.m., on the expiration of the recess.

On motion of Mr. Robinson of Arkansas, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day, Wednesday, June 13, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], occasioned by continued illness; the absence of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuys], and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who are necessarily detained from the Senate; and the absence of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh], who is detained in attendance on the Democratic pre-primary convention in Massachusetts.

Mr. HEBERT. I wish to announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed] is absent because of illness, and that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

INVITATION TO ATTEND COMMEMORATIVE EXERCISES IN HONOR OF JAMES MADISON

As in legislative session,

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from Hon. HARRY FLOOD BYRD, chairman, and Hon. Grosvenor Dawe, secretary, etc., Volunteer Committee of Arrangements, Madison Memorial Day Exercises, Montpelier, Va., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MADISON MEMORIAL DAY, Montpelier, Va., June 12, 1934.

Hon. JOHN N. GARNER.

Vice President of the United States,

The Capitol, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. GARNER: June 28 is the yearly anniversary date of the death of James Madison, fourth President of the United States, and named with historic justice "the Father of the Constitution."

At Montpelier, Va., by the consent and invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Somerville, owners of the Madison lands—and with the cooperation of the William Byrd Chapter of the D.A.R. simple and informal commemorative exercises will be held at 2 p.m. on the afternoon of June 28.

While we are aware that the Seventy-third Congress may have adjourned before June 28, we desire to invite those Congressmen who may happen to be in Washington on that date to join in honoring the memory of one of America's devoted statesmen and

Will you be pleased to lay this general invitation before the membership of the Senate, with the request that all who can attend should notify us of their intention, so that proper preparations for seating and transportation may be completed in advance.

Very respectfully,

Volunteer Committee of Arrangements.

Harry Flood Byrd, Chairman.

Grosvenor Dawe, Secretary.

REXFORD G. TUGWELL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the nomination of Rexford G. Tugwell to be Under Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, on the 24th day of April the President of the United States sent to the Senate the name of Dr. Tugwell as Under Secretary of the Agricultural Department

On that day, the 24th of April, the Senate referred the nomination to the Agricultural Committee. Last Monday was the first time the nomination was laid before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That was done undoubtedly because the Senate had passed a resolution directing the Agricultural Committee to take action and report its action upon the nomination not later than 12 o'clock last Tuesday.

At 10 o'clock, as a member of the committee, I went to the committee room. I found on the door of the committee room a notice that the hearing on Dr. Tugwell's nomination would take place in a different room, the number of which I think was 18, a larger room.

I went to that room and had some difficulty in getting into the room. While it was a large room-the largest, perhaps, of any hearing room in the Capitol or in the House or Senate Office Buildings-I found the room crowded almost to suffocation. Every seat was occupied, and the aisles were crowded with people standing. The hall running out of the room into the main hall was crowded with people trying in vain to secure admission into the room.

When I got inside I found a table to seat the committee, with the chairman sitting in his proper place, two tables on either side for newspapermen and others, and, in the middle, a small table where the doctor was seated. He was surrounded on all sides by a surging crowd. Opposite him, seated at the committee table, was the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. There was a broadcasting outfit in one corner of the room and a moving-picture outfit in another corner of the room, and dozens and dozens of cameramen snapping their cameras in diffferent parts of the room. It seemed to me that the only thing it lacked, to have the right kind of a setting, was the presence of the Marine Band to furnish music for the occasion [laughter], although it would have been an impossibility, at the particular time I entered the room, for the Marine Band to have gotten inside.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield. Mr. CLARK. The Senator does not mean to suggest that there was anything unusual in this procedure of allowing the newspaper photographers and an interested gallery to be present, does he? I agree entirely with the Senator that it is inappropriate, but it has been my observation since I have been in the Senate that that takes place at any committee meeting which happens to be of popular interest.

Mr. NORRIS. I never saw the like of it since I have been in the Senate or in the House. It was a complete show, with nothing lacking but the music.

The witness, Dr. Tugwell, was facing the chairman of the committee, and with the chairman looking at him as he only can, with his fierce and piercing eyes; I wondered why the witness did not faint away. [Laughter.] I wondered how he could withstand those terrible surroundings and not get faint-hearted. I do not doubt now that he was thoroughly imbued with the importance of the occasion. I do not doubt now that he realized then that that was an occasion where 100-percent patriotism surrounded and took in everything.

After the chairman had examined Dr. Tugwell for a while, the Chair called the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd] to the chair. The Senator from Virginia is not a member of the committee; but after the witness had been sufficiently impressed with the surroundings and with the atmosphere, the Senator from Virginia was placed in the chairman's chair, and the chairman gracefully withdrew-temporarily, it is true. I have the record here. The chairman said, "Now, Senator Byrd, you can take my seat temporarily"; and the Senator from Virginia took the chairman's seat, and the chairman got out of it, and the committee had a new chairman. The Senator from Virginia with great courtesy acknowledged the honor, however, and said in reply, "I first want to express my appreciation to the chairman and the committee for the privilege of propounding some questions to Dr. Tugwell." As a matter of fact, up to this point the committee had not been consulted; so the thanks that the Senator from Virginia gave to the committee. I suppose, were duly appreciated, even though the committee had no voice in the matter.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am very glad to accept the appreciation of the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. I was not fishing for any thanks, Mr. President, but I accept them just as gracefully as I know how.

The Senator from Virginia took the witness in hand, and looked clear through him. I have no doubt that in his vision the Senator from Virginia saw what was going on on the other side of the witness, and I have no doubt that it duly impressed the witness. The Senator from Virginia propounded to the witness the questions that he wanted to propound, and after he had continued for some time the atmosphere cooled off just a little bit. In preparation for the next inquisitor who was to take the chairmanship, the Senator from Virginia, I presume realizing that the temperature had dropped several degrees, raised it up to more than 200 percent patriotism by rising in his place and making a stump speech. He made a good speech. He did not talk to the committee. He talked over their heads. He talked to the crowd; and there was the crowd ready to help elevate the atmosphere and make a sufficient impression upon the poor victim who was there in the shape of Dr. Tugwell.

The Senator from Virginia was applauded. The crowd cheered and clapped their hands and yelled. It went away beyond almost any crowd that I have ever heard, on the street corner or anywhere else. The Senator worked up the crowd into a fervor of patriotism. He did not talk about Dr. Tugwell, it is true, but undoubtedly it impressed Dr. Tugwell. What he said, as I understood it, had nothing more to do with Dr. Tugwell's nomination than the starlings do that roost in the rafters of the Capitol [laughter]; but it raised the temperature. It duly impressed the witness. It seemed to me almost that he was like a lamb led to the slaughter, where grave and reverend Senators were going to propound all kinds of questions to him.

After that occurrence the Senator from Virginia very gracefully withdrew and surrendered the chair, and the chairman called out, and that time he said, "If there is no objection from the committee, we will have the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Balley], take the chair temporarily."

In the midst of the excitement which had been worked up by this eloquent speech of the Senator from Virginia, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Balley] took the witness.

I have seen some witnesses examined in court; I have read some of the things that go on in police courts; but I think this equalled anything I ever read, or ever saw, or ever heard.

The Senator from North Carolina very learnedly started to read extracts from a lecture that the doctor had delivered in 1931 to a convention of economists, and he picked out a clause here and a clause there and asked the doctor whether those were his sentiments, whether he believed in them now. As he asked the questions he pounded the desk, and I wondered how the desk could stand the terrible pounding that was given it. I do not know whether or not it was made for the occasion, but it was an extraordinarily strong table, or it never would have stood up. [Laughter.]

The doctor sometimes refused to admit that these quotations were his sentiments and insisted that he was discussing before a scientific body a scientific question; that he was discussing questions that he condemned; that even over in Russia, where they had planning on a great scale, he had discussed it and he had said that if that kind of planning was adopted it meant the disregard of Constitution and statutes, but those were not his sentiments. Those would follow, in his judgment, from the adoption of that kind of a system of planning, in which he did not believe.

This show did not turn out just as I really expected it would, because modestly, courteously, and rather calmly, the doctor answered as best he could the questions propounded to him.

Mr. President, I thought the atmosphere cooled a little bit during the examination by the Senator from North Carolina, but it never was allowed to subside entirely. When it got a little cooler, another stump speech was made. The chairman made a couple of very fine speeches, defiant speeches, with the very fire of enthusiasm coming out of his eyes as he eyed the witness sitting there in silence before him.

During these speeches, in which the speakers did not discuss Dr. Tugwell to any extent, the temperature gradually went up again, the crowd yelled, they clapped their hands, and some of them became almost hysterical in the fervor of patriotism, which was increased up to a thousand percent.

Dr. Tugwell was still there. As the questioner would pound the table after he had read a sentence picked out of this speech, he would point his finger at Dr. Tugwell and say, "Is not that your language?" After the doctor had been questioned not only by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd] but by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Balley] 4, 5, and sometimes 6 times upon the same point, they let him go. After the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Balley] had quit, for the first time the chairman announced very courteously, that if any member of the committee had any question to ask he might ask it.

Well, Mr. President, the next day at 10 o'clock the committee met.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. CUTTING. I was about to suggest to the Senator that perhaps one of the reasons why the members of the committee did not ask more questions was on account of the attitude of the hearing. It would have taken a good deal of courage for any member of the committee to ask many questions in that audience. If the Senator will recall, a mere suggestion from the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead] that the proceedings be conducted in a more orderly manner was greeted with catcalls, and hisses, and hoots, and boos from the audience.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I was at the hearing, and it seemed a rather good-natured meeting, with about half the committee acting as witnesses and the other half acting as interrogators.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nebraska will yield. I just wondered whether the Senator from Louisiana would consider that a rowdy meeting, because I have | agree with everything he stands for. held some committee meetings in New Orleans, and I know what they are down there. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, we need make no argument when the Senator from Louisiana characterizes this meeting as he has. If he felt that way about it, God only knows how the rest of us felt about it.

What the Senator from New Mexico has said is true. The committee were awed into silence. I did not have the courage to participate very often, and when, with his hand pointed at the witness, the questioner listened to about half the answer and then interrupted with another question, once or twice some of us did interrupt and say, modestly, that we thought the witness ought to be allowed to answer one question before another was propounded. But that was about the way the show proceeded.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield. Mr. CLARK. I merely desire to say to the Senator that if the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Montana were in anywise intimidated by any part of the proceedings or if they were not practically acting not only as counsel for Dr. Tugwell but as witnesses for him, then the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Montana have been grossly libeled by the stenographers who officially reported the hearings.

Mr. NORRIS. The stenographers may have a different idea of it from what I had, but I would like to say to the Senator myself that it took a great deal of courage for me to interrupt the proceedings. I did not have the courage to do it. I was frightened. [Laughter.] I wondered what the witness thought if a Senator, who had attended other meetings and listened to several other hearings in his lifetime, was scared or lacked courage to interrupt; I wondered what the poor witness, who never had had a similar experience, must have been thinking.

It is said here now on the floor that one of the things against Dr. Tugwell is that he did not stand up during that examination and say, "Yes; I believe so-and-so", that he was taking water. Probably he was: I do not know. If he was human, he was. He was frightened, and perhaps he was apologetic sometimes, and he would be justified in being so, I thought, from my experience with human nature.

Now the charge is made against him that when these extracts were read he did not say, "Yes; those are my sentiments." It is said here on the floor that if he had said so, it would have been better than if he had said, "They are not my sentiments." So Dr. Tugwell, so far as his interrogators were concerned, was going to be damned no matter what he did. If he had said, "Yes; those are my senti-ments", they would have said, "He is a Bolshevik." If he had said, "No; those are not my sentiments; I do not believe in that. I am not a party to the Bolshevik idea. I believe in our Constitution. I believe in our statutes", as he said repeatedly and repeatedly and repeatedly. Now he is condemned for saying that.

They can take either horn of the dilemma they please, but they have to condemn him, no matter which way they go, because they wanted him to say he was a Bolshevik, they wanted him to say that he believed in the Russian form of government, that he did not believe in our Constitution, that he did not believe in our statutes; and he did not say thathe denied it.

Mr. President, there has been a propaganda all over this country against Dr. Tugwell as great, almost, as any propaganda I have seen since I have been here. Millions of farmers and millions of other citizens of the United States have been misled as to Dr. Tugwell.

A man called me out Monday afternoon after I had come to the Senate, following the hearing, and tried to persuade me to be against Dr. Tugwell's nomination. Two men representing farm organizations came from my State and called me out and said, "We are here to protest against Dr. Tug-

I said, "Why? I am for him. I think he is a fine man, I think he will make a wonderfully fine Under Secretary." And that does not mean that I would necessarily have to

One of these farmers had been over at the meeting. saw him standing up in the audience. He said to me, "Why. the charge against Dr. Tugwell is that he believes in the nationalization of farms."

I said, "You heard him testify. You heard that question propounded to him, and you heard him emphatically deny it—say that he did not believe in it."

"Yes", he said, "I heard that, but they are saying out over the country that he believes in it, nevertheless.'

Mr. President, who is Dr. Tugwell? He was born on a farm in the State of New York, raised on a farm, went to school in the wintertime and worked on the farm in the summertime. After his graduation he had charge of his father's farm. He engaged in farming.

Before that came out in the evidence I was for a time a little frightened about it, because from what I had heard from some Senators as to the qualifications of an Under Secretary, I thought he came sometimes very near disqualifying himself.

It developed that Dr. Tugwell was educated, that he could even read and write. I thought then that might go against him with some people who think that the Under Secretary ought to be uneducated.

But what are his views? He has some advanced views. I think he is a liberal, although he calls himself a conservative. I myself would have thought more of him had he said he was a liberal, but he is entitled to give his own definition of what he thinks he is. I myself would not like to be called a conservative. I would not apologize for the fact that I was not one.

Some of Dr. Tugwell's articles show, and in fact his testimony shows, that when he graduated and after he left the farm he made a study of two things in political economy; it was his life's work; it is his life's work now-the farmer and the laboring man. Those are the two classes of our citizens he stood up for. Because it is his judgment that those two classes have not always received justice he stands condemned today by the special interests.

Those who have been opposing him, outside the Senate, of course, have been following Samuel Insull in their opposition. Senators know that when Samuel Insull was in his glory and had men hired everywhere, and was electing men to the Senate and to the House and to the judgeships and to commissions where they had something to do with electric-light rates, he had a manager who prepared speeches for candidates for Congress, and one of the interesting things which was developed several years ago was that that manager, in writing to another Insull manager in another State, telling him how to do his work and telling him how to get the right kind of men into office, said, "To prepare the candidate right do not discuss the issues." That was pretty good advice, coming from the Insull camp. "Do not discuss the issues, but hang the Bolshevik idea on the man you are opposing."

That is what some people have been trying to do in the case of Dr. Tugwell. They have not done it because they believed it, but they have made many honest men believe that it is true. Letters and resolutions coming from all over the country show that this propaganda has had its effect. They have come to me; they have come to all of us; and as they said to me I presume they said to other Senators, "He believes in the nationalization of the farmer."

Mr. President, he does not believe in anything of the kind. He has devoted his life to the interests of labor and agriculture. That has been his specialty.

When he was a young man he attended the first conference that was ever called by any President-it was called by President Harding-to consider the agricultural question. That conference was the beginning of the discussion of the agricultural question. There were called from all over the United States by the President prominent men-Governors, and so forth-to meet in conference. Dr. Tugwell was not invited, but he was there. He listened to the evidence.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. NORRIS. I yield

Mr. MURPHY. Was the Senator from Nebraska invited?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I was not invited. Dr. Tugwell listened to the evidence, and he was there at his own expense. He listened to it and he heard all the debate, because he was educating himself on the farm question. He wanted to hear what the leaders had to say. It was part of his education. He heard it all.

I learned from the hearing before the Committee on Agriculture that Dr. Tugwell favored the McNary-Haugen bill, which we passed through the Senate four or five different times on roll calls. I voted for it every time, but always had doubt about it. I have doubt about it yet, but I would vote for it again if the conditions were the same as they were then. It was defeated. Dr. Tugwell wrote something about it. In the hearings Senators will find one of the things he said about it in one of his writings; and I thought then, "He is treading on dangerous ground", as many Senators and many Members of the House and many eminent men over the country honestly believed that it was unconstitutional.

Mr. President, Dr. Tugwell might be condemned for that; some people would condemn him for it. I have been condemned, as other Senators have been, many times by honest men for favoring that kind of legislation. We were, as I believed then and as I believe now, in desperate condition. Some of us said, "If first we relieve agriculture, the cornerstone of our Nation, we shall relieve everyone, because, after all, we all depend upon agriculture." Dr. Tugwell was in favor of the McNary-Haugen bill, and he said so. He said in one of his articles that the more he read about it the more enthusiastic he became about it. He wanted the bill passed. That incurred the animosity and the hatred of big business and special interests. And although I favored it—I want to say I might have been wrong and Dr. Tugwell may have been wrong—it was never tried.

There has never been anything in the man's life to indicate that at any time, so far as I have ever heard of him, he has not been actuated by the sincerest and most honest of motives. He has now but one great ambition in his heart, and that is to help farming and to help labor. He learned about farming when he was between the plow handles. He learned about it when he scraped the mud off his boots when he went in at night. He may be wrong about some of the principles he advocates; but I do not think that is any reason why he should be condemned.

If Dr. Tugwell can be passed off and discarded it will be one of the greatest victories the special interests have ever obtained. They are on his trail. They have gone all over the United States with their false and misleading propaganda. They have deceived millions by their arguments. But the Insull racket ought to be too old now to be repeated.

The same class of people that are condemning him are now apologizing for Samuel Insull since he came back. The same propagandists who are trying to down Dr. Tugwell are now trying to build up a sentiment of sympathy around Insull. This propaganda is the Insull idea—the most dangerous of any that we have to contend with here—"Hang the Bolshevik idea on him." And people honestly believe some of these reports which have gone out.

One might take a sentence here and there out of the Holy Bible and condemn it. There would not be any difficulty in doing that if we resorted to the Insull methods.

Mr. President, I do not question any man's motives on this vote. I do not want to look into any man's heart and see why he casts a vote this way or that way. He is and he should be the master of his own conscience and his own vote. But after we have seen these kinds of propaganda which have gone over the country for various things we should not here and now be moved again and caught in the same trap that has been made to work hundreds of times in the past.

I have not heard a scintilla of evidence which questions the ability of this man, which questions his sincerity. I have never but once heard his courage questioned, and that was here on the floor of the Senate. I would not have been surprised and I would not have condemned him if on the examination before the committee he had withered to the floor, when that howling crowd was worked up to a frenzy on various ideas that did not have anything to do with Dr. Tugwell, and then suddenly the scene was changed and Dr. Tugwell was subjected to inquisition, surrounded by men of great ability who were questioning him and questioning his standing. It would not have been a thing to wonder at had he collapsed under the ordeal which he was compelled to endure.

And then when we came to vote in that committee we found that the committee was in favor of Dr. Tugwell 16 to 2. If we had omitted the chairman and just taken the vote of the committee it would have been a repetition of the famous ratio of 16 to 1.

Mr. President, to my mind that which is most requisite for a public official is honesty and sincerity. He ought to have courage, he ought to have wisdom. But if he will act honestly then there is hardly an office in this country of which he should not be allowed to have charge. I think Dr. Tugwell possesses these qualifications. He may not agree with me on some things; he may not agree with other Senators. There are no two of us who can agree. We are confronted, especially in agriculture and in labor, with a predicament that never before confronted mortal man. It is required of this administration to solve problems that have never before been presented. The old order has failed. I may blame the failure on one cause and other Senators may blame it on another, but we cannot deny that it has failed; that old remedies do not work. No man living can tell in advance just exactly what a new remedy or a new method will bring about.

We must either go forward with the light that God gives us, and do the best we can, or we must sit silently by and do nothing, and in the latter case we know that our country and our civilization will both fail. I think those in charge of our ship of state at this time ought to have the prayerful help of all our people, regardless of party. There is no place in this dilemma for a man with a mallet and chisel to come along trying to get some party advantage. If those on this side of the Chamber think they can get a party advantage in this case, I want to say to them that when the truth shall finally percolate down, as it will in time, they will be condemned for an opposition that is based upon such narrow-mindedness and such a lack of patriotism.

The opposition to Dr. Tugwell, as I see it—and I still say, in parenthesis, that I am not questioning any man who opposes him for any reason that he may think is proper—will crumble and decay when it shall have been properly investigated, and, when the truth shall be known, at least, his opponents will have to give him the credit of being honest and doing the very best he could under the most difficult circumstances possible.

Dr. Tugwell has not any politics, as I take it; I never heard anything said about his politics until he was questioned on the stand the other day. I do not know now whether he gives allegiance to any political party; or if he does, to which political party; but he did say he had written something on the farm question, at the request of friends of Governor Smith when he was a candidate for the Presidency. He also said that, so far as he knew, nothing that he had written had been utilized. Dr. Tugwell was, of course, if he favored the McNary-Haugen bill, opposed to some of the policies at least of the Coolidge and Hoover administrations. So far as I know, he took no part in any of those political contests. He advocated what he believed to be right for the farmer and laborer, without regard to the consideration of any political party. I take it there will be no partisan advantage here in the confirmation of his nomination. His administration, if he shall control it, will be as pure and as high above partisan activity as one can possibly imagine, for he has but one idea in his heart, and that is efficiency, righteousness, and to help save the farmer and the laboring man from the present terrible conditions which surround them.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9410) providing that permanent appropriations be subject to annual consideration and appropriation by Congress, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Griffin, Mr. McMillan, Mr. Parks, Mr. Cary, Mr. Goss, and Mr. Wigglesworth were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had severally agreed to the amendments of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H.R. 6462. An act to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration; to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development; to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range; and for other purposes;

H.R. 9526. An act authorizing the city of Port Arthur, Tex., or the commission hereby created, and its successors, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge over Lake Sabine at or near Port Arthur, Tex.; and

H.R. 9745. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver, issue silver certificates, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 9741. An act to provide for the taxation of manufacturers, importers, and dealers in certain firearms and machine guns, to tax the sale or other disposal of such weapons, and to restrict importation and regulate interstate transportation thereof; and

H.R. 9904. An act to amend section 5 of Public Act No. 2 of the Seventy-second Congress, as amended.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 2347. An act to amend the Inland Waterways Corporation Act, approved June 3, 1924, as amended;

H.R. 7982. An act to establish a national military park at the battlefield of Monocacy, Md.;

H.R. 8525. An act to amend the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act to permit the issuance of retailers' licenses of class B in residential districts;

H.R. 9002. An act to provide relief to Government contractors whose costs of performance were increased as a result of compliance with the act approved June 16, 1933, and for other purposes: and

H.R. 9745. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver, issue silver certificates, and for other purposes.

REXFORD G. TUGWELL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the nomination of Rexford G. Tugwell to be Under Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have enjoyed, as I know the other Members of the Senate have, the satire of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska. He pictures the meeting of the Agricultural Committee and the persecuted witness, Dr. Tugwell, and myself, a new Member of the Senate of the United States, very humble in everything I have tried to do here as intimidating the Senator from Nebraska. I am especially pleased, and I want to thank the Senator from Nebraska for the high compliment he has paid me with respect to my oratory. I am a plain, blunt business man. Until the Senator made his speech this morning I had never believed I possessed any capacity whatever as an orator-I, of course, know the Senator was being facetious; but I feel that I have failed in my oratory, because I have not as yet been able to make the Senator from Nebraska understand why I am opposed to the nomination of Dr. Tugwell; and, with his attention, I will endeavor to make myself clear.

Mr. President, I have been especially impressed with the wide tolerance and liberality shown by the Senator from Nebraska in the speech he has just concluded. He classes those of us who oppose the nomination of Dr. Tugwell as advocates of special interests in this country, even to the extent of following the teachings of Samuel Insull. I want to say, Mr. President, that I do not take to myself any attitude of self-righteousness; I do not give myself a certificate of character whenever I speak on the floor of the Senate; but I have just as keen a conscience in the discharge of my public duty in this or any other matter before the Senate as has the Senator from Nebraska or as has any other Member of this august body.

Mr. President, referring to the suggestions of the persecution of Dr. Tugwell, when the examination was held before a committee that voted 16 in favor of his nomination to 2 against, anyone who can read that record can see he not only had able counsel there to protect him and suggest what he would say in reply to his questioners, he not only had the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] as his defender, but he had the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]; and the question was, at times, who was the witness being examined, whether it was the Senator from Montana, or the Senator from Nebraska, or whether it was Dr. Tugwell. It is only necessary to read the record of that meeting of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to demonstrate, and it is not necessary for me to say to the Members of the Senate, that Dr. Tugwell could not have been persecuted in that presence; that the Senator from Nebraska would have prevented it, as would have the Senator from Montana and the other 14 advocates Dr. Tugwell had on the committee.

But, Mr. President, I am not here to reply to the satire of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, much as I enjoyed it. I am here to state, as clearly and concisely as I can, my reasons for opposing the nomination of Dr. Tugwell; and they are just as sincere reasons as are those held by any other Member of this body.

I wish to say that I have no animosity and no hostility of any character against Dr. Tugwell. I would not for my right arm do him an injustice on the floor of the Senate. The few times it has been my pleasure to meet him I have been greatly impressed with his very charming personality. I further desire to say, Mr. President, that I deeply regret the necessity I am under to oppose a nomination sent to the Senate by the leader of my party, the President of the United States. I am a regular Democrat, who believes in party organization. My record in the Senate will show that I have supported the recommendations of the President of the United States in the large majority, and unless I had some strong conviction to the contrary. I stood up as one of 27 Senators and was counted for him when his veto was overridden by Congress. I further believe in the greatest possible latitude being given to the Chief Executive of this country in the appointment of those subordinates who serve under him; and, for that reason, it is with great difficulty that I have made the decision to cast my vote, for the reasons which I now give, against confirming the nomination of Dr. Tugwell.

In reply to the Senator from Nebraska, let me say that I am not voting against Dr. Tugwell because of disappointment that he did not admit he was a Bolshevik, that he did not admit he believed in the Soviet system of Russia. I am voting against him entirely for other reasons, which I will endeavor to make clear as I proceed.

It had been my purpose to vote for the confirmation of this nomination. My attention was attracted to an interview given by Dr. Tugwell in a Washington newspaper in which he said, to quote him exactly—

Certain amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act now pending in the Senate will permit us to continue to do what we have already been doing. If we should get a set-back in court, we would have to stop doing certain things under present circumstances.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there? Mr. BYRD. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator from Virginia tell me what difference there is between the position of Dr. Tugwell as expressed in that statement and the position of the President himself when he closed the banks soon after he came into office and then asked Congress for authority to validate what he had already done? Or what difference there is between the statement of Dr. Tugwell and the position of Mr. Hoover when he extended the time of payment of the war debts due the United States and afterwards asked Congress to validate what he had done?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Kentucky that there is a vast difference in what the President of the United States may do in a great emergency and what an official of the Government may do in usurping the authority of Congress and in taking to himself authority which has not been delegated to him by the legislative branch.

I wrote a letter to Dr. Tugwell and asked whether or not he was correctly quoted in the interview to which I have referred. I received in reply a letter which is now a part of the record of the Senate. In that letter Dr. Tugwell admitted that substantially what was said in the interview was correct. One sentence of it said:

It was also in that connection-

Referring to certain activities of his Department—that I stated that certain of the amendments simply permitted us to do what we are already doing.

I do not question the beneficial effect of what the Department of Agriculture is doing. I do not say whether this authority which has been exceeded is wise or unwise for the farmers of the country. But I stand as one who believes the time has come for the Congress of the United States to say to the bureaus here in Washington that they must not exercise authority unless such authority is first given them by the legislative branch of the Government.

I stand as one who believes the time has come to let the people of the country know and the bureaus and the departments of the Government know that there are still three branches of our Government, each independent and as a check upon the other, the legislative, the executive, and the judicial branches.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the Senator kindly state some specific act which he charges Dr. Tugwell with having done in violation of law?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have no specific act to charge except to say that by his own admission he has admitted that he has exceeded the authority granted him by Congress and that he wants us to validate the illegal acts which have been performed by his Department.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I heard every word Dr. Tugwell said, and I think if the Senator will review the record, he will find it is an extreme construction which he has drawn from the testimony.

Mr. BYRD. I am quoting from a letter written to me which is a part of the Congressional Record, in which Dr. Tugwell said:

It was also in that connection that I stated that certain of the amendments simply permitted us to do what we are already doing.

Why should the Congress permit the Department of Agriculture to do what they are already doing if they have the law authorizing them to do it? If they have a legal right to do it, then it is not necessary for Congress to permit them to do what they are already doing.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I assume the Senator wants to present a fair record. Let me ask the Senator if it is not fair at this point to state that Dr. Tugwell said they believed that what they had done was authorized by law, but that certain protestants and recalcitrants had challenged their authority and gone into court even to the extent of five cases; that although the courts had ruled with them in all five cases, yet on account of arguments and objections presented the Department thought it best to clear up the grounds of objection which had been presented; that there was no admission as expressed in that statement and the position of the President himself when he closed the banks soon after he came into office and then asked Congress for authority to lated the authority of law.

I will ask the Senator if it is not fair to state that Dr. Tugwell did say they believed they had the authority and that thus far the courts had sustained their belief?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, it is true, as the Senator from Alabama has said, that there are certain amendments pending here in the Senate to the Agricultural Adjustment Act which the people of the country have been told, and inaccurately told, are merely clarifying amendments to the act, when as a matter of fact they vest great additional authority in the Secretary of Agriculture. We are likewise told that the adoption of the amendments is necessary to permit the Department of Agriculture to continue what they are already doing.

I am one of those, Mr. President, who believe that the proper agency of the Government to clarify the laws enacted by Congress is the judiciary, the courts. I do not believe Congress is the proper authority to clarify what it once attempted to do. I believe the courts should clarify it through litigation already in progress.

Secretary Wallace said he thinks it was the intention of Congress to give the authority to the Department of Agriculture which is given by the pending amendments. I voted for the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and I am one who would not have voted for that measure if the pending amendments had been incorporated in the original act. Speaking for myself, it was not my intention to give this greatly increased authority to the Department of Agriculture as covered and proposed by the pending amendments.

But that is my own view. Other Members of the Senate may form their own conclusions. It is my firm conviction that Dr. Tugwell and the Department of Agriculture have willfully exceeded the authority given them by Congress. It is my firm conviction that they have admitted they have exceeded that authority and are now asking us to validate their illegal acts. I may be wrong, but that is my opinion.

Mr. President, let me proceed a little further. I have said I intend to vote against the confirmation of Dr. Tugwell because I am going to cast a vote in protest against any bureau chief, against any department head of the Government, who deliberately exceeds his authority, so that we may preserve and call attention again to the fundamental institutions of our Government. I will admit, with utmost frankness and candor, that if I had not already determined to cast my vote against Dr. Tugwell, I would have decided to do so after I heard his testimony before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry last Monday.

Mr. President, Dr. Tugwell was then questioned in the graphic manner described by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris]. I only wish it had been as exciting as so eloquently described to the Senate by him. Dr. Tugwell was questioned in regard to his speech made in 1931, a speech which was made in an affirmative sense, a speech in which he made arguments to sustain the things which he said. Dr. Tugwell said on last Monday that he did not mean what he said in 1931. He said he was speaking then as a reporter and as a scientist. But there is nothing whatever in the speech, not one single line, to show he was speaking as a reporter and that he was not giving his own views in making the speech.

Mr. President, I should like to know what special dispensation a scientist has not to be held strictly accountable for the things he says and the things he writes. If there is any special immunity to be given to a scientist, I hope it may be extended to us politicians because it would be very convenient to us at times to be able to disclaim responsibility for those things that we say and those things that we write.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I am asking the Senator for information. The letter of the Senator to Dr. Tugwell about an article in the paper was inserted in the Congressional Record. I heard read the Senator's letter to Dr. Tugwell. The reply of Dr. Tugwell was not read but was printed; consequently I did not hear it read and I have not read it. Will the Senator tell me where I may find it in the RECORD?

Mr. BYRD. It is in the Congressional Record of last

Mr. NORRIS. I mean at what page of the committee

Mr. BYRD. I do not know that it is in the committee hearings. It was printed in the Congressional Record of last Saturday.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I should have today much more respect for Dr. Tugwell if he had come before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and said courageously and frankly: "Yes; I wrote that speech in 1931. Yes; I believed what I said then, but I said it under conditions existing at that time. I said it after 12 years of Republican misrule when many thought the Government of this country was on the verge of collapse. I said it to contribute something to the political thought of that day." But no; Dr. Tugwell came before the committee and completely repudiated what he said in his speech in 1931.

Mr. President, I am going to attempt to show the Senate that subsequent utterances of Dr. Tugwell confirm me in the belief-and I make this statement with the utmost regret—that when he made that speech in 1931 he believed in the principles he then enunciated. I am not going to take the time of the Senate to call attention to the numerous speeches Dr. Tugwell has made since that time. I am going to call attention to one speech, a speech he made on December 29, 1933, in Philadelphia, entitled "The Place of Government in a National Land Program", a speech which he made not as a scientist, and hence he has no cloak of immunity, because he made the speech as Assistant Secretary of Agriculture and as a responsible official of the Government. He said in that speech:

We are now engaged in a drastic program of controlling the output of agricultural products for the emergency. This in itself means that we are trying to control the entire utilization of all our agricultural land.

And then he says:

Private control has failed to use wisely its control of land. The post-war decade of low farm incomes, and the subsequent period of industrial collapse, now makes us realize that the use which is made of the land is of immediate and vital interest

For the first time the Government is thinking of land as a whole. For the first time we are preparing to build a land program which will control the use of that greatest of all natural resources, not merely for the benefit of those who happen to hold title to it, but for the greater welfare of all the citizens of the

Now, remember, Mr. President, that speech, made in 1931, spoke of a planned economy—a planned economy whereby the Government would take control of all private business, whereby he says business will be abolished, and even the Constitution of the United States will be destroyed; yet in this speech, made as a responsible official of this Government, he says:

Private control has failed to use wisely its control of land. For the first time, the Government is thinking of land as a whole.

What could that mean except that he still believes in the system of planned economy and national planning enunciated in his speech of 1931?

Now I want to ask, who gave Dr. Tugwell the authority to speak at that time in behalf of the Government of the United States? Who is the Government of the United States? The Congress is the Government with respect to all legislative matters; and, so far as I know, there has been no bill presented to Congress, no law even suggested, whereby the Government could take control of all the land in this country, as indicated by Dr. Tugwell in this speech.

Mr. President, he was speaking at that time as Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, speaking as a man who is supposed to preserve the interests of the farmers; yet what does he say? He says:

We are preparing to build a land program which will control the use of that greatest of all natural resources, not merely for the benefit of those who happen to hold title to it, but for the greater welfare of all the citizens of the country.

Not merely for the benefit of the farmers, the people that we are trying to help in this great emergency that confronts us, but for the greater benefit of all the people of this country.

I ask in all sincerity, let the Members of the Senate read that speech in connection with the speech of 1931 which Dr. Tugwell has now repudiated.

Mr. President, I am convinced in my own mind that Dr. Tugwell meant not in detail but meant in principle those things he said in 1931. I do not want to convince any other Member of the Senate, even if I could, because this is a matter that each of us must decide for himself. I am further convinced that he meant that when I read his last book entitled "Our Economic Society and Its Problems."

Let me read one clause in that book; and again, Mr. President, this is not written as a scientist. It is not written as a reporter. It is written, as shown by the title page, as Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, as a responsible official of this Government. He says in this book:

The challenge of Russia to America does not lie in the merits of the Soviet system, although they may prove to be considerable. The challenge lies rather in the idea of planning—

Still talking about the planning that he suggested in 1931: Of purposeful, intelligent control over economic affairs.

This, it seems, we must accept as a guide to our economic life to replace the decadent notions of a laissez faire philosophy.

Again, he considers in this book the different plans that have been suggested as a solution of the governmental problems of this country. He considers the Soule plan, and says in regard to that plan:

The doubtful point is whether business organized internally on a basis of profit making is the type of business that can best serve social ends. Is national planning consistent with individu-alistic businesses? * * * Before the laws could be changed, public sentiment would have to surrender its laissez faire philosophy and espouse the principles of social control.

Then he discusses what is known as the "Beard plan" still talking about the planning that he first brought forth in 1931; and his criticism of the Beard plan is:

A special feature of the plan is its insistence throughout that only staple articles are to be brought under the national economic council. * * This provision seeks to avoid a supposed evil of socialism; that is, that socialism tends to excessive standardization and is, therefore, detrimental to cultural development. However, under a completely planned economy the ultimate decision as to what goods are luxuries and what luxuries ought to be tolerated in the productive system rests with the public will as expressed through the agencies of planning.

Again referring to the planned economy that I assume he set forth in 1931.

Then he criticizes certain features of the Swope plan, and

They barely touch the problem of economic planning in the public interest.

He dismisses that plan with these words.

Then he discusses the plan submitted by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follettel, for whom I have the highest respect. He says in regard to that plan:

The whole question of economic planning has been obscured by the whole question of economic planning has been obscured by the attention devoted to this sort of organizational scheme. An advisory council might guess, but it could not plan; and the dif-ference between guessing and planning is the difference between laissez faire and social control.

Then he speaks of the National Industrial Act, which has been placed on the statute books at the recommendation of the President of the United States; and as to that he says

But for the evil that the most economical utilization of industrial capacities for the welfare of the people as a whole is inconsistent with private profit-seeking, the act attempts no remedy. Successful economic planning involves the encouragement of industrial development along socially useful lines, based on the recognition that the social utility of an industry cannot always be determined by its ability to yield private profits. Thus planning involves public participation through government in the distribution of capital among industries, by means of taxation, regulation of profits, and in various other ways.

Then, Mr. President, 3 years after the speech he made in 1931 and which he now repudiates, he has a chapter headed "Need for Economic Planning." Although he said before the committee, as the record will show, that he did not approve of national planning, that he did not approve of planned economy except such planning as has already been adopted by this administration, yet here is a chapter in this book in which he makes an argument for the need for economic planning. He says:

The objectives are clear. The methods to follow are not so apparent. But we cannot sit and wait. We must act, and we cannot act without planning. To act in the public interest, we must plan on a national scale. To put national plans into effect, we set up social controls—

And so forth.

For many years the technical task of devising plans for regulating our complex economic interests was too difficult to attempt. But today we know that this is no longer true, for Russia has shown that planning is practicable. * * * For many years the Government has handled the mails efficiently, and there is no reason to suppose that other enterprises would be more difficult.

Remember, Senators, that the speech of 1931 spoke of a planned economy which would mean the abolition of business and the destruction of the Constitution, by the very language of that speech; and now he is still making an argument for that particular plan, known as "planned economy."

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, does the Senator yield? Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I know very well that the Senator would not intentionally misquote Dr. Tugwell; but since I observe that he and the Senator from North Carolina both said that Dr. Tugwell advocated a doctrine which meant the destruction of all business, I desire to call his attention to the fact that Dr. Tugwell did not say that. He said it meant the destruction of laissez faire industry, which is quite a different thing from the destruction of all business.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, to that remark by the Senator from Kentucky should be added the statement that Dr. Tugwell himself said that all existing business in America was the creation of the laissez faire philosophy.

Mr. LOGAN. That is true, and it will all have to be destroyed, if we are to maintain the national life and existence. Dr. Tugwell is absolutely right about that. There is no way for us to go on. I thought all of us admitted that under the old laissez faire doctrine, as we have built it up over 40 years, business got to the point where it just exploded. Now we shall have to try to do something else.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an observation?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In connection with what the Senator from Kentucky has just said, I have here what purports to be a direct quotation from Dr. Tugwell on that subject. I read it for the benefit of anybody who might not have had an opportunity to hear it before:

Most of us who say so easily that this is our way out do not, I am convinced, understand that fundamental changes of attitude, new disciplines, revised legal structures, unaccustomed limitations on activity, are all necessary if we are to plan. This amounts, in fact, to the abandonment, finally, of laissez faire. It amounts practically to the abolition of "business."

Then he is quoted still further as follows:

The next series of changes will have to do with industry itself. It has already been suggested that business will logically be required to disappear. This is not an overstatement for the sake of emphasis; it is literally meant.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Virginia will allow me to ask the Senator from Indiana just one question, I should be glad to; that is, does the Senator from Indiana believe in the old laissez faire doctrine as announced by Adam Smith?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I do not care to go into the laissez faire question at all. We are merely discussing what Dr. Tugwell said, and I have just quoted what are reported to be his exact words, saying that business must disappear. It is not a question of laissez faire at all. It is not a question of the laissez faire doctrine. The question is as to business. He says business must disappear.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to ask the Senator from Indiana from what he is reading?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am reading from the statement of Dr. Tugwell, which I understand he now repudiates, the statement made in 1931 before the Forty-fourth Annual Meeting of the American Economics Association.

Mr. BLACK. May I ask whether that is taken from the circular issued by the Pennsylvania Manufacturers Association about Dr. Tugwell?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Not at all. I have the same thing to which the Senator refers, but this is not taken from that

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, for the information of the Senator from Alabama, I will say that Dr. Tugwell has been correctly quoted, and that the quotation can be secured from the Congressional Record of June 8, from the speech which was inserted at the request of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. President, to proceed with my argument, that I claim that by subsequent developments, by the activities of Dr. Tugwell, he has shown that he believed in the things he wrote in 1931, let me call the attention of the Senate to another section of the book he has just written; and, by the way, this book, I understand, is to be used in the public schools of this country. He says:

Obstacles to the Experimental Attitude.

One of the purposes of the book is to bring about an experimental attitude, as stated in one of the paragraphs of the book. Here is what he says as to the obstacles to the experimental attitude:

An illustration of such feeling is the unreasoning, almost hysterical, attachment of certain Americans to the Constitution.

Although he said in his testimony before the committee that he favored the Constitution, and, when I asked him if he favored any amendments to the Constitution, he said he did not know of any amendments to the Constitution he did favor, yet he says that one of the "obstacles to the experimental attitude" which he is trying to bring about in this book, which is one of the announced purposes of it, is the "hysterical attachment of certain Americans to the Constitution."

He goes on to say that in the same way many people are unreasonably attached to the protective tariff, to the gold standard, to labor unions, and to individual bargainings between employers and employees.

I thank God, Mr. President, that there is an hysterical attachment to the Constitution still existing in this American land, notwithstanding Dr. Tugwell.

He goes on to say:

The chief handicap to overcome is our allegiance to ideals that belong to an earlier industrial setting. In place of adhering to blind traditionalism, we should develop an open-minded experimental attitude toward social and economic institutions and problems.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Sheppard in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Assuming that Dr. Tugwell should not be confirmed, I take it he would still be Assistant Secretary of Agriculture. Does the Senator agree with that?

Mr. BYRD. I do.

Mr. TYDINGS. So that really there will be no change in the direction of the Department of Agriculture, I take it. The one thing before us is whether we should confer on him a new title and allow him to proceed with the same duties he is now performing.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am a new Member of the Senate, and I may not completely understand the obligations of a Senator, but there is another, much broader, question, and that is as to whether we, as Members of the Senate, should give a vote of confidence to a man such as I have described. It is very much more important to me than as to whether he shall get $2,500 more or $2,500 less. or whether he shall have the title of Assistant Secretary or the title of Under Secretary.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not taking issue with the Senator;

I am simply asking for my own information.

After all, one of the things which gives me considerable difficulty is that the act which Mr. Tugwell is carrying out in many characteristics is an act which Congress itself has passed. I do not like some features of the act, and the Senator and I, I believe, are in accord on that, and also as to some proposed legislation. But if Congress passes that kind of legislation, I do not think it would be fair to blame Mr. Tugwell for carrying it out, because I think the fault then is with the Congress rather than with Mr. Tugwell's policy, since we are giving him the power to do things and then blaming him because he does them.

I understand, however, that it is claimed that on certain occasions he exceeded that authority, and, of course, that is not what I am attempting to bring out here. If he exceeded the authority, that is a different matter. But the radical policies which are being put into effect in the Department of Agriculture are to a large extent the policies which Congress itself has adopted. Therefore, in fairness to Mr. Tugwell, if he is doing only what the Congress asked him to do, I do not want to condemn him for that, regardless of what his views may be.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I trust the Senator from Maryland was absent from the Chamber when I made my speech, because if I have so confused the mind of the Senator as to my real objection to Dr. Tugwell I feel that I have been very neglectful of clear expression in this debate.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. GORE. The Senator from Maryland has observed that Congress passed the act and that we are criticizing Dr. Tugwell for carrying it into effect; and he makes the point, and I think properly, that the real responsibility rests upon the Congress. That is true with reference to the legislation to which he refers.

If we confirm Dr. Tugwell, we make the Senate responsible for what he has said and endorse his principles, his doctrines, and his philosophy that industry and the Constitution ought to be destroyed. If we confirm him, I think the Senator from Maryland will agree, then the Senate takes the responsibility; and that is the point, I think, involved in this matter of confirming or rejecting Dr. Tugwell, whether or not the Senate will accept that responsibility.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I think there is a great deal in what the Senator from Oklahoma has said. There is no reflection on Dr. Tugwell as a man; there is no reflection on his character or integrity; there is a reflection on his views. But if those views coincide with the acts of Congress, then I think Congress ought to be blamed, and not Dr. Tugwell, for projecting those views into legislation.

Mr. GORE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am going to stand with the Senator from Virginia in opposing the agricultural licensing bill, which Dr. Tugwell, I believe, advocates. I do not think I have voted for a great many of these revolutionary measures, particularly in reference to agriculture; but inasmuch as Congress has seen fit to pass them anyway, I do not want to blame Dr. Tugwell, even though he agrees with them, for doing no more than carrying out the will of Congress.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Maryland thinks that the legislation heretofore passed by the Congress goes as far as these addresses and these quotations, and involves those principles and involves those consequences, then I think his point is well taken. I think the Senator from Virginia is demonstrating that Dr. Tugwell's philosophy goes even further than Congress has yet gone.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President-

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I should like to be permitted to conclude. I shall consume only about 10 minutes more.

Mr. GORE. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not know the Senator was speaking under the limitation of time.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not mean to say that I shall vote for Dr. Tugwell's confirmation, because, frankly, I do not yet know how I shall vote. What I mean to say is that I do not think Dr. Tugwell can properly do any more than Congress authorized him to do, and the difficulty we are up against is that Dr. Tugwell is doing probably better than we had hoped the things Congress has asked him to do. I think the fault is with Congress, and not with Dr. Tugwell. If, on the other hand, Dr. Tugwell has exceeded his authority, or done something which Congress has not told him to do, then that would be properly open to criticism.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield. I want to make just one observation. Let me say to the Senator from Maryland that the charge was made that Dr. Tugwell had exceeded his authority. The statement has been made, I think on the floor of the Senate by some Senator, I do not recall by whom, that he exceeded his authority.

It was brought out at the hearing that, as a matter of fact, what Dr. Tugwell had done, or what the Department had done, rather, under some of the acts of Congress, had been questioned in the courts, and I think the record shows that in five instances out of six the courts upheld the Department, and held that what they were doing was perfectly proper. In other words, five courts held one way as against one court.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I must decline to be interrupted further until I conclude.

I wish to disabuse the mind of the Senator from Maryland of the idea that I am voting against the confirmation of Dr. Tugwell because of what he has done in administering the authority given him by Congress. That would be a foolish position for any Senator to take, to say that we are voting against the confirmation of a man because he has done what Congress authorized him to do. To the contrary, I voted for the Agricultural Adjustment Act. I believed in the original principles of that act. I believed that there must be a temporary reduction of crop production in this country, brought about by a voluntary agreement with the farmers of the country. My opposition to Dr. Tugwell has nothing whatever to do with those things he was lawfully required to do as Assistant Secretary of Agriculture.

I contend here, as I have already said, that he has exceeded his authority, and that he is asking us to ratify illegal acts.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President-Mr. BYRD. I refuse to yield further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I contend that he has committed illegal acts which he is asking the Congress of the United States to ratify. That is my opinion. Other Senators may have other opinions which I respect, and I assume that they respect the opinion I have. But, Mr. President, I have tried to make it clear that my opposition to Dr. Tugwell is even deeper than that. My opposition to him is because I believe that an important official of this Government should have the attributes of complete courage, of frankness, and of complete honesty in dealing with the committees of Congress and with the Congress and with the people of the United States.

When Dr. Tugwell says that he did not believe in those things which he wrote in 1931 I say on my responsibility as a Senator that I think he did believe in them, and I have attempted to show here on the floor of the Senate by subsequent utterances and speeches which he has made, that he has referred back time and time again to those very things in his speech of 1931 which he repudiated.

It is inconceivable to me that a man can make a speech in which he says certain affirmative things and then say, "I did not mean what I said." I talked today to a man who heard him speak, and he said he believed that Dr. Tugwell was advocating these particular policies of government | omy which has been announced and which has been argued which he enunciated in this address.

Mr. President, I am not voting against Dr. Tugwell because I believe him to be a dangerous leader of radical ideas in this country. Any man who has repudiated his ideas can never be a dangerous leader of any radical movement or any other movement in this land. I am voting against him-to emphasize it again-because I do not think he has that zealous regard for not exceeding the authority of the Department of Agriculture which I fully explained in my remarks here today. I am voting against him also because I do not think that he possesses that candor, that frankness which I think should be an attribute of any man who holds important office in this land.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I desire to read just one part of this famous speech of 1931. In it he says, speaking of this planned economy—this planned economy which he says means the abolition of business and the destruction of the Constitution of the United States:

We shall not, we never do, proceed to the changes here suggested all at once. Little by little, however, we may be driven the whole length of this road; once the first step is taken, which we seem about to take, that road will begin to suggest itself as the way to a civilized industry. For it will become more and more clear, as thinking and discussion centers on industrial and economic rather than business problems, that not very much is to be gained until the last step has been taken.

The last step being the abolition of business and the control of all property in the hands of the Government.

What seems to be indicated now is years of gradual modification, accompanied by agonies and recriminations, without much visible gain; then, suddenly, as it was with the serialization of machines, the last link will almost imperceptibly find its place and suddenly we shall discover that we have a new world, as, some years ago, we suddenly discovered that we had unconsciously created a new

Mr. President, if Dr. Tugwell had admitted to the Committee on Agriculture that he held these views in 1931 I would not have voted against him for that reason. If he had admitted to the Committee on Agriculture that he believed in the soviet system of Russia, provided he would bring about the changes of our Government in a constitutional way, I would not vote against him for that reason. because I think that in this land of freedom every man should have the right to his own views and opinions. One of the reasons why I am voting against him is because he denied what he said then, because he has not the sincerity that I think a man should have who holds a high public office.

Mr. President, this new world of abolition of all business and destruction of the Constitution that Dr. Tugwell has spoken about is not coming in this American Republic. It is not coming so long as Franklin D. Roosevelt is President of this country. It is not coming so long as the Democratic Party is in control of the affairs of this Nation. It is not coming so long as the American people believe in justice and believe in freedom and still have regard for those fundamental principles of government bequeathed to us as a precious heritage through the blood and labors of those great men who gave us the form of government we have.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire to state at the outset that, so far as I am concerned, I have no criticism to make of any Senator who opposes a Presidential nomination by reason of the fact that he is sincerely and honestly against the man who is nominated. I fully agree with the statement made by some of those who have talked with reference to Dr. Tugwell that it is the duty of a Senator to exercise his own judgment upon a confirmation; to vote for or against the man who is nominated upon his own judgment. That is what I intend to do.

It is my intention to vote for Dr. Tugwell because I am for him. I am for the views he has expressed, as I understand those views to be written in his books. I am for him because I believe that here is one man who is not content with looking backward, who for every thought he has in his mind is not bound down by slavish precedents. I am for him because he dared to express his unbelief in some of the theories which have been announced by theorists of the past, and who does not accept a principle of political econ-and which has been accepted in the past merely because it has been accepted in the past.

I agree fully with the statement made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] as to the manifestation of the remarkable intellect of Dr. Tugwell. It has been shown in every public utterance since he first delivered the address to which reference was made by the Senator from North Carolina.

It is a genuine pleasure to me to find that here is one man with brains who has gone forth from the little village in which he was born and with those brains has dared to follow his own course, when anyone who has come in contact with the so-called "financial barons" of this country, as many of us have in committees in the last year, would know that if Dr. Tugwell had concluded to use his brain in the business world instead of to utilize his brains to advance the progress of the peoples of the world, he would have been an outstanding figure in the business firmament of this Nation.

It has become customary, or it had become customary up to a few years ago, to point to the successful men as those who had accumulated the most money, and had manipulated the most stocks, and had served special privilege to such an extent that they could serve on anywhere from 10 to 100 directorships of business enterprises. When such a gentleman returned to the little village from which he went he was heralded as a great, outstanding figure.

Here is a man who has used his brain for the public good. I admit that it has not been customary to have brains to any great extent in the Government. I can fully understand the loud clamor of criticism which came from the small remnants of that discarded group which brought this country to the abyss in which it found itself in 1929, as they charged from time to time that the Government had committed the unpardonable offense of securing men with brains to serve in its departments. It is a new precedent. It is a strange and unusual thing. Therefore I can understand how the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Robinson], and various others, have from time to time charged the present administration with bringing brains into the United States Government's

Mr. President, I desire to approach this matter from an entirely different angle than that from which it has been approached up to this time. I can readily dismiss the statement that Dr. Tugwell should not be confirmed because he does not have the necessary experience. He has shown that he has had sufficient experience. If it is required that a man shall have raised a prize calf, or had mud on his boots. he is shown to have had that experience. He is shown to have had experience on a farm.

I am not particularly interested in the statement which is made by those who are opposing Dr. Tugwell today and who apparently were opposing Dr. Tugwell before he went before the committee, that the chief ground of attack is because of insincerity. Those who opposed Dr. Tugwell last week in this body oppose him yet, I think very naturally; I think it is a natural result of two different schools of economic thought in America. It will be noted, if one will go back over the record of votes in the Senate since President Roosevelt came into power, that there have been two distinct schools of thought. There have been some who adhere to the idea that we must not depart to the slightest extent-

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, does the Senator from Alabama refer to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; in part. Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Virginia has supported 90 percent of the recommendations of President Roosevelt.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I shall not go over a list of measures which have come up, and which constituted a departure, I admit, from our custom; but I recall very vividly when I had reached the conclusion that it was no longer possible for industry ever to absorb the unemployed who were walking the streets and highways of this Nation and presented a measure to relieve that situation, the same arguments and the same group were opposing that measure that are opposing Dr. Tugwell. I make no charge about that; I think it was a perfectly natural opposition. I make no attack on the sincerity of those who hold those views. There have always been men of various views, and there always will be, and there have always been some who have clung to the idea that whatever had been was right and whatever was proposed, if it was a change, must be wrong. I think there is very clearly set forth the line of demarcation which exists in the statement that was read from the opinion of the Supreme Court by Dr. Tugwell in the hearing. I will read a part of it because, in my judgment, it constitutes the real basis for difference. I take my position with those who believe in progress, with those who believe that it is not necessary that we cling to every dim and musty tradition of the past if experience has demonstrated that those traditions have brought us to disaster or to disorder.

Let us see what the Supreme Court said, and which, I believe, is the basis for the difference between the conflicting views with reference to Dr. Tugwell. This is no longer the question of an individual; it has risen far above that. It is a question of two conflicting schools of thought. Mr. Justice Story said in 1816:

The Constitution unavoidably deals in general language. not suit the purposes of the people, in framing this great charter of our liberties, to provide for minute specifications of its powers or to declare the means by which those powers should be carried into execution. It was foreseen that this would be perilous and difficult, if not an impracticable, task. The instrument was not difficult, if not an impracticable, task. The instrument was not intended to provide merely for the exigencies of a few years, but was to endure through a long lapse of ages, the events of which were locked up in the inscrutable purposes of Providence. It could not be foreseen what new changes and modifications of power might be indispensable to effectuate the general objects of the charter; and restrictions and specifications, which at the present might seem salutary might in the end prove the overthrow of the system itself.

In other words, the idea of a flexibility of constitutional law to meet new conditions as new conditions arise from day to day, from month to month, from year to year, and from century to century.

What were the objects they had in mind? There can be no better place to ascertain that fact than from the reasons assigned by the Declaration of Independence which was written by those who said that they would not any longer remain subjects of Great Britain. They said it was to secure life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; to guarantee those rights; and that if the Government failed so to organize its powers-that is the language, "failed so to organize its powers"- as to carry out the safety and the happiness of the people it gave the right on the part of those who failed to receive the safety and happiness to shake off the shackles of the despotic government. That was one of the reasons given for the original beginning of the life of this Nation.

Who, looking back to 1929, will dare, in this presence or any other presence, to assert that the Government had so organized its powers as to effectuate the safety and the security and happiness of the individual citizen? It had not done so. There have been some, like Dr. Tugwell, who, in published statements, in spoken words and in written books, have been calling attention to the fact that the Government was not effectuating that purpose.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator. Mr. BYRD. Does the Senator from Alabama agree with the speech which Dr. Tugwell made before the Economic Conference which we have been discussing?

Mr. BLACK. I shall be delighted to answer the question of the Senator. As I interpret the speech made by Dr. Tugwell, and as I interpreted it when I asked the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore] to place it in the RECORD, I agree with it 100 percent.

Mr. BYRD. Does the Senator favor the abolition of business and the destruction of the Constitution?

Mr. BLACK. No, and neither does Dr. Tugwell; and I deny that any man has a legitimate right to draw such a conclusion from the speech. I do not question the fact that the Senator has drawn that conclusion. I recall that Dr. Tugwell said to the Senator that he hoped he had explained what he had said so that the Senator from Virginia could understand him, and the Senator from Virginia said he could not understand him. Therefore I would not attempt further to explain it to the Senator. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one moment further?

Mr. BLACK. I shall be very glad to yield and let the Senator read to me some more of the inquiries he read to Dr. Tugwell at the inquisition.

Mr. BYRD. Here is a sentence about which I asked Dr. Tugwell a question, and I should like to ask the Senator to explain the sentence to me.

Mr. BLACK. I think, if the Senator is going to ask me to testify, that he ought to give me the benefit of what he had when he had the radio over which to talk to the country and a big audience with the wit and brilliance and beauty of the old discredited view there to applaud his remarks.

Mr. BYRD. I appreciate the Senator saying that I am discredited.

Mr. BLACK. I was not talking of that; I was talking about those with ectasy in their eyes as they came to that hearing with the idea that here was an opportunity to jab something into the new deal.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senator has left the impression that I am somewhat obtuse.

Mr. BLACK. No, sir; I did not intend to leave such an impression.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator said I could not understand.

Mr. BLACK. I said that Dr. Tugwell said so.

Mr. BYRD. Here is a sentence about which I asked Dr. Tugwell a question:

Chance has substituted itself for the anthropomorphic interpretation of history as a causal sequence.

I will ask the Senator if he understands that?

Mr. BLACK. I thoroughly understand it, but I would not attempt to explain it to the Senator from Virginia. [Laughter in the galleries.] That effort has already been made in

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The occupants of the galleries will maintain order.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I have listened with great interest to each word spoken, I think, by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Balley]. I do not intend to attempt to go into detail as to the references made by the Senator from North Carolina to the questions propounded to Dr. Tugwell; it would take too long and be too tedious. It is evident, however, that there was a decided difference in interpretation between gentlemen, Members of this body, for whose judgment I have high respect, both of them, in my opinion, being absolutely honest in the interpretation which they place upon the remarks. That being true, why should we go into details with reference to each statement made by Dr. Tugwell? If we are going to do that, why not take this book [exhibiting]; why not add this book [exhibiting] to it; why not take the other two books written by Dr. Tugwell and take out a statement here and there and then try him on each separate word? That is not the way to determine his beliefs or the objective of a philosophic conception.

I will, however, call attention to one statement. I desire to call attention to a speech made in Philadelphia by Dr. Tugwell as to which the plain statement is made here that Dr. Tugwell in that address advocated the complete abolition of all private ownership of land. I do not deny that some may have interpreted it in that way. How they could possibly do so is beyond my comprehension. I want to read what he said; I read the statement upon which that assertion

The Federal Government will, I believe, perform two functions with respect to our land in the future. It will directly hold and administer public forests, parks, game preserves, grazing ranges, recreation centers, and the like, all areas which cannot at the time be effectively operated by private ownership.

Is there anything so strange or new or novel or startling about that statement as to justify any such assertions as have been made with respect to it? Let me read further:

And it will control the private use of the areas held by individuals to whatever extent it is found necessary for maintaining continuous productivity. Not only is it necessary for us to conserve our natural resources for the welfare of posterity—

I admit there are some who do not believe that-it is also necessary to regulate the use of land resources for the welfare of the living generation.

I believe in that principle. I believe if we had begun sooner a system of conservation of our natural resources the country would have preserved for the use of the individual citizenship the great wealth which nature has bestowed upon us with such bounteous and generous hands.

Let us see as we go along what that means. In not a single statement does he limit his words to ownership. He mentions control. He said:

We have depended too long on the hope that private ownership and control would operate somehow for the benefit of society as a whole.

Is there anything strange or new or novel about that doctrine? Let someone go next door to the home of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd] and attempt to establish a soap factory, and it will not take the Senator long to go into the courts in order to abate a nuisance which interferes with his peace, comfort, and happiness. Is he, as the owner of that particular property, entitled to any more protection than the millions of American men and women in the Nation if he operates his business in such way as to interfere with their peace and their happiness?

Let anything of that kind happen and we would find a man going directly to the courts. Does he have the complete control of that land which he owns? If that were true, would there have been any zoning laws upheld? If a man had the complete and unrestricted right to the unrestricted control of the land to which he happens to have title in his name, does that mean that he may use that land in such way as to interfere with public happiness or to destroy the hope on the part of his Government to so organize its affairs that it will effectuate the happiness and safety of the people?

What Dr. Tugwell said was "ownership and control." If he had intended that he wanted to do away completely with private ownership of land—and there cannot be a word found in anything he ever wrote so far as I have been able to discover to indicate that he did so desire—I imagine that language would be presented here; but it is not. He denies it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I invite the Senator's attention to this sentence. The Senator said the language would be here. Let us see if it is not here.

It will control-

"It" refers to the Federal Government.

It will control the private use of the areas held by individuals to whatever extent is found necessary for maintaining continuous productivity.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BAILEY. I am not through. That is one sentence. In the same address he said:

The area of land in production would be sufficiently limited-

Mark those words "sufficiently limited" to so many acres, of course by the Government—so that it could be operated at its utmost efficiency without flooding markets and destroying exchangeability. Such a system would envisage a commercial agriculture made up of the most efficient farmers operating the best of our lands; with the remaining lands being used in other ways, and the remaining farmers devoting their time to other occupations.

That is the control about which I am talking.

Mr. BLACK. I am perfectly willing to have the Senator talk about that control.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator said if Mr. Tugwell used the language which gives this interpretation, the language should be here. Let me read finally and then I shall take my seat. In the same speech he said:

Private control has failed to use wisely its control of land. The post-war decade of low farm incomes, and the subsequent period of the industrial collapse, now makes us realize that the use which is made of the land is of immediate and vital interest to us all.

There are the three statements, each one of which repudiates private control, private use; each one of which states the policy of limitation; and one of which goes so far as to say that the Government proposes to divide the farmers of the country according to its judgment into efficient and inefficient, and that the inefficient will be driven from the land.

I should like to have the Senator subscribe to that and say those are his sentiments. He is endorsing everything Dr. Tugwell said. Let him endorse that.

Mr. BLACK. I am endorsing what Dr. Tugwell said, not what the Senator from North Carolina said.

Mr. BAILEY. I am asking the Senator from Alabama to endorse what I read from Dr. Tugwell's own statements.

Mr. BLACK. I am not endorsing the Senator's interpretation of what Dr. Tugwell said. Insofar as the statements which I have read and which he read are concerned, I endorse them. I am endorsing the idea that the Government as a government has undertaken to establish subsistence homesteads over the country. There is no statement made here that the Government is going to do away with the idea of private ownership of land. It is my judgment that not even by the wildest stretch of the imagination nor even the fancies of the most skillful logician, would anyone be entitled to reach such a conclusion, though the Senator from North Carolina does. I do not. That is where we disagree and where, in my judgment, most of those who will read Dr. Tugwell's speech with care, reading it all-I could take only a part of it and reach my conclusion, but reading it all and reading the system of philosophy expounded by Dr. Tugwell-will ascertain that he has never yet advocated that which Henry George advocated and which they accuse him of advocating, doing away with private ownership of land.

Dr. Tugwell does call attention in this very speech to Henry George, but he does not approve the conclusion reached by Henry George. I desire to say here and now that if that man, who contributed so much with the eloquence of his pen toward presenting to the people of the Nation the paradox of increasing poverty in the midst of increasing wealth, could be here subject to confirmation today, it is my judgment that the same division would occur, because it would be a division of those who believe on the one side in the conceptions of government, and those who believe on the other side.

I am going to show in a few moments, from what Dr. Tugwell has actually said, why in my judgment the Pennssylvania Manufacturers Association and the other associations of the country, which have waxed fat off the wealth which has been produced by people other than themselves, are opposed to Dr. Tugwell and to anyone who dares to believe as Dr. Tugwell believes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he refers to the Grundy organization?

Mr. BLACK. It is my understanding that is the Grundyized organization of Pennsylvania. There is nothing surprising in their opposition to Dr. Tugwell. Why should there be? In everything he has spoken, in every word he has uttered we find him striking sledge-hammer blows against inordinate profits, against excessive dividends, against watered stocks, against low wages, against long hours, against sweatshops, against working children in factories. There is nothing surprising that those who believe in the old doctrine of "Let well enough alone", supported mainly | by those who are not suffering from the system, should lead in this Nation a fight against every individual, either in high place or low place, who stands for the principle of economic justice.

This man Tugwell has brains. He has been charged with it. He has not devoted those brains to the service of corrupt privilege and corrupt business, and therefore he is dangerous. It is such men as Dr. Tugwell who are dangerous-dangerous to what? Dangerous to child labor, to excessive profits, to concentrated wealth in the hands of people who did not earn it, to special privilege. He has dared to stand out not only for these things, but he has actually written a book, which the Senator from Iowa called to the attention of the Senate a short time ago, standing as he naturally would stand on the side of the old conceptions of government-a book which may go into the schools and which stands for the idea of social security.

He has dared to raise his voice in favor of old-age pensions. He has dared to announce that where we have more people than we can absorb in our industrial system, the old man tottering on the brink of the grave shall, instead of being cast out into the poorhouse or to become an object of charity, be taken care of with an old-age pension. Treason! Treason! Let him be taken to the stake! Let the inquisition be turned upon him!

Not only that; Dr. Tugwell has dared to assert in this book that he does not believe people should work any longer hours than is necessary for the purpose of producing the wealth which they need. Treason again!

He has dared to assert in this book that he believes in unemployment insurance. Terrible treason! How much better it would be, his critics think, if we could continue to feed the people on charity, to undermine their morale, to weaken their strength of character, rather than to provide a scientific system of giving them unemployment insurance at a time when they face destitution and poverty. Why, this man is an enemy to the existing system. He has actually dared to assert in this book-which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] is afraid might be seen by a school boy or a school girl, some of whom perhaps even in the Senator's own State are undernourished and underfed, many of whom, according to the statement in this book. taken from Government statistics of a Republican administration, are living on less than half the annual income which is necessary to take them out of the borderline of the lowest and most abject destitution and poverty-this man has dared to assert in this book that those farmers' children ought to have more. He has dared to assert in this book that people who are sick ought to have medical treatment. Treason! High treason! Treason against the Constitution! And because, forsooth, in addition to that crime, he waited 3 days before writing a letter to a Senator. he has added another item of guilt, and for that he must

Those are the reasons. All we have to do is to read this book. I do not want to be misunderstood, however. There are two groups, in my judgment, who are opposed to Dr. Tugwell. I do not mean to say that all of those-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BLACK. I do. Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator, realizing that there are two groups, recognize that each of the groups is sincere?

Mr. BLACK. I had just started to state that. If the Senator will wait, I will complete the sentence, and then I do not think he will want to ask me the question.

There are two groups fighting Dr. Tugwell, in my judgment. One is the group represented by the type of the Pennsylvania Manufacturers Association.

Mr. BAILEY. May I ask the Senator whether he in-

Mr. BLACK. I desire to finish. Let me finish my statement. I do not yield until I finish my answer to the Senator's question.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well.

Mr. BLACK. There is another group who cannot brook change. They are fearful of it. They represent the type which has always believed that that which has been working fairly well will continue to work. They believe in what the Senator has called, in the controversy with the Senator from Nebraska, the "laissez faire doctrine." They believe now, as they believed in the past, that if we do not leave each individual to work out his own salvation individually. 100 percent free from any kind of Government protection, we are doing wrong, and that the man who would seek to change that system is not a friend of the great masses of the American people.

In my judgment, the members of this group are equally sincere with those who take the other viewpoint-that if a system as it has operated has proven that it brings in its wake hunger, destitution, misery, poverty, undernourishment, illness, suicide, mental undernourishment, destitution, and death, it calls for changes, bold changes; not revolutionary changes, but bold changes, and, in this Government, within the Constitution, which the Supreme Court has declared to be sufficiently flexible to meet the various developments of an economic society.

Those, in my judgment, are the groups represented in the opposition to Dr. Tugwell.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I now interrupt the Senator from Alabama?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BLACK. I shall be very glad to yield. Mr. BAILEY. Does it occur to the Senator that he has taken a great deal upon himself in undertaking to divide those who may differ from him into groups and to classify them?

Mr. BLACK. I did not anticipate there would be any objection. If the Senator objects-

Mr. BAILEY. No; I did not object. I just asked the Senator if that ever occurred to him.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator had not suggested it before. Since he has suggested it, I will state that I see nothing whatever improper in it. I think it is perfectly right, because I think there are different groups opposing Dr. Tugwell, opposing the general idea which Dr. Tugwell represents.

Mr. BAILEY. And the Senator thinks he is competent to classify this opposition into groups to suit himself and to characterize it?

Mr. BLACK. I may not be as competent as the Senator from North Carolina. I will admit that I am not.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from North Carolina, at any rate, has not undertaken it.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator from North Carolina, at any rate, undertook to characterize Dr. Tugwell in a way which in my plain and honest judgment was not justified by the facts; but I have no criticism to make of the Senator, because I think he believes it was justified.

Mr. BAILEY. Is there any analogy whatever between the classification of Dr. Tugwell and undertaking to state his views and the present effort to place the opposition to Dr. Tugwell in groups according to the Senator's conception and state their characteristics?

Mr. BLACK. If the Senator objects to that, and thinks that he is placed in either group, I am perfectly willing to admit that he belongs to neither; but I desire to go on now with my argument, because there has been too much diversion in this matter from the real point at issue.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—
Mr. BLACK. The point at issue, as I see it, is this, insofar as Dr. Tugwell is concerned:

Dr. Tugwell as an individual is not of great importance in this discussion. Dr. Tugwell, in my judgment, is a symbol. He is a symbol representing a specific idea of thought and political philosophy. He is a symbol which many believe to represent a philosophy of government which is de-

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DIETERICH. Does the Senator mean that a vote on this nomination would indicate whether or not a Senator embraced all the ideas of Dr. Tugwell or is he simply using him for illustration?

Mr. BLACK. No; I do not embrace all his ideas.

Mr. DIETERICH. The Senator stated the matter about that strongly, however.

Mr. BLACK. I do not embrace all his ideas. There are some things he has written in his books that I do not

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, does the Senator think that a vote for Dr. Tugwell necessarily endorses any of his views?

Mr. ELACK. No; I do not. I state that so far as I am concerned I am in perfect harmony with the general objective which I gather Dr. Tugwell has in mind from the books of his that I have read; but that is not necessarily an endorsement, and I could vote for him if that were not the case. I think Dr. Tugwell represents an inquiring mind. We need more of them. I think this Government would be in far better condition if we had more in the various departments.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President-

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that the opposition to Dr. Tugwell before the committee was based almost entirely upon statements which he made in 1931, with reference not only to what he said his views were but the interpretation of those views as expressed by those who were cross-examining him.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield. Mr. LONG. I think where the Senator from Montana, and I might almost include the Senator from Nebraska and the Doctor himself, fail to make their case stronger, is in not saying that he is a genuine, 100-percent liberal, and dissatisfled with the way things are getting along, and not equivocating or apologizing for it. Come right down and hit it on the head

Mr. WHEELER. I think he made it pretty plain that he was dissatisfied with things as they existed in 1931.

Mr. LONG. Why 1931? What is the difference between 1931 and 1934?

Mr. WHEELER. In my judgment there is considerable difference between 1931 and 1934. The Senator may disagree with that, but I think we have made considerable progress since 1931; but Dr. Tugwell was speaking in his book of the conditions that existed in 1931. I do not think there is a Member on the floor of the Senate at the present time but who, looking back to 1931, must come to the conclusion that we were at that time right on the brink of destruction, not only of the economic system but there was a question in the minds of a great many people as to whether or not this Government of ours could stand up under the existing conditions.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I wonder whether the Senator will permit me to read, right at this point, because it is in line with what the Senator is saying, an extract from one whom I believe to be the greatest constitutional lawyer since John Marshall's time, Mr. Justice Holmes, in answer to the suggestion that those who preach some change in our economic system are necessarily revolutionists, are for the abolition of government, and are not faithful to the Constitution, or our constitutional form of government. He said, in the case of Lochner v. New York (198 U.S. 45):

But a constitution is not intended to embody a particular ecobut a constitution is not intended to embody a particular economic theory, whether of paternalism and the organic relation of the citizen to the State or of laissez faire. It is made for people of fundamentally differing views, and the accident of our finding certain opinions natural and familiar or novel and even shocking ought not to conclude our judgment upon the question whether the statutes embodying them conflict with the Constitution of the Inited States United States.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I regret to trouble the Senator. I will be content to say that I deny the right of the Senator from Alabama to classify me in any way whatsoever. That is beyond his capacity, and if it were within his capacity it would be beyond his right. I belong to neither of the groups in question, and I wish that to go into the RECORD, and I will ask the Senator whether he undertakes to put me in any group.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to admit that the Senator stands alone, with no group on earth; has in the past, and will hereafter; that he is an individualist, who is never with any group.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator thinks that is a candid and straightforward answer to the question I asked him, which was whether he undertook to maintain the right to put me in a group and if he were now trying to do so.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, it is my judgment that attempting to bring out the maintenance of a right here is as far beside the question with reference to Dr. Tugwell and his confirmation as were many of the questions which were asked before the committee.

Mr. BAILEY. I agree to that. Mr. BLACK. I am maintaining here that, in my judgment, Dr. Tugwell should be confirmed. I believe that he should be. I do not subscribe to the idea that anything he has said or done should prevent his confirmation.

The question was asked as to whether or not Dr. Tugwell believed in certain things. A great deal has been said about Dr. Tugwell's discussion of the N.R.A. In order to show that Dr. Tugwell is no conformist with reference to everything that is done or proposed I desire to read a paragraph from his book published in 1934. This is another one of the statements made by Dr. Tugwell with which I agree, and my vote will so show.

He said:

The partial suspension of the antitrust laws is not unlikely to promote the further concentration of the control of wealth. It remains to be seen whether governmental supervision of the type provided for in the N.I.R.A. will make for more equitable sharing of the gains which may result from intensifying cooperation among business men.

I call attention to that paragraph for this reason: It is exactly in line with the complete philosophy as expressed by Dr. Tugwell from the beginning to the end of each one of his books-that what he desires is to bring about those improvements in the operation of our governmental system which will reduce the inordinate and excessive profits of monopoly and greed and will increase the part of the national income that goes to the farmers and to the laborers in the mines and the factories all over this Nation.

Mr. President, I state that in my judgment the widespread hue and cry which has been heard in this country for the past 3 or 4 months against the so-called "brain trust" is because Dr. Tugwell is a symbol of a line of honest, constructive, inquiring thought which will tend to prevent that which has been happening in the past, namely, the concentration of the wealth produced by all of the people of this Nation, and the prevention of the distribution of that wealth into the hands of those who necessarily must have it in order to maintain the purchasing power of our economic system. Dr. Tugwell's whole life, his writings, his books, have been along that line.

I do not expect that those who entertain the old idea that we must continue as we were would approve of Dr. Tugwell's ideas. I recall very vividly when the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] rose on the floor and took up this book of Dr. Tugwell's in order to charge him with all the heinous crimes which were being flouted around in the public press. If it were not Dr. Tugwell they were after, it would be someone else entertaining exactly the same ideas. I refer now to those who have been insistently and persistently and publicly attacking the so-called "brain trust." That group does not want a man with brains in the Government service if he has a place of responsibility | where he can aid in directing affairs in such a way as to benefit the average man.

This is not the first time that people have clung to outworn ideals. They have followed that course in the history of every country in every age of the earth.

There was a time when it was considered heathenish in a certain country to take a bath. In that very country it was a crime for a man to have a bath tub in his house. It was a crime in the same country to attempt to cure the dreadful disease of smallpox, and those who dared, with inquiring minds, to find out whether or not smallpox could be cured, were treated as public enemies.

Mr. President, in that same country there was a terrible odor in the streets of the city of Madrid, and an effort was made to bring about a sentiment that would result in the removal of the odor. Those who believed in adhering to the old traditions and ideals said, "Our ancestors lived through this odor. It would be sacrilegious to them to attempt to change it." Then they submitted the question to the medical profession of the city of Madrid, and they very promptly returned a report that there was no use trying to improve the odor, that their ancestors had lived satisfactorily through it; and, besides, it showed that the air was heavy, and if the air was heavy to carry, perhaps there would not be so much of it carried to injure the people if it had the odor in it.

Mr. President, there was a time in this country when the same type of mind which has been attacking the so-called "brain trust" said that it was contrary to the Christian religion to hold a meeting in a church with the idea of carrying to the people the thought that trains could run at the tremendous rate of 12 miles an hour. Nothing was said about it in the Bible, they contended, and if it had ever been intended that man should travel at the tremendous rate of 12 miles an hour, it would have been mentioned in the Holy Book. So they denied people the use of the church to spread that idea.

The same type of mind that has been attacking the socalled "brain trust", using Tugwell simply as a symbol, and beating their breasts about patriotism, have patriotism for privilege. They do not want a single movement made that would take away the ill-gotten gains from a manipulator or manager.

Therefore, they talk to us about the old economic concept of the niggardliness of nature; that we are trying to defy economic law because an economist a long time ago said the whole thing was built up on the idea of the niggardliness of nature-in a country where we have indicted the producers for producing so much, and people have been left hungry and cold and without shelter.

Mr. President, as I view this matter, it is simply a part of the age-old problem of progress and reaction. A system has been permitted in this country which was lauded to the skies by those who were in control of the machinery of government, which was starving the people slowly to death. And now there are a few men with ideas, such as Tugwell and others, who dare to point out that something must be done if we want to preserve the system of government under which we live. I believe that the men who desire to correct these abuses are the real, genuine friends of our governmental system.

I do not find a single word in any of his books which to me indicates that he desires to do away with the American system of government. I do find that he desires to make it useful to all the people, instead of concentrating its benefits into the hands of a small minority of people. I do find in his books that he takes the position that so long as we have plenty, so long as we produce enough to feed the people of this Nation, this Government is failing in its highest function of government if it fails to make such corrections of existing abuses as will bring a better degree of happiness, security, comfort, and life to the millions of people who have been undernourished under the old system championed by those who have been so bitter in their attacks upon the so-called "brain trust."

I do find that this man has looked into the faces of the people and has seen in them the gaunt look of fear. He has witnessed the dread specter of insecurity of life following them from the cradle to the grave. I do find that he has seen, and that in a country teeming with all the bounties of nature, men and women compelled to walk through life knowing that under the present system the chances were nine out of ten that it would be impossible for them to accumulate enough to take care of themselves in the declining years of their life. I see that. And when I see that, I also see that a man has been selected to perform a public service, who stands for the millions and millions of men, women, and children in this country in the factory, on the farm, in the mines, wherever men and women toil, and who desires, and dares to express the desire, that the system of Government shall be operated so that not only a few may have the luxuries of life, but that the great wealth produced by labor combined with the bounty of nature shall be paid as a reward to those who produce it, that the gaunt specter of insecurity shall be taken from them.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Pope in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BLACK. I yield. Mr. LONG. I do not rise to disagree with the Senator. I agree with everything he says. That is why I asked the question a minute ago about the Senator from Montana. I agree with everything the Senator has said, and if Mr. Tugwell's inclination is toward that direction the more glory to him. But the point I have been trying to make is that we have more wealth concentrated now than we had in 1931. We have more income in the hands of the big men, proportionately speaking, according to Mr. Sterns' statistics, than we had in 1931. I was hoping that instead of apologizing on the ground that the whole thing was over

Mr. BLACK. He did not say that. He distinctly said the whole thing was not over. He distinctly declined to repudiate his speech. I have not previously said anything about that. But read the evidence and it will be found what he said. Time after time he said "No; I do not repudiate a single word." He did not repudiate it.

Mr. BAILEY. May I interrupt for the sake of having the RECORD correct?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. He did say that he did not repudiate the speech, but at the same time he stated the speech did not state his views in any respect whatever, but was merely the observations of the reporter. That was a repudiation so far as those were concerned who thought the speech expressed his views. He simply stopped on one side of it and said, "Why, that is not what I meant at all. I was talking about what other people were saying."

Mr. BLACK. Time after time the Senator asked him the question, "Is this your belief?", and he said "Yes." He stated time after time that a part of what the Senator read to him was his belief.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator will not deny that he began, in answer to the question by Senator Byrn, by saying that the speech did not express his views at all; and that he did admit, in response to my examination, that notwithstanding that denial it did express his views. That was the contention I made yesterday.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I stated in the beginning that I declined to go into the details of the various questions which were asked, except to say that I believe a fair reading of the record will show that Dr. Tugwell did not repudiate the views I have stated. On the contrary, the record is filled with statements which bear out that what he said in his books represented his viewpoint. He called attention several times to those books and said that they represented his viewpoint. In response to a question he stated that there were some parts of the speech which were academic discussion. There is nothing wrong with its being an acaevery man's life. It is exactly the same as being called upon to discuss one side of a controversial issue in a debating society. Does that always mean that every argument a man puts forth represents his view? Dr. Tugwell was making a speech at a meeting of an economic society. So far as I am concerned. I do not intend to be led into any vain discussion of whether he said he believed in this sentence and he did not believe in the other sentence.

It is enough for me to know that what he stated, that what he had in this book, represented his views-the very book that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] has condemned him for because he said it would go into the public schools. I find on each page of it the reason why the Manufacturers' Association of Pennsylvania, the Grundyized association of that State, ought to fight Dr. Tugwell, as it is doing in the propaganda which the Senator from Indiana of the accuracy of the RECORD?

Mr. BAILEY. May I interrupt the Senator for the sake of the accuracy of the RECORD?

Mr. BLACK. I shall be glad to have the Senator insert anything he desires in the RECORD.

Mr. BAILEY. This is precisely responsive to the statement that the Senator made that Dr. Tugwell did not repudiate his speech in the sense of saying he did not mean it, that it was not his language. Let us read the record:

Senator Byrn. * * Dr. Tugwell, I will frame my question so as to suit the Senator from Nebraska, I hope. It is this: In my judgment no man can read your speech that you made to this economic society without believing that you believe in the things that you then said; and I ask you now: Do you believe in the policies of government as you outlined them and enunciated them in that address?

Mr. Tugwell. I would like to make it perfectly clear to Senator Byrd, if I can, that I did not enunciate any principles of government in that speech in which I believed. I was trying to analyze the situation as I saw it.

There is the point. The Senator from Alabama now is endorsing the speech and adopting its principles, and with that I have no quarrel, and I respect him for his candor and his courage. But that is precisely what Dr. Tugwell did not do.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, there has been a great deal of discussion of that. I will simply call attention and say that if Senators will look on pages 146 and 147 of the record they will find several of the numerous instances in which Dr. Tugwell said that that did represent his views. It is true that he did state that the part with reference to the Russian plan, the theory they had, did not represent his view, and there is nothing in it which indicates to my mind that it did.

I have Dr. Tugwell's book before me. Let us see whose friend he is. Let us refer to a few of the subjects in the book. This book was published in 1934. We find in it arguments on the bad condition of physical life brought about by unwholesome food. We find the figures from Government statistics of those who are undernourished on the farm. We find what a low income they are receiving in comparison with that to which they are entitled as a matter of right. We find his discussion of the terrible effects of inadequate clothing. We find his discussion of the terrible effects of inadequate housing. We find his discussion of the terrible effects of unwholesome food on men, women, and children. We find his discussion of the terrible effect of unsanitary conditions. We find his discussion on page 56 of the terrible effect of inadequate medical treatment. We find on pages 57 and 58 his discussion of the terrible effect of overwork on women of the farm. We find his discussion of the terrible effect of the poverty that exists.

It is all right, Mr. President, for those who have not felt and do not feel the sting of poverty and who do not endure the pangs of hunger and who have had a good shelter over their heads to complain about a man who dares to raise his voice for those who suffer from hunger and want. Here is a man whom the Senator from Iowa has condemned and proclaims as a public enemy, because he has written a book setting out the terrible effects of poverty brought about unsuited for governmental position.

demic discussion. Such things happen at various times in | by an unbalanced economic situation in America. What did he do further?

> Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I suppose that the opponents of Dr. Tugwell and some of the economic theories which he advocates might also include many of the State legislatures and the Governors of States that have in the past enacted laws particularly to shorten the hours of labor of women who work in factories and to prohibit their working at night at all?

Mr. BLACK. Of course, those legislatures and Governors ought to be condemned, too.

Mr. WAGNER. And those who have fought to prevent child labor I should say ought also equally to be condemned?

Mr. BLACK. Oh, yes; if Dr. Tugwell is to be condemned by reason for standing for old-age pensions, it is necessary to condemn the voters of the several States who voted last year to inaugurate such a system.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that the State of Iowa, from which comes the distinguished senior Senator [Mr. Dickinson] who complains about Dr. Tugwell, is suffering at the present time probably as much as any State in the Union by reason of the very economic ideas which Dr. Tugwell condemns.

Mr. BLACK. Yes. Here is another thing that the senior Senator from Iowa does not want to get to the school children of Iowa-the regulation of hours, and so forth, found on page 214:

We have already referred to monotonous or unpleasant working conditions in city occupations that make necessary some limitation of the hours required. Short hours are needed in factories where noise, motion, and monotonous effort abound, and especially those with poorly lighted and poorly ventilated rooms.

That is a terrible thing to tell the children of the State of Iowa; it ought never to be known that here is a man who dares to favor short hours in factories in order to relieve the monotony of factory life.

The "effect of depressions on hours of work": he tells about that. That is a terrible thing to get to the school

On page 216 he tells of the evil of child labor. That is a terrible thing to send out to the school children of the State of Iowa. Why, here is a man who dares to express views to the people of the State of the Senator from Iowa in opposition to child labor in factories and to state that he is in favor of short hours for people who toil from morning until night as they eke out in the factories of this Nation a bare existence under this old, discredited system.

Here is another statement that it is terrible to get to the school children:

The welfare of the worker is the most important index of the success of the productive process.

That is an awful charge to make. Here is a man who puts the happiness of the worker first. Is that treason? He puts the happiness of the worker upon the same divine basis as heretofore has been put the happiness of those who had profits, more profits, more profits, and more profits. He dares to assert that human rights are entitled to consideration the same as property rights. A terrible man! An awful doctrine to send to the children of the State of Iowa.

Here is an argument against fraudulent promotion schemes. A terrible thing that! The State of Iowa evidently has never had any fraud committed against its citizens; evidently nobody ever sold them any bad stock out in the State of the senior Senator from Iowa; and he does not want them to find out that there is a man who dares to assert that such things ought to be stopped, and who even dares to say that the manipulation of the stock exchange must be curbed. A terrible crime that! He is wholly

He says we need relief measures immediately. He declares in this book, and declared before the committee, that the complaint which he was making back in 1931 was with reference to relief measures. On that occasion he immediately followed Mr. Harriman with a speech. By the way, I also have Mr. Harriman's speech. It seems that the president of the National Chamber of Commerce actually—think of it; holding that exalted position, high above those who act as representatives of the working people-dared to say something with reference to planning-I mention it with a whisper-just before Dr. Tugwell spoke; and then Dr. Tugwell came along and said that some relief measures are necessary; and he said in the hearings before the committee that what he saw back there was millions of people starving and the Government doing nothing for their relief. Another terrible crime.

Here is a chapter which ought to delight the heart of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long]. It is on pages 402 and 403, and the title of it is, "What Governments Do to Distribute Incomes Wisely." He actually dares to intimate here—he treads on such sacred ground as to indicate that some of the people have entirely too much, while others have entirely too little. That is another thing that it would never do to have get to the school children of the State of Iowa.

Mr. LONG rose.

Mr. BLACK. Perhaps the Senator from Louisiana would be willing to have it go to the school children of Louisiana?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I just want to say, "amen." [Laughter.]

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. MURPHY. In reference to the State of Iowa-

Mr. BLACK. I was not referring to the junior Senator from Iowa; I was referring to the speech made recently by the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] with reference to Dr. Tugwell.

Mr. MURPHY. I understood the Senator to have made that reference. I assure the Senator that there are other outlets than the senior Senator from Iowa for the school children of Iowa. They have the benefit of all the views that the children of any other State have, and the people of Iowa have had opportunity for a free decision on the merits of this controversy as to the confirmation of Dr. Tugwell.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is absolutely right. The fact that they voted as they did in 1932 shows that they were not satisfied with the old conditions which they would not restore. They did not express their approval of the system that was undernourishing the children of the State of Iowa and the children of other sections of the country.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield further to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. MURPHY. I will state further that at a primary election held a week ago Monday in Iowa the issue was clearly presented between a progressive candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor and a so-called "conservative" or "reactionary" candidate, as alleged by the progressive candidate. The progressive candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor and a so-called "conhe advocated, and having done that, he said, "Now, I will tell you some of the things I am against—I am against the Mellon-Hoover-Mills control of the Republican Party."

Mr. BLACK. Did he mention the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. MURPHY. He mentioned the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BLACK. Does the Senator mean the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson]?

Mr. MURPHY. I do.

Mr. BLACK. He did that in the Republican primary?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What! Does the junior Senator from Iowa mean to say that the Republican nominee for Governor this year repudiated the Republican Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] and said that he was against him and hoped to accomplish his defeat?

Mr. MURPHY. He condemned the senior Senator from Iowa as expressing the school of thought of Mellon-Hoover-Mills.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Perhaps the Senator from Iowa will not be so bitter in his condemnation of Mr. Tugwell. [Laughter.]

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. If the Senator from Alabama will quit before 3 o'clock, I hope to be able to express myself on this subject.

Mr. BLACK. We want to give the Senator that privilege; it ought never to be missed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The more he expresses himself the more the Republican nominee for Governor of Iowa will condemn him. [Laughter.]

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BLACK. I yield to the junior Senator from Iowa.

Mr. MURPHY. The issue so presented between those candidates was decided by the Republican electorate, which nominated the progressive candidate for Governor for the Republican Party. I think the progressive candidate so nominated by the Republican Party in Iowa would unhesitatingly endorse Dr. Tugwell.

Mr. BLACK. Now I read the last lines of Dr. Tugwell's

In place of adhering to blind traditionalism we should develop an open-minded experimental attitude toward social and economic institutions and problems.

That is the crime he has committed, if it is a crime. He has dared to say that he is willing to shake off musty and outworn dogmas, coming from the minds of political theorists of the past, and to look boldly into the future. He has dared to do that on behalf of the millions of undernourished boys and girls of this Nation and the underprivileged men and women of this Nation, under a system of letting everything go exactly as it was, which, never daring to move forward into the visions of the future, was starving to death mentally, spiritually, and physically the people of this Nation.

In 1932 the people spoke. They declared themselves in favor of the new and bold political philosophy announced by this man. I have read his evidence. I see no repudiation there. If I could see repudiation there, I am frank to state that I would lose my sympathy for the cause which he has so boldly advocated, but I do not. I see him there as he fences with these gentlemen who were against him when they went there, and he states time after time, "I repudiate nothing." It is true he said that he did not intend to approve planning as adopted by the Russian Government, but he did not deny that he wanted this Government to look forward to the future and chart a way to relieve destitution and to ameliorate the hard conditions of the povertystricken people of this Nation. That man stands for that for which the present administration is fighting, and, as a result, he has been attacked in the press of this country as a part of the "brain trust."

We cannot be deluded and we cannot be deceived. We know while there are some against him because of other reasons; there are those who are against him by reason of the fact that they think he stands for the principles enunciated by the administration, the principle of taking care of those who most need care.

Mr. President, I am glad to have this privilege of stating that I am not for Dr. Tugwell simply because the President appointed him. I am for him because I believe he represents a school of political thought of which the country has long been sorely in need. I believe he stands for a school of political thought which will not deify money and property to the extent of adding to the destitution and human misery of the men, women, and children of the United States who produce the wealth which the people themselves are entitled to have. I believe Dr. Tugwell stands as the representative of the new American thought; that thought which places not property above anything and everything, but places first the happiness and safety and security of the people of America.

I am for him for another reason, because he stated he favored the message to us sent last week by the President of the United States; that great, new document wherein the President declares that in the next session of Congress he desires to present a program for social adjustment and for social assurance which will take away the gaunt specter of hunger and want from the hearts and consciences of those people who have long suffered from this dread condition.

Mr. President, with such thoughts uppermost in the minds of the people, with such principles advocated by those who have to do with making the policies of the Government, it is my belief that we are marching forward to a new era in which we shall not be compelled to indict the producers of foodstuffs and of clothing for producing too much, but where we may see that a proper distribution brings happiness and comfort and wealth to the people of the Nation.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I stand here favoring the confirmation of Dr. Tugwell.

ANNUAL CONSIDERATION OF PERMANENT APPROPRIATIONS

As in legislative session,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Sheppard in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9410) providing that permanent appropriations be subject to annual consideration and appropriation by Congress, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HAYDEN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. Hayden, Mr. Overton, and Mr. Steiwer conferees on the part of the Senate.

REXFORD G. TUGWELL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the nomination of Rexford G. Tugwell to be Under Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, in the light of the results of the primary election in Iowa I simply want to suggest that the customary margin of 3 Republican votes for every Democratic vote was cast. Regardless of the little differences there may be among the Republican candidates, I invite the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black] and the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. Murphy] to look at the election returns next November and see what consolation they can get out of them. We will go along together out there regardless of whatever differences may have arisen among Republicans over matters of policy. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black] has taken considerable time to discuss Dr. Tugwell's book and has referred to me on account of my reference to the book. But the Senator from Alabama very shrewdly omitted reference to chapter XXVIII of the book and of its contents from there to the summary wherein the author discussed economic planning in the Soviet Socialist Republic, and wherein he discusses the Soviet Union, then discusses seriously the cause of the socialistic platform, then talks about communism, then talks about social planning, then talks about the various remedies which he thinks, I presume, are applicable to the conditions which he has described.

Merely because I am opposing Dr. Tugwell does not mean that I am not as anxious as Dr. Tugwell himself about relieving the conditions described in the previous chapters of his book. It is a matter of difference in remedy, not a difference in complaint. It is a difference of whether or not the remedy suggested by Dr. Tugwell will bring about the cure of the conditions he has described. It is a question of whether or not the remedy is going to be helpful rather than hurtful.

I believe in being progressive enough for advancement, and, on the other hand, I believe in being conservative enough for safety. In other words, most of the social reforms which have been brought about by men of the Tugwell type have proven failures when it came to taking account of the real benefits which they have brought to society. That is the phase of the question which has interested me.

Most of the cures suggested here have been tried out in times gone by. They are not new at all. I go back to the time when the King of Sparta attempted to find a way by which government regulation would solve all the problems of society in Sparta. He substituted iron money for gold and silver. He gathered all the silver and gold into the public coffers and then said he was going to issue iron money which was so heavy that nobody could carry it around, and see if he could not do away with the ambition of man for money. The scheme did not work. He divided the lands in an effort to redistribute wealth. He established public tables at which all the people should be fed. Yet his experiments failed. It is only a question of difference in view of remedy. It is not a confirmation or approval of the condition. It is a question of what is the cure that is involved here.

Senators may weep big tears. So far as the people of Iowa are concerned, I will compare the people of Iowa and the strata of society there with the people of Alabama any time. We can take care of our own people in Iowa. We do not need the advice of Mr. Tugwell or anybody else as to what we shall teach in our schools or how we shall conduct our society or how we shall feed our farmers or how we shall care for the sick, nor any of those phases of life.

I believe in the States having those rights, and I am wondering where in the world the advocates of the old State rights of the South have gone. Someone ought to page them around here and see whether or not any of them exist any more. State rights were established long ago in our history. But let us go a little further and see where the remedy may be.

Diocletian in Rome, in 300 A.D., issued his decree boldly fixing the maximum price of all commodities in common use, systematically attempting to regulate trade. He redivided his provinces, classified his people, and the end was complete collapse of the social standards of his day.

It is the remedy I am discussing. It is not the condition. Let me suggest that representatives of the present administration are at all times saying we are going back to the conditions of the ideal year of 1926. What economic theory was in control of the Government at that time? It was exactly the same theory that was in control in 1929. It was the abuse of the system, the fact that the people did not confine themselves to a reasonable use of their privileges of the day that caused the collapse. When we talk about returning to the normal conditions of 1926, it is proposed to return to the very economic theories that are condemned by those who say they want to remedy the conditions existing in 1929.

I go a little further, and this is in line with the theory of Dr. Tugwell. In France in 1848, Louis Blanc, labor commissioner, assumed that the Government must guarantee the existence of the workman by means of labor. The Government engaged itself to guarantee labor to every citizen. National workshops were established by decree. The authority was placed in a central board of management.

Does not that make one think of Reedsville, W.Va.? Does not that make one think of the almost numberless bureaus and boards which are being set up here now? Does not that make one think of the fact that we are now saying the Government must assume responsibility for everything that everybody is doing?

The authority was vested in a central board of management. Centralized control? Every phase of the program is along that line, and all to what end? It was to the end that

In other words, it is a question not so much of conditions. When we admit certain conditions exist, then the next question is whether or not the remedy is sufficient, and it is the remedy which is being suggested that I am attacking.

Personally, I know nothing about Mr. Tugwell. I have met him once, socially. I think he is a highly educated man. I know nothing about his background. I believe he lived on a 40-acre farm in New York. I believe he raised one Holstein calf, and I think that calf took a premium at a State fair. But that is not material to me.

I care nothing about that phase of the matter. The thing that is material to me is the question of the economic policies into which we are gradually being directed by the management not only of Mr. Tugwell but of several other men in key positions in the Government service, who are having to do with the direction of the agricultural policies of this country, which to me are extremely offensive.

The man who can get up here and weep big tears on the floor of the Senate about the problems of the poor and the problems of the farmer is not always the farmer's best friend. It is the man who knows the conditions well enough to tell what is practical and what will be helpful, and tell what is impractical and what will be harmful, who is really the friend of the farmer. I desire to suggest that I think we are interested now in the trend that we are taking, and it is that trend which I wish to discuss with the Members of the Senate for a little while today.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield. Mr. MURPHY. Will the Senator say, in his judgment, whether or not the present Secretary of Agriculture answers the test imposed?

Mr. DICKINSON. I think the present Secretary of Agriculture is a theorist. I think he is impractical in his views. I think he is doing a number of things that will be adverse to the interests of the farmers of Iowa, and I think the farmers of Iowa will bear me out in that contention as time

I will say that this is the first time I have ever said a word in any way criticizing the efforts of the Secretary of Agriculture. The Senator from Iowa, who belongs to his organization, has asked me the question. I have given him my answer. It is my sincere belief. Mr. Wallace is honest; he is capable in many ways, but he is a theorist. He is looking over at the end of the rainbow, and he never sees what is in front of his feet. He is falling into pitfalls, not only with reference to the killing of 6,000,000 little pigs, but with reference to crop control and a lot of other policies that are being adopted by the present Department of Agriculture.

I do not concur in those views. I will say further that I voted for the Agricultural Adjustment Act-why? Not because of the allotment plan; in that I did not believe; not because of the inflation part of the bill, title III, but because of title II of the bill, which was for the purpose of refinancing farm loans. That is the only reason why I did vote for the bill.

Now I desire to take up for a few minutes some reasons why I believe that Dr. Tugwell is not sufficiently grounded in his various views with reference to economically sound remedies to occupy this position; and it is not to Dr. Tugwell alone that my criticism attaches. It is to the group of men who are in control of various affairs down in the Department of Agriculture.

Dr. Tugwell's characteristics are best shown by a little poem that he wrote in 1915. Rexford G. Tugwell is the author of this poem. He said:

We begin to see richness as poorness; we begin to dignify toil; I have dreamed my great dreams of their passing, I have gathered my tools and my charts; My plans are fashioned and practical; I shall roll up my sleeves—make America over!

That is a big program for a young man who was 24 years of age. Let me read it again:

within 3 months' time from the time the system was | We begin to see richness as poorness; we begin to dignify toil; initiated it had to be completely abandoned.

In other words, it is a question not so much of conditions. My plans are fashioned and practical;

I shall roll up my sleeves-make America over!

I have no objection to that young man having that ambi-

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, was that just after Mr. Hoover's administration, or about the time of Mr. Hoover's administration?

Mr. DICKINSON. This was in 1924, when the Republican candidate for President had the greatest majority that a candidate had had for many, many years, when Calvin Coolidge was reelected President of the United States; and I will say to the Senator that I deeply regret that we have not a Calvin Coolidge in the White House now.

Mr. McKELLAR. Evidently he was a prophet as well, because he saw just what was coming under the Hoover administration.

Mr. DICKINSON. Well, I am wondering, now. Let us look this over. Nineteen hundred and twenty-six is the great, ideal year that the Democratic administration is trying to adopt as a normal year. All of its charts, all of its programs, the entire effort to have price parity is to bring up prices to the average prices of 1926, 2 years after Mr. Tugwell made this prediction, and after a Republican was elected President of the United States.

I think Mr. Tugwell is a conscientious young man; and what I am saying is not any criticism of him individually. I believe he has the right to support the theories that he has supported. I think those who are associated with him have the same right. I am not criticizing them for that, but I do not agree with the theories; and I do not like to see men in key positions who have control over the interests that are of greatest influence in my State, subordinate to a man in whose economic balance I have not confidence.

Representative Fish made an investigation which reflects somewhat on the character of Mr. Tugwell, as I see it, and his former associates. I am not saying this in criticism. If they want to belong to these organizations, it is their privilege: but I am suggesting this by reason of the fact that my attack here is not on Mr. Tugwell as an individual, but on the trend of the economic theories of today. In this respect, which was made by a House committee authorized to investigate the matter, I find-

Mr. Roger N. Baldwin, its guiding spirit, makes no attempt to hide his friendship for the Communists and their principles. He was formerly a member of the I.W.W., and served a term in prison as a draft dodger during the war.

The first 12 have been actually associated with or are members of the American Civil Liberties Union.

The first man named is Mr. Tugwell.

I do not believe Mr. Tugwell believes in communism. I am only suggesting this by reason of the fact that he is associated with men with whose views I disagree, and with whose views I should like him much better if he would disagree.

I find in this list of names Mr. Jerome N. Frank. I find in this list of names Dr. Frederic C. Howe. I find in this list of names Clarence Darrow. I am simply saying that while those men have the right to belong to any organization they wish, I do not believe in the theories that are advocated by that group of men.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The plain implication of the Senator's statement is that he does not favor the confirmation of any man for a public office whose views the Senator does not approve.

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, no.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the point, then, in saying that the Senator does not agree with the views expressed by Mr. Tugwell? What is the point in saying that he does not agree with the views expressed by the gentlemen who belong to the organization he describes?

Mr. DICKINSON. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas ! that I do not believe in voting for a man who has a tendency toward views which, in my judgment, are leading us on a wrong economic course which is an implied socialism, if not actual socialism.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator has made it plain that he will not vote for the confirmation of any man whose economic views he does not approve.

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, no; that is not my statement at all. I said I will not vote for the confirmation of a man whose views I think are dangerous and in the wrong trend. I might disagree with a man, but I might not think his views were dangerous. In fact, I disagree with the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; but no more than the Senator from Arkansas disagrees with the Senator from

Iowa. [Laughter.]
Mr. DICKINSON. Absolutely, and it is mutual and harmonious; but I want to say to the Senator that I should consider the Senator from Arkansas a safe man along economic lines, because his views do not run on a trend that I think dangerous.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, that makes me a little suspicious of myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. DICKINSON. In order that we may understand who Mr. Howe is, I am going to quote the Senator from Utah [Mr. King], who just came into the Chamber, and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. Ashurst]. There was an investigation of Mr. Howe, who is listed here, and who is one of the assistant administrators of the A.A.A. If I remember correctly, he is drawing $9,000 a year. I find that he was investigated when he was Commissioner of Immigration of the port of New York. I find that the Senator from Utah [Mr. King] said-p. 2024, Congressional Record of June 27, 1919:

While I am upon that point, Mr. President, I want to state that in a recent meeting held in New York City under the auspices of the Russian Soviet, an official of the United States, Mr. Frederic C. Howe, the Commissioner of Immigration at the port of New York, presided as chairman. In my opinion, any person who would preside over a meeting of this character and sit with these people and listen to denunciations of our form of government and to the speeches there made without protest is not fit to hold a position under the United States.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. Ashurst] replied:

Mr. President, do I understand that Mr. Howe presided at such meeting? If that is true, does not the Senator from Utah intend to introduce an amendment here to provide that no money whatever shall be paid out of the Federal Treasury to Mr. Howe? If what the Senator says be true, it is the duty of every Senator here to vote for that amendment. Offer an amendment. Let us stop talking and do something. Offer an amendment that no money in the Federal Treasury shall be paid to that man if he did that.

Mr. King. He did preside over the meeting. Martens, a Bolshevik, and other radicals spoke. It was a meeting ostensibly to present the truth respecting Russia, but it was a meeting in the interest of radicalism, in the interest of the Russian Soviet, in the interest of class government, in the interest of those who are seeking the overthrow of organized government, including the Parametric of the United States.

seeking the overthrow of organized government, including the Republic of the United States.

Mr. Sherman (Illinois). I will ask the Senator from Utah if this same official is also not the author of a book which is known as "Socialistic Germany", which is a textbook for every violent red who does not want to go the limit of anarchy and bloodshed?

Mr. King. He is the author of five books to my knowledge, all of which I now have in my office and all of which I have examined.

Mr. Sherman (Illinois). I regard it as a seditious and dangerous book

Mr. King. Mr. Howe ought to be removed from office by the President of the United States or whoever has authority to remove

I have here the notice in the New York Times showing that Mr. Howe presided.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, what has Mr. Howe to do with this controversy?

Mr. DICKINSON. He is in the same group which is directing the course of the economic trends of the present administration, which affect every man, woman, and child in my State and in the State of the Senator from Arkansas

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I am utterly unable to understand why the Senator opposes the nomination of Mr. Tugwell on the ground that Mr. Howe's views are objectionable to him.

Mr. DICKINSON. On the ground that Mr. Tugwell, Mr. Howe, and Mr. Jerome Frank, and others are all in the same group, all doing the same thing and, in my judgment, directing the agricultural interests of this country in a course that is detrimental to the interests of agriculture.

Mr. President, if any more evidence with reference to Mr. Tugwell is desired, let me suggest this. There is what is known as "the people's lobby." Everybody around Washington, D.C., knows Ben Marsh. He is here, I think, occupying space for the purpose of keeping it from being a vacuum. [Laughter.] I know of no other good reason for his being here.

I find that there is a people's lobby here, and that they had a council. In March 1933 I find, among those who were on the council, the name of Rexford G. Tugwell. The president of the council is John Dewey. Mr. Dewey is entitled to his views, Mr. Marsh is entitled to his views, and the rest of these gentlemen are entitled to their views, but I do not agree with their views, and I want to say that among their proposals we find the following:

Public ownership of banking, coal, gas, oil, water power, transportation, and communications, paying owners only for their values created. A Government marketing corporation.

Mr. President, with reference to the qualifications of Mr. Tugwell, and the present tendencies, I now want to read a paragraph from Mr. Frank R. Kent, in his column in the Baltimore Sun of this morning, headed "The Great Game of Politics ":

Or, if additional evidence were needed of his conservatism, there or, it additional evidence were needed of his conservatism, there is the professor's name as an editorial staff member at the masthead of that great conservative journal of opinion, the New Republic. Certainly no one can think that a paper like the New Republic, with its unswerving devotion to the vested interests, or Senators like Mr. Wheeler, sponsor this session of the old and conservative Bryan 16-to-1 free silver bill, or Mr. Norris, with his reactionary tendency toward national ownership—no one can think that a periodical like this or Senators like these would claim Mr. as their own if he were not conservative in every fiber of his highly educated system. The idea is absurd.

I read another paragraph from the same column:

Seriously speaking, while superficially Professor Tugwell came off very well at his committee test the other day, it was only superficially. Actually, this impression was due to the ineptitude of his senatorial cross-examination and the lack of dignity and of his senatorial cross-examination and the lack of dignity and decorum of his senatorial questioners. Actually, he did nothing to increase respect for him among discriminating people. Instead of standing up for his quite well-known, openly and often expressed convictions, he tried to convey the idea that they were not his convictions at all; that he was only "reporting." Instead of sticking by his standards, he dropped them. Instead of flying his own colors, he ran up another flag. Instead of exhibiting the independence and firmness one expects from the truly deep thinker, the professor side-stepped with the agility of a matador, sought refuge behind the Roosevelt skirts, knowing very well the senatorial bulls would not pursue him there. Instead of being senatorial bulls would not pursue him there. Instead of being straightforward, he was smooth and shifty. Certainly, far more clever than the Senators, he seemed to be shrewd, resourceful, alert, with a keen eye for covering up, and all the sincerity of the well-known china egg.

As a matter of fact, I think there is a growing tendency in this country now, not only among farm people, but among others, with reference to the uncertainty and instability of the entire economic program. In support of that I should like to insert certain excerpts from the book from which the Senator from Alabama has just quoted, Our Economic Society and Its Problems, by Tugwell and Hill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXCERPTS FROM THE PRINCIPLE OF PLANNING AND THE INSTITUTION OF LAISSEZ FAIRE

By Rexford G. Tugwell

The disasters of recent years have caused us to ask again how the ancient paradox of business—conflict to produce order—can be resolved; the interest of the liberals among us in the institutions of the new Russia of the Soviets, spreading gradually among puzzled business men, has created wide popular interest in "planning" as a possible refuge from persistent insecurity; by many people it is now regarded as a kind of economic Geneva

It is my belief that practically all of this represents an unconsidered adherence to a slogan, or perhaps a withdrawal from the hard lessons of depression years, and that it remains unrelated to a vast background of revision and reorganization among our institutions which would condition its functioning. Most of those who say so easily that this is our way out do not, I am convinced, understand that fundamental changes of attitude, new disciplines, revised legal structures, unaccustomed limitations on activity, are all necessary if we are to plan. This amounts, in fact, to the abandonment, finally, of laissez faire. It amounts, practically, to the abolition of "business" (p. 76).

Those who talk most about this sort of change are not contemplating sacrifices; they are expecting gains. But it would certainly be one of the characteristics of any planned economy that the few who fare so well as things are now would be required to give up nearly all the exclusive perquisites they have come to consider theirs of right and that these should be in some sense socialized (p. 76).

We might have had some such form of organization as the German cartel system if we had not set out so determinedly 40 years and more ago to enforce competition (p. 77).

. . Profits, in the sense in which we use the term, belongs to a speculative age, one in which huge gambles are taken, and in which the rewards for success may be outstanding. When we speak of them as motives, we do not mean that the hope of which the rewards for success may be outstanding. When we speak of them as motives, we do not mean that the hope of making 4 percent induces us to undertake an operation; we mean that we hope for some fabulous storybook success. These vast gambling operations are closer to the spirit of American business even yet, with all the hard lessons we have had, than are the contrasting ideas which have to do with constructive restraint and social control (p. 80).

There is no doubt that the hope of great gains induces enterprise of a sort; and if these are disestablished, a certain kind of enterprise will disappear. The question is whether we cannot well afford to dispense with it. It seems credible that we can. Industries now mature can be seen to operate without it; and new ones might be created and might grow from sheer workmanlike proclivities and without the hope of speculative gains (p. 81).

The universal confidence in profits, still unshaken in the West-ern World, is quite likely to hinder measurably the advance of planning.

A central group of experts charged with the duty of planning the country's economic life, but existing as a suggestive or consultative body only, without power, has been advocated by numerous persons and organizations (p. 82).

The deadliest and most subtle enemy of speculative profit-making which could be devised would be an implemented scheme for planning production. For such a scheme would quiet conflict and inject into economic affairs an order and regularity which no large speculation could survive (p. 83).

Strange as it may seem—directly antithetical to the interests of business and unlikely to be allowed freedom of speech, to say nothing of action—it seems altogether likely that we shall set up, and soon, such a consultative body. When the Chamber of Commerce of the United States is brought to consent, realization cannot be far off. It seems to me quite possible to argue that, in spite of its innocuous nature, the day on which it comes into existence will be a dangerous one for business, just as the founding day of the League of Nations was a dangerous one for nationalism. There may be a long and lingering death, but it must be regarded as inevitable (p. 84).

* * Planning is a process of predicting and making it come true, not merely a matter of advising voluntary groups (p. 85).

It is necessary to realize quite finally that everything will be changed if the linking of industry can finally be brought to completion in a "plan." It was a reluctant and half-blind step which led one executive after another to complete the serialization of his machines. And even then he was sometimes astonished at the results. This new undertaking is vaster; it requires a new and complicated technology which is not yet wholly invented; and it follows not from one executive's decision, but from a thousand preliminary consents, abdications, and acceptances of responsibility (p. 88). bility (p. 88).

The setting up of even an emasculated and ineffective central coordinating body in Washington will form a focus about which recognition may gradually gather (p. 88).

For we have a century and more of development to undo. The institutions of laissez faire have become so much a part of the fabric of modern life that the untangling and removing of their tissues will be almost like dispensing with civilization itself. We where all sorts of compromises may be had and where peace and prosperity may be insured (p. 75).

It is my belief that practically all of this represents an unconsidered adherence to a slogan, or perhaps a withdrawal from the hard lessons of depression years, and that it remains unrelated to

The first series of changes will have to do with statutes, with constitutions, and with government. The intention of eighteenth-and nineteenth-century law was to install and protect the principle of conflict; this, if we begin to plan, we shall be changing once for all, and it will require the laying of rough, unholy hands on many a sacred precedent, doubtless calling on an enlarged and nationalized police power for enforcement. We shall also have to give up a distinction of great consequence and very dear to many a legalistic heart, but economically quite absurd, between private and public or quasi-public employments. There is no private business, if by that we mean one of no consequence to anyone but its proprietors; and so none exempt from compulsion to serve a planned if by that we mean one of no consequence to anyone but its proprietors; and so none exempt from compulsion to serve a planned public interest. Furthermore, we shall have to progress sufficiently far in elementary realism to recognize that only the Federal area, and often not even that, is large enough to be coextensive with modern industry; and that consequently the States are wholly ineffective instruments for control. All three of these wholesale changes are required by even a limited acceptance of the planning idea (np. 88 and 89). idea (pp. 88 and 89). .

It is equally true that planning in any social sense cannot leave out of its calculations any industry or group of industries and still remain planning.

It will be required, furthermore, in any successful attempt to plan, that the agency which imposes its disinterested will on industry, must equal, in the area of its jurisdiction, the spread of the industry. Planning will necessarily become a function of the Federal Government; either that or the planning agency will supersede that Government, which is why, of course, such a scheme will eventually be assimilated to the State, rather than scheme will eventually be assimilated to the State, rather than possess some of its powers without its responsibilities.

The next series of changes will have to do with industry itself. It has already been suggested that business will logically be required to disappear. This is not an overstatement for the sake of emphasis; it is literally meant. The essence of business is its free venture for profits in an unregulated economy. Planning implies guidance of capital uses; this would limit entrance into or expansion of operations. Planning also implies adjustment of production to consumption; and there is no way of accomplishing this except through a control of prices and of profit margins (p. 89). 89).

The traditional incentives, hope of money-making and fear of money loss, will be weakened, and a kind of civil-service loyalty and fervor will need to grow gradually into acceptance. New industries will not just happen, as the automobile industry did; they will have to be foreseen, to be argued for, to seem probably desirable features of the whole economy before they can be entered upon (p. 90).

We shall not, we never do, proceed to the changes here suggested all at once. Little by little, however, we may be driven the whole length of this road; once the first step is taken, which we seem about to take, that road will begin to suggest itself as the way to a civilized industry. For it will become more and more clear, as thinking and discussion centers on industrial and economic rather than business problems, that not very much is to be gained until the last step has been taken. What seems to be indicated now is years of gradual modification, accompanied by agonies and recriminations, without much visible gain; then suddenly, as it was with the serialization of machines, the last link will almost imperceptibly find its place and suddenly we shall discover that we have a new world, as, some years ago, we suddenly discovered that we had unconsciously created a new industry (p. 90). dustry (p. 90).

It has been by a series of seeming miracles that we have acquired the technique of control and the industrial basis for economic planning. The still further, perhaps greater, miracle of discipline is needed (p. 91). .

It is, in other words, a logical impossibility to have a planned economy and to have business operating its industries, just as it is also impossible to have one within our present constitutional and statutory structure. Modifications in both, so serious as to mean destruction and rebeginning, are required (p. 92).

Consequently, we begin with small unnoticed changes and end by not being able to resist vast and spectacular ones—at which time our systems of theory tumble unwept into the grave along with the outworn techniques they accompanied. When this kind of thing follows a relatively unimpeded course there is rapid industrial change, such as once happened in England; when politicians, theorists, and vested interests resist too strenuously, there is a revolution on the French model. How rapidly the pressures rise to explosive proportions depends both upon the visibility of a better future and upon the hardships of the present.

There is no denying that the contemporary situation in the United States has explosive possibilities. The future is becoming visible in Russia; the present is bitterly in contrast; politicians, theorists, and vested interests seem to conspire ideally for the provocation to violence of a long-patient people. No one can pretend to know how the release of this pressure is likely to protected to know how the release of this pressure is likely to come. Perhaps our statesmen will give way or be more or less gently removed from duty; perhaps our Constitution and statutes will be revised; perhaps our vested interests will submit to control without too violent resistance. It is difficult to believe that any of these will happen; it seems just as incredible that we may have a revolution. Yet the new kind of economic machinery we have in prespect cannot function in our present economy. The have in prospect cannot function in our present economy. The contemporary situation is one in which all the choices are hard; yet one of them has to be made (p. 92).

The prospect of a planned economy is so congenial to every hope and belief that I have.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. MURPHY. I was wondering whether the Senator had found Tugwell's name among those listed as members of the board of governors of the New York Stock Exchange, the National Electric Light Association, the Hamilton Club, the Union League Club, the Securities Exchange.

Mr. DICKINSON. I might say to the junior Senator from Iowa that I have no access to those lists, and they have not been furnished me. I am not on the public-utilities list. I have no connection with the public utilities. I never have had any connection with the public utilities, and the theory that any one who is opposed to Tugwell is hooked up with some interest is only an unwarranted insinuation. As a matter of fact, there can be a conscientious conviction here as to whither our Government is trending. I think that conviction is one which is now being studied by the sane and thinking people of the United States. I believe that the trend is in the wrong direction, so far as the particular group of men I have discussed are concerned, and Tugwell is among them. I believe he is one of the most influential of them, and therefore I do not believe that he should be confirmed.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, I would not wish to impute to the Senator any association with those interests, but I should like to point out the significance of the fact that Mr. Tugwell's association is not with them.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I would not want to be compelled to make a recital of all of the things in the United States to which he does not belong. He is well known, of course, and popular, but I think his membership and listing are probably limited.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield. Mr. McKELLAR. Is the Senator a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate?

Mr. DICKINSON. I am not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator understand that Mr. Tugwell went before that committee, composed of both Democrats and Republicans, and that after the committee heard him, and after they heard the testimony brought in, and after they heard the arguments, only 2 members of the 19 on that committee voted against Mr. Tugwell's confirmation?

Mr. DICKINSON. I understand that very thoroughly. Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator understand that six out of the seven Republicans on the committee impliedly gave their approval to his confirmation?

Mr. DICKINSON. I understand that very thoroughly, and that does not change my views at all. The members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry are entitled to their views. I reserve the right to have my own views, and I expect to express them. It is my privilege as a Senator from Iowa to do that.

I find that Mr. Tugwell claims that he is a great friend of the farmer, and that before the Women's National Democratic Club, in the March meeting in 1931, he showed himself to be the absolute friend of the farmer. Let me quote from him:

Such an abundant life implies the enjoyment of the good things of life in security and contentment, and the cultivation, through such enjoyment, of the good things of the spirit; reflection, philosophy, conversation, and leisure.

I am frank to admit that I am partial to the European tradition of open-air cafes and beer gardens, where decent men and women can drink quietly in the open air under the eyes of their neighbors and where the two sexes can exert on each other the discipline of each other's presence.

He goes on to say that he is a believer in the old philosophy of wine, women, and song. The paragraph which I particularly desire to quote, however, is as follows:

My interest in the subject, is partly due to the fact that wine and beer are made from agricultural produce and that their consumption cannot only serve the broader purposes of the new deal in making for a calmer and happier type of existence, but will help the American farmer to find a better market for his produce

There is absolute evidence of the sincerity of Mr. Tugwell to the farming interests of this country.

Now I wish to quote from his book, Industry's Coming of Age. Professor Tugwell shows clearly that he is in favor of the control of capital, expenditure, and also of price control. He says especially in this volume:

There are two obvious functions which some public body will always have to perform if social results are to be got. One is the matter of capital dispersal and allocation; the other is that of price control.

Perhaps it can be made to seem wrong to squander wealth, and perhaps it can be made to seem supremely important to produce it. But neither in our popular morality, with its roots in a past age and its controls devised for a medieval economy; in religion, which clings to outworn ethics, irrelevant for the present; nor in public-school education, which is dominated by the two, does there seem to be a sufficient promise. But it is through some social agencies as these that controls will have to come.

In other words, there is a direct indication that he not only believed that the Government must control industry, but he also believed that it must control the crafts. So it is not only agriculture which must be controlled; it is also industry.

I am not critical of Dr. Tugwell for changing his mind: I am not critical of Dr. Tugwell for adjusting his views to meet the situation of the time, but I am convinced that in 1931 Dr. Tugwell was of the same opinion that many other people were—that the Constitution was a barrier to many of the reforms he was supporting and advocating. Since that time we have had a change in conditions.

I believe that he, at least, partially had forgotten the fact that he said in this book that the N.R.A. and the A.A.A. did not meet with his view of social and economic planning. But when he came before the committee, with the development from the time that he wrote this book, which was probably in 1933, because it was copyrighted early in 1934, he had seen this adjustment, and therefore I am not critical of his views. I am critical of him wherever he attempted absolutely to reverse his program, and in that way change the principle for which he had previously stood.

I desire to read an editorial appearing in the Washington Post on the question of constitutionality, and a comment on his testimony:

On the subject of the Constitution, Dr. Tugwell now points out that he has taken the oath to uphold it without any mental reservation.

No one expects Dr. Tugwell or any of those who hold the type of view I have been discussing here, to repudiate the Constitution. I do not believe that as yet they have advanced to that stage. In other words, he has to take an oath that he will support the Constitution, and therefore his answer was as I would expect his answer to be when he was asked if he believed in the Constitution.

Earlier he wrote that one illustration of "an emotional attachment to the instruments of social life" is "the unreasoning, almost hysterical, attachments of certain Americans to the Constitution."

Personally, I believe that the Constitution protects our liberty. I do not believe that it is an abridgment of our liberty under any circumstances whatsoever. It will be found, according to the statement of John Marshall, that | when we go out beyond the scope that has heretofore been considered within the limits of the Constitution we always tread on dangerous ground. I believe we are now treading on dangerous ground.

I read further from the Washington Post editorial:

If Dr. Tugwell has today no reservations on the subject of the general adequacy of the Constitution, how can he sincerely call implicit acceptance of this instrument by others unreasoning to

On the subject of economic planning, Dr. Tugwell tells the Senate that "I believe in the kind of planning we are doing now, but not in a planned economy, which is best defined by reference to the Russian system." Elsewhere he writes that "the experiments commenced in 1933 in the United States are worth-while beginnings. They are not economic planning, but they afford new opportunities for working out plans."

What is marrier a desirable heginning to this official on one day

What is merely a desirable beginning to this official on one day is glibly made to appear the ultimate goal on another occasion.

On the subject of the consistency of constitutional provisions with the ideal of planning, Dr. Tugwell says on the stand that there would be such inconsistency "if we are going to have a planned economy. * * But I don't favor it." At another place and time his view was that: "The challenge of Russia to America does not lie in the merits of the Soviet system, although they may prove to be considerable. The challenge lies rather in the idea of planning, of purposeful, intelligent control over economic affairs. This, it seems, we must accept as a guide to our economic life to replace the decadent notions of a laissez faire philosophy.

I desire to refer to another editorial, one from the Kansas City Star of June 4, 1934:

The report in Kansas City last week of certain aspects of the Soviet industrial system from an American engineer, Zara Witkin, who has returned from his work in Russia, may not give the whole of the picture. Indeed, the Soviet Union is so vast a country that no individual's view of conditions there can be taken as conclusive. But it is illuminating to find Mr. Witkin's criticisms have to do with the general scheme of a national economy planned by a central government.

That is the phase of it that I want to bring to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. Witkin speaks of "unparalleled mismanagement and disturbing lack of initiative" in the Soviet Union. One trouble, he says, is that "government is so centralized that every engineer is afraid to make any decision on a matter of construction until he hears from someone above him. The countless delays that arise hears from someone above him. The countless delays that arise from such a situation make any sustained cooperative effort impossible."

These are among the necessary defects of a system under which a central authority tries to conduct a nation's business.

To my mind the indictment of the N.R.A., the indictment of the A.A.A., the indictment of practically every phase of the new-deal legislation we have had here, is the fact that we have a centralized bureaucracy in Washington, D.C., with our interests hundreds and thousands of miles away, with no possibility of having a determination of a crucial matter in time to save the situation.

I wish to refer to the hog-and-corn contracts in Iowa. We have had a tremendous drought. In many fields the oats were dried and blown out, and under ordinary circumstances when a field reached the point where it could not produce the farmer would be in there with his plow and he would be ploughing it up to put in corn, but we find that he contracted with the Government to reduce his corn acreage and he was already planting the limit. Therefore he either had to ignore his contract or get permission from Washington to avoid his contract. In other words, in my opinion, with 120,000,000 people, with our diversity of agriculture and diversity in industry, it is not possible to have business controlled by one central bureau in Washington and to have it work efficiently. Not only that, but the interests of one section may be adverse to the interests of another. That is the criticism and the reason why the N.R.A. cannot succeed.

To quote further from this editorial:

The same difficulties are indicated by one of the most sympathetic of American observers of the Soviet Union, Sherwood Eddy. In his latest book he classifies a paralyzing and ineffective bureaucracy as one of the major evils of the Russian system. "It falls like a blight on initiative everywhere." The main cause is the "overcentralized power of the state and party" which is essential to national planning.

Certainly the break-down in agricultural planning and in the transportation facilities last year that resulted in several million deaths from starvation in Russia—the estimates run from three to six million—would indicate that national planning has its drawbacks.

Isn't it just possible that Prof. Rexford G. Tugwell spoke too soon when he wrote in his latest book: "For many years the technical task of devising plans to regulate our complex economic interests was too difficult to attempt. But today we know that this is no longer true, for Russia has shown that planning is practicable."

I am of the opinion that we will have exactly the same experience as Soviet Russia if we attempt to carry this program into effect.

In the Dry Goods Merchants Trade Journal I find this quotation, talking about young people going to school:

These young people are headed for some awful headaches and heartaches if they have drilled into them the theories of many such professors—that while we are reasonably sure to have a return to the boom times of 1929 between now and the early 1940's, yet the period just after that is, so it is said, threatening in the extreme, due in no small measure to the teachings of the Tugwell type of professor, instilled into the minds of young men and women who attended college during the years 1921 to 1932; that by 1942-44 these young people will be running our affairs and the theories of the radical types of these professors will be tried out by the generation then in control, the generation taught by these theorists. by these theorists

Here I wish again to refer to the land theory. I was interested in the Philadelphia speech delivered by Mr. Tugwell, and I find that in the land theory promulgated by him we first start in to rent land-that is now admitted-and then we start in to purchase marginal land—that is in the offing then the next theory of land control is always to have the Government own and control all land. That means absolute production control all along the line. I do not believe that the Government ought to go into those phases of land control. I quote from Mr. Tugwell's speech as follows:

We are now engaged in a drastic program of controlling the output of agricultural products for the emergency. This in itself means that we are trying to control the entire utilization of all our agricultural land.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Would the Senator be in favor of relief being borne entirely by the States and local communities rather than by the Federal Government?

Mr. DICKINSON. Insofar as they are able to provide relief. I would.

Mr. TYDINGS. Suppose they are not able to do so?

Mr. DICKINSON. Then I think the only thing for the Government to do is to contribute to the State, through its chief authority, the Governor of the State, such amount as may be necessary and leave the matter of distribution both in counties and other localities entirely in the hands of the State authorities. I am still more in favor of State rights than many of my good Democratic friends.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is not opposed to bureaucracy to relieve distress where bureaucracy is necessary?

Mr. DICKINSON. There is no bureaucracy in what I

Mr. TYDINGS. Well, the centralization of power in the Federal Government is what I am talking about.

Mr. DICKINSON. Not at all. My suggestion is merely for a contribution out of the Federal Treasury; there is no bureaucratic control about it at all.

Mr. TYDINGS. I cannot see the distinction between the Federal Government overriding the State laws and the States being controlled from Washington.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not take my time. It is almost exhausted. Continuing the

There are other methods already in use by which governmental agencies control the use of lands for other purposes—police regulations in towns, and zoning ordinances or laws in cities and suburbs, and even local or regional planning boards.

One way to control agricultural output is to restrict directly the use of the land.

That is exactly what we are doing. That is the cotton bill; it is going to be the corn bill. The effort all along the line is to restrict the use of land, and, in my judgment, we will never cultivate in the farming population of this country either a desire or a capacity to take care of themselves if we adopt such a theory.

Continuing the quotation:

Either of these involves maintaining more men and more land than are really needed. What is done is merely to keep a part of each field or each farm out of use. It seems to me obvious that this cannot be the characteristic feature of a permanent policy. There is no recognition in it of the basic conditions which ought to determine the use of the land. It adjusts supply to the moment's market, but it neither conserves the land nor makes provision for permanently bettering farmers' lives.

In other words, he is of the opinion that we must not only control the land but we must go in and supervise the use of the land. If Senators desire a real exhibit of 100 percent socialization of land, I call attention to the testimony of Dr. Morgan, of the Tennessee Valley Authority, which was given before the committee just a few days ago and which will shortly be in print, where, in my judgment, he shows that they must not only go in and determine the usage of land but they must go in and absolutely control society in its occupancy of the land, including education, social conditions, the church, every phase all along the line.

There is another man connected with this Department who says that profits must be eliminated. I now quote from a statement of Jerome N. Frank, of December 1933. On page 2 he says:

The majority of the American people are still devoted to the profit system. They still believe that there is substantial worth in using the desire for individual profit as one of the important incentives in getting done the necessary work of the world. Although the profit system, as it has worked recently, seems to have worked poorly, most Americans believe that, properly controlled, it can work well. As long as the majority of the American people continue to cherish that system, it would be impossible, even if it were considered desirable, to abandon it completely in favor of another system. To do so would be to fly in the face of our current folk ways. The course of the wise statesman today is clear, if he wishes to avert complete break-down. He will seek, so clear, if he wishes to avert complete break-down. He will seek, so far as possible, to eliminate the evil aspects of the profit system. He will give that system a fair trial.

In other words, it appears from his statement that, sooner or later, we are to reach the point where we are no longer to have anything to do with the profit system.

Recently Byron Price, a Washington correspondent, in an article of June 12, 1934, had this to say with reference to the present trend about which I have been talking:

Directly or by implication, the professors are indicted on several counts:

1. Radicalism, destructive of American institutions.
2. Ignorance, leading, to experiments which experience has shown worthless.

Extravagance, involving reckless spending of public funds.
 Tyranny, directed at curtailment of individual liberty, private initiative, freedom of speech.

I think he has summed up in those four points the actual criticism of present-day trends that is well worth while for all of us to keep in mind.

Under date of June 24, 1933, Mr. Tugwell made a speech at Rochester, N.Y., from which I quote as follows:

Upon general social and economic problems, upon fit relations of government to industry, upon the respective functions of the several divisions of government in connection with these relationships, it is the line of least resistance for most of us to affect the attitude of the theorist. And this is true whether to affect the attitude of the theorist. And this is true whether or not the consequences appear to be promising for or threatening to our social and economic existence. It is merely a usual process of thought. Our loyalties and affections are apt to attach themselves to instruments rather than to functions. In this instance we are apt to regard a form or a document more highly than the values such a thing produces. We become adulating and uncritical. Only crises calls in question our attribution of virtues. We then see suddenly that values attach to these things because they are valuable and not because they simply exist.

In other words, he says that it takes a crisis to cause us to rise up against the conditions which exist or against such an instrument as the Constitution or against a custom or a habit. To me that is at least an insinuation that he believes in such reform as is not permitted under our system but which he thinks is imperative in order to work out the present-day problems. I continue the quotation:

The new administration is compelled to reckon with these attitudes of people. In this connection I shall refer to and shall dwell upon two major lines of action which have been taken. I shall attempt to evaluate their constitutional and economic validity; I shall attempt to sustain them against more orthodox theories of government, laws, and economics. What I can say here theories of government, laws, and economics. What I can say here and now must be merely the sketch for something which ought to have been longer considered, made more revealing by the inclusion of ramifying implications. There has not been time yet for that. If, however, I can furnish some clues to the rebuilding of a theoretical structure, I may have done something toward closing the gap between theory and reality. There will be sufficient ingenuity, and above all, adequate time, for other minds to follow these directions.

In other words, he believes that it is his job to work out some program and that is the reason why he wrote this book [indicating]. I will say that those chapters in the fore part of the book set forth a condition which does exist, and no one attempts to deny it, but when it comes to the remedies at the end of the book, then I think they do not fit the disease

I ask that a further quotation from the speech be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

And certainly the Constitution was never designed to impose upon one era the obsolete economic dogma which may have been glorified under it in an earlier one. Today and for tomorrow our problem is that of our national economic maintenance for the public welfare by governmental intervention—any theory of government, law, or economics to the contrary notwithstanding. Hence the National Recovery Act and the Agricultural Adjustment Act of the administration.

I shall not turn to a consideration of the measures enacted in the last special session of the Congress vesting in the President broad powers for the administration and execution of laws enacted by the Congress. Reference may be made for illustrative purposes to the powers granted to the President under the Economy Act and under the appendage to the Agricultural Act which is popularly known as the "inflation amendment." Of what may even the theorist of government law or economics complain? Has the theory of a republican form of government explicit in the Constitution been violated by the new Democratic President and Congress? * * These questions naturally arise; they command respect for they concern our faith in the organization and function of our National Government. But must faiths, political more than economic, be preserved at all events—that is, in disregard of the obviously necessary requirements of the public welfare? May our faiths in checks and balances yield to necessity, or even to expediency? If these faiths and this necessity for more expeditious governmental action are to clash, must we sacrifice efficiency or shall we establish a new faith?

Mr. DICKINSON. Now as to the question of the neces-I shall not turn to a consideration of the measures enacted in

Mr. DICKINSON. Now, as to the question of the necessity of this program and as to whether we are proceeding in the best way, I want to quote again from the Dry Goods Merchants' Trade Journal, of June 1934:

* * that latest figures from England are very interesting, pointing the way to our early trend probabilities. Without alphabetical and theoretical stimulation(?) England's business is forging ahead rapidly; their business index is almost back to the 1929 level; employment index back almost to 1929; their stock market is within a few points of the 1929 highs; wholesale prices are about to the highest level of 1931 but far below the price levels of 1929—a very favorable situation. Let us hope that President Roosevelt is watching the above trends in England and clamps down on the numerous theorists and petty politicians in his official and semiofficial family of advisers.

Mr. President, in conclusion, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD an editorial entitled "So this is 'Progress'" from the Murphysboro Independent of Murphysboro, Ill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so

The editorial referred to is as follows:

GO LEFT!

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I had not expected to say a word about this nomination, and what I shall say will probably be as much amiss as was in some respects the investigation conducted regarding it. I simply wish to say, however, that whenever this administration has gone to the left I have voted with it, and whenever it has gone to the right I have voted against it.

I voted against the administration's plan for the banks when it left the little banks out; that is, I voted to include the little banks.

I voted against the administration when it advocated the economy bill, because it was a trend toward conservatism and away from liberalism.

I voted against the N.R.A. because I believed it would be operated for monopoly, as it contained a provision that brushed aside the antitrust laws.

I voted against the administration when I supported the remonetizing of silver.

I voted against the administration when I supported higher income taxes and higher inheritance taxes than were advocated by its measures.

I voted against the administration when I supported the plank to guarantee to farmers the cost of production.

I likewise voted against the administration when I supported the 30-hour week; and I likewise voted against the administration's recommendations to mellow those provi-

On the contrary, when the administration has gone liberal. or toward the left, I have just as consistently voted with it.

I voted with the administration for expanding the currency; that is, for a bill which gave the President power to do that.

I voted with the administration for the home loan bill.

I voted with the administration for farm relief.

I voted with the administration for the guaranteeing of bank deposits. In fact, I was one of the few who made the fight until the administration forces were brought around to that view.

I voted with the administration to submit to the people the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

I voted with the administration for the control of crime.

I voted for the Johnson bill to prohibit injunctions against State commissions in connection with public-utility orders.

I voted with the administration for the Muscle Shoals bill, for the truth in securities bill, and for the bill to regulate stock exchanges.

I cite some 10 examples in which I have gone against the administration's reactionary endorsements and 10 instances in which I have voted with the administration's liberal pronouncements.

In the matter of the confirmation of appointments and in my expressions with regard to those advising the administration I have taken an identical view. I was grieved when Eugene Meyer was retained by the administration to head the Federal Reserve for a short while. On the contrary, I was indeed happy to see a liberal man like the late Senator Blaine put on the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

I regretted that Mr. Ballantine was allowed to linger around the Treasury Department, because he was distinctly of the reactionary type and to the right, but I was very happy when a man representing contrary views like Mr. J. F. T. O'Connor was made Comptroller of the Currency.

Likewise, I was not in sympathy with men of such reactionary tendencies as Mr. Woodin, Mr. Aitchison, and Mr. Baruch, all of whom I opposed; but on the contrary, looking to the left, I was happy for the naming such men as Brookhart, Moley, Governor Black, and members of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, whom I felt to represent distinctly a more liberal view.

The record which I have made in voting along these lines apparently has been pretty well regarded as satisfactory to those holding the liberal views. All the veterans' and soldiers' organizations regard my record as 100 percent perfect, so far as I have learned. All the farm organizations regard my record as 100 percent perfect, so far as I have learned. All the labor organizations regard my record as 100 percent satisfactory, so far as I have learned. All the little banks of the United States regard my record as 100 percent satisfactory, so far as I have learned. So do all liberal leaders of whom I have knowledge.

We have come now to an appointment which is not being discussed entirely upon the merits of the appointee. There has been invoked, whether it has been done purposely or whether it has crept in by its own moving force, quite a discussion as to whether the liberal or radical views of the appointee qualify him or tend to make him unfit to sit in the Cabinet or to occupy a position somewhat similar to

I am very sorry Mr. Tugwell did not explain his views, as he might have expressed them in a very few words-that he meant what he said then, that his words applied in 1931 and that they applied in 1934.

This is where I have some misgivings: I hate to have it assumed that we have corrected the condition which was the cause of the political revolution of 1932. Our candidate for President of the United States, when he was a candidate, said this, and I quote from his speech of September 23, 1932.

Just as freedom to farm has ceased, so also the opportunity in usiness has narrowed. * * * Recently a careful study was business has narrowed. made of the concentration of business in the United States.

It showed that our economic life was dominated by six hundred and odd corporations, who controlled two-thirds of American industry. Ten million small business men divided the

More striking still, it appeared that, if the process of concentration goes on at the same rate, at the end of another century we shall have all American industry controlled by a dozen corporations and run by perhaps a hundred men.

Put plainly, we are steering a steady course toward economic oligarchy if we are not there already.

Our President pledged his party by a declaration for the redistribution of wealth. That was followed by Mr. Tugwell's declaration for the redistribution of wealth, and by suggestions by such men as Dr. Moley, who said he favored the redistribution of wealth. Secretary of the Interior Ickes, in a signed magazine article published in the New York Times less than 2 weeks ago, stated that the administration is steering a course for the redistribution of wealth. But, unfortunately, we are not steering straight along that course. I quote from an article by Mr. Lawrence Dennis, published in the American Mercury of May 1934, in which he said:

I am reliably informed by an economist who keeps tab on the latest corporate developments that the concentration of control in some 200 large corporations has increased from 45 percent of all industrial capital in 1930 to 55 percent in 1933.

Taken alone those figures might be somewhat disputed, but I have in my hand an extract from an article which appeared in the Philadelphia Record, this study made by an administration organ, in which it was said:

The rich get richer—President's program stumbling because there has been no redistribution of wealth.

This is from the Philadelphia Record, and, in part, reads as follows:

The rich are getting richer and the poor are getting poorer. That was the case in the boom days of Coolidge. It also was the case of the depression days of Hoover.

And it still is the case in the recovery days of Roosevelt.

Let those shuddering Tories who moan about administration radicalism observe these figures from the Treasury.

Taxes paid by corporations increased from $62,801,192 for the March payment of 1933 to $92,200,858 for the March payment this Taxes paid by persons with incomes of more than $5,000 jumped from $88,599,235 last year to $109,766,752 this year.

And taxes on incomes under $5,000 dropped from $14,974,689 to $12,936,734.

Concentration of wealth goes on at a more rapid pace under the "new deal" than before.

So, Mr. President, my regret is that the views which have been expressed by Dr. Tugwell and Mr. Moley and those expressed by Mr. Roosevelt and by Mr. Ickes have not been carried out, due to the fact that one day they have gone toward the left and the next day they have gone toward the right. I applaud the statements of the administration when they say to the banks, "Lend your money to the people", and then again I grieve over the instructions given by the bank examiners that homes and farms are not sound collateral upon which the banks may make loans.

I do not have any particular fault to find with someone who is arguing that the Constitution has to be changed.

If it takes a change in the Constitution of the United States, but I do not think it does, to break down this condition by which 1 percent of the people own more of the wealth of the country than the other 99 percent of the people put together, then I am in favor of that change in the Constitution of the United States. So was Jefferson, so was Samuel Adams, and so were the men who drafted that immortal document. It is carried out in the express Declaration of the Independence that whenever the Government fails to provide life, liberty, and happiness, or at least the pursuit of happiness, then it has failed and the Constitution should be changed in such a way as may be necessary to carry out the purpose of government.

Dr. Tugwell's appointment is generally regarded as being toward the left. I would not administer the purposes he has expressed as he has done. I believe that I have advocated a more certain and direct way. Neither would I administer the purposes the President has in mind as he is doing. But so long as the trend is toward the left-for the decentralization of wealth, for the spreading of the blessings of life among the masses—so long as the trend is toward the liberal and away from the right and the reactionary I shall have to vote for any confirmation or legislation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I never like to object to the confirmation of nominations sent here by the Chief Executive, regardless of the party to which he may belong. His party is responsible for the conduct of the Government, and he is given the authority, as well as the responsibility, by the people of the country. Because of that fact I believe he ought to have counsellors and advisers around him in whom he has confidence.

The record will show, therefore, that very rarely have I opposed the confirmation of those nominated by the Chief Executive, and only when I felt that I had good cause for taking such action. This is one of those cases.

I am not even personally acquainted with Professor Tugwell. So far as I know, he is a very estimable young man. He is well educated, and I see no objection to that. I should think it would be to his advantage. I am, however, tremendously influenced by the views he himself has expressed with reference to the system of government under which we live, and the direction in which he would turn the Government from the course we have followed for more than a century.

Mr. President, I understand Dr. Tugwell has since repudiated some of the statements he made originally less than 3 years ago; but at that time he frankly stated that constitutions would have to go. I should like to read just what he said before the American Economic Association in December 1931 along that line:

We have a century and more of development to undo. stitutions of laissez faire have become so much a part of the fabric of modern life that the untangling and removing of their tissues will be almost like dispensing with civilization itself. We shall all of us be made unhappy in one way or another; for things we love, as well as things that are only privileges, will have to go. But we shall have to see, no doubt, a wholesale sacrifice of such things, like it as little as we may.

The first series of changes will have to do with statutes, with The first series of changes will have to do with statutes, with constitutions, and with government. We shall be changing once for all, and it will require the laying of rough, unboly hands on many a sacred precedent, doubtless calling on an enlarged and nationalized police power for enforcement.

The next series of changes will have to do with industry itself. It has already been suggested that business will logically be required to disappear. This is not an overstatement for the sake of emphasis; it is literally meant.

Furthermore we shall have to progress sufficiently for in ele-

Furthermore, we shall have to progress sufficiently far in elementary realism to recognize that only the Federal area, and often not even that, is large enough to be coextensive with modern industry; and that consequently the States are wholly ineffective instruments for control.

Mr. President, those are the words of Professor Tugwell himself. If they mean anything at all, they mean that Professor Tugwell would abolish the Constitution of the United States. He says a century and more of development must be undone. Those means by which we have become great, notwithstanding the sackcloth and ashes in which we find ourselves today, nevertheless we are still the greatest nation on the face of the earth-all these instruments of development must be done away with, says Dr. Tugwell. Constitutions must go. That, of course, means the Constitution of the United States as well as the constitutions of the various States. State lines must be obliterated entirely, completely effaced. The State will become merely a memory.

If Dr. Tugwell's words mean anything, they mean just

Mr. President, Dr. Tugwell unquestionably occupies a commanding influence in this administration. Many people believe he is the closest adviser of the President. Many people believe he has greater influence with the Chief Executive than any other single man or even group of men. If that be true, it seems to me if the Senate of the United States believes in the traditions that have brought us to our present greatness, if the Senate of the United States believes in the Constitution of the United States, if the Senate of the United States believes in the things in which the American people believe with their whole heart and soul, then the Senate of the United States ought not to give a vote of confidence to this man to give him even more influence with the Government than he has at the present time.

Suppose he had his way, and he could abolish the Constitution of the United States; what, then, would be the situation in this country, Mr. President? I may say that this is not an idle dream, in the minds of many people. Great numbers of Americans today believe the Constitution is in a fair way to be abolished. Liberties have been taken with it that no administration ever undertook before, and the Congress of the United States really has aided and abetted it. In any event, it has sat by and permitted the inroads on the Constitution to take place.

If Mr. Tugwell has his way, and the Constitution is finally abolished, then what is our status? Then we have a complete dictatorship. Eliminate the Constitution of the United States from our system of government, and we have an executive dictatorship. There is no other plan; and this administration then would be forced to seize the powers of dictatorship, whether it desired to do so or not, in order that there might be law and order in the country.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No: I cannot yield to the Senator now. I have only 15 minutes. I should like very much to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGill in the chair). The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. So, Mr. President, that is the end that Dr. Tugwell would reach—the elimination of the Constitution of the United States. It must go; and when it is gone, we have no balance; we have nothing but chaos. There must be a system of government; there must be a system of law and order, all of which is prescribed today by the Constitution. Abolish the Constitution, and what have we left? Someone must exercise authority. Whom would it be? A dictator—an executive dictator. There is no other way out.

Mr. President, the history of dictatorships all over the world has been that the average man suffers most and the man farthest down. It is not the man with money; it is not the man of great wealth. A million dollars can always take care of itself, whether we have a dictatorship, an oligarchy, a republic, or a monarchy. But the man farthest down, the average man, who needs protection on the part of his government, is the man who invariably suffers most when a dictator rules.

Consequently, Mr. President, I think I would be derelict in my duty, indeed, utterly negligent, if I did not vote against the confirmation of a man for an office of greater power, higher title, whose views are in the direction of the abolishment of constitutions, which could only mean the erection of dictatorships.

Dr. Tugwell made other statements at the time to which I have referred. He said:

There is no private business, if by that we mean one of no consequence to anyone but its proprietors; and so none exempt from compulsion to serve a planned public interest.

The essence of business is its free venture for profits in an unregulated economy. Planning implies guidance of capital uses; this would limit entrance into or expansion of operations. Planning also implies adjustment of production to consumption; and there is no way of accomplishing this except through a control of prices and of profit margins.

Again:

It is, in other words, a logical impossibility to have a planned economy and to have businesses operating its industries, just as it is also impossible to have one within our present constitutional and statutory structure. Modifications in both, so serious as to mean destruction and rebeginning, are required.

Then he referred again to the abolishing of business, and said:

This amounts, in fact, to the abandonment, finally, of laissez faire. It amounts, practically, to the abolition of "business." .

The next series of changes will have to do with industry itself. It has already been suggested that business will logically be required to disappear. This is not an overstatement for the sake of emphasis; it is literally meant.

So Dr. Tugwell would eliminate business and the business man. In other words, he subscribes thoroughly to the Russian system. That is Russian communism, and to that system I am convinced the great majority of the American people are opposed. I think that if it were left to the people of the country today, so thoroughly do they distrust Dr. Tugwell that there would be no question in the world about his confirmation. It would certainly be refused.

Not only that, but, from his own statement, he would eliminate the farmer. Let me read from an article published in Labor, a national weekly newspaper published in Washington, D.C., the issue of January 9, 1934:

"'We are preparing', Tugwell declared, 'a land program not merely for the benefit of those who hold title to it, but for the greater welfare of all the citizens of the country."

The Government, Tugwell insists, cannot go on forever paying

The Government, Tugwell insists, cannot go on forever paying farmers not to plant, and the alternative, he says, is to buy excess land and retire it until there is demand for its cultivation.

One of the startling statements by Tugwell is that we can raise all the food we need with half of our present farmers, or only about 12½ percent of our working population.

""We envisage', says Tugwell, 'a commercial agriculture made up of the most efficient farmers operating the best of our lands, with the remaining land being put to other uses and the unneeded farmers devoting their time to other occupations."

In other words, by his own statement, he would take farms away from the owners, he would undertake to say, himself, which are efficient farmers and which are inefficient, and all those placed in the category of inefficiency would be deprived of their farms. That is his own statement The unneeded farmers, said he, would have to devote their time to other occupations.

Mr. President, with 12,000,000 men walking the streets looking for jobs, what other occupations would Mr. Tugwell place farmers in? Where is he to get jobs for the farmers from whom he proposes to take their land?

These, it seems to me, are vital reasons why a man of this sort should not aspire to higher position in the Government, and it is rather surprising to some who think, at any rate as I do, that the President of the United States would even seek to give this man greater authority and greater

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Indiana has expired.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I am sure that the Senator from Indiana would not willingly misquote anyone, and therefore I think it rather unfortunate that he should base his opposition to the confirmation of Dr. Tugwell on a speech which he evidently has not read in its entirety, because if the Senator from Indiana had done so, it would be perfectly apparent to him that, according to Mr. Tugwell, the abandonment of constitutions and statutes and the other terrible things mentioned would happen only in case a country should adopt the system of national planning which Mr. Tugwell, in the first part of his speech, had adequately defined, a system of national planning along the lines of the Russian system.

I am perfectly willing to concede that terms like "national planning" and "planned economy" are rather vague terms, and, from passages quoted from various speeches and various books, it is apparent that Mr. Tugwell has at times used identical words with a somewhat different meaning. That is perhaps an inconsistency; but if so, it is purely a verbal one and does not, in my judgment, affect the merits of the question before us.

In the hearing, if we can dignify the proceeding of Monday by such a term, Mr. Tugwell was subjected to a crossexamination on particular words and particular sentences drawn from various speeches, which I do not believe anyone could possibly have gone through without involving himself in occasional technical inconsistencies. That, to my mind, is all that can be said against the position he took on Monday before the committee.

The only other argument that has been presented to us is the argument of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrn], who is opposed to certain amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act which, after considerable discussion, were reported favorably by the Committee on Agriculture and

According to the Senator from Virginia, Mr. Tugwell admitted in a letter to him that he had previously violated the law and that these amendments were necessary in order to enable the Department of Agriculture to do what they had previously been doing without warrant of law.

Under the limitation of 15 minutes, I have not sufficient time to read the letter in full, but I shall quote a few sentences from it to show that it means exactly the reverse of the interpretation given it by the Senator from Virginia. Said Dr. Tugwell in the letter:

We have worked out marketing agreements which are benefiting producers of fluid milk, rice, peanuts, tree fruits, oranges, tobacco, and many other products. The progress of these operations is always subject to attack in the courts, and there have been several occasions when they were delayed for considerable periods pending the outcome of the court decisions. The orange-control work was the outcome of the court decisions. The orange-control work was the one to date which has been most seriously held up. The decisions of the courts, when finally obtained, have been generally favorable in all cases so far, so that it appears that what we are doing is in conformity with the policy laid down by Congress as set forth by the law and is so generally understood by the courts. If, however, Congress were to definitely spell out the powers under the act, as suggested in the amendments already proposed, that would give farmers still greater confidence in the successful carrying through of the operations which we have already undertaken. It was with that idea in mind that I stated at the press conference that we regarded the amendments not as widening our powers but rather as clarifying what the act already authorized us to do. It was also in that connection that I stated that certain of the amendments simply permitted us to do what we are already

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUTTING. I vield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. With the indulgence of the Senator for a moment, I may say that I have made an analysis of the amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act, to which reference has been made by the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Virginia, as they were reported by the Senator from South Carolina, and I find that in almost every instance the Senator from South Carolina in his report on the bill justifies the proposed amendments on the ground that they make clear the authority of the Secretary under the existing law and make clear the meaning of certain provisions of the law.

In other words, the criticism which has been made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrn] and other Senators of Mr. Tugwell's statement that they were largely clarifying amendments, is not supported by the report of the committee, which is that with the exception of certain of the amendments plainly constituting helpful changes in existing law they are to make clear the present provisions.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I am glad to have that contribution from the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

I should not wish, however, to take any position myself as to whether those amendments are properly described by the word "clarifying." I am inclined to think that perhaps the word was used in rather a broad sense, and that these amendments do add to the powers contained in the original act. But that is simply a question of opinion on which any two Senators might differ, and it is certainly fair to say that the contention which Mr. Tugwell has made about these amendments is in exact conformity with the statements made by his chief, the Secretary of Agriculture.

I think there is no doubt in the mind of anyone here that that interpretation is also held by the President of the United States, and that Dr. Tugwell, whether as Under Secretary or as Assistant Secretary, is not in a position where he could possibly take any stand with regard to questions of policy without the consent and approval of his superior officers.

It certainly is not an objection to the confirmation of a man that he is carrying out to the best of his ability the policy laid down for him by those whom he is serving, and that it seems to me is all that can be made out of the argument of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd].

I want it clearly understood for my own part, Mr. President, that my support of this nomination does not necessarily imply any agreement with the views of Dr. Tugwell on those amendments or on any other subject. I reserve the right to vote against those amendments or other proposals of the Department of Agriculture whenever I feel that my duty leads me that way. Nor do I wish to endorse all the policies which Dr. Tugwell has laid down. I specifically disagree with the policy of crop reduction, and insofar as that represents the views of Dr. Tugwell I am in opposition to him.

But those are not the questions with which we have to deal when we come to the confirmation of an appointee. There is no question in the world about Dr. Tugwell's ability, about his character, or his honesty of purpose, or his capacity, and insofar as opposition is based on the policies which he is advocating, that opposition in my judgment would be much more effective and much more creditable to the opponents if they would proceed to attribute those policies to those truly responsible, to persons higher up, whom they are actually attacking under cover of Dr. Tugwell. Of course, Mr. President, we all of us have a right to oppose any policy laid down by anybody, no matter how highly placed, but I think that as Senators it is more in consonance with the dignity of our position to make the attack openly and state our position plainly, and not to make it under cover of a vote against the nomination of a subordinate official whose personal character we are unable to criticize.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, before the hearings were conducted by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I had planned to go rather extensively into the philosophy of the nominee. For 2 weeks I have been endeavoring, as time permitted me, to reread his utterances. I read them carefully and intended to point out and comment upon the items with which I do not agree. But last night when I had the opportunity to speak it was so late, and every one was so tired, that I preferred not to go on, and I yielded to the limitation of debate because of the desire to have expedition. I recognize that such action would forbid my giving an analysis of the theories of Dr. Tugwell as he has expressed them in several publications.

The best thing he was written is The Industrial Discipline, and if anyone will read the chapter on the subject. Government and Industry he will get a very concise view of Dr. Tugwell's philosophy, with which I do not agree.

In that particular treatise he deals extensively with the social will; then with regulation and control-meaning Government control; then the Government's responsibility in the matter of industry. I especially wish that every thoughtful Senator—and they are all thoughtful—would read his discussion of the allocation of capital; how much capital should be permitted to go into industry, how much should be permitted in this particular branch of industry and in that particular branch, and just where the responsibility is to permit capital to go into industry.

Then the discussion continues with regard to the movement toward integration, leading to a gradual elimination of State lines and the country becoming gradually one unit. He discusses the objections to that, which will have to be overcome. He says that those who favor the old philosophy of laissez faire, those who defend State lines and, lastly, the vested interests, will make it difficult to integrate the whole United States.

Then follows a rather exhaustive discussion of price control, and so on.

It is not necessary, Mr. President, now that committee hearings have been had, to make any comment upon this new theory. There are two reasons why I do not want to do so. One is that the subject has been fairly well covered by other Senators who have spoken, and it is not at all of any value to repeat what they have stated. The other reason, and certainly that is a commanding reason, is the statement of Dr. Tugwell, that what was said to be his statement was merely the statement of the reporter; that it did not represent his views. It matters not, Mr. President, how much his apologists here on the floor try to make out that there is no contradiction between what he wrote and what he now says he did not believe; nevertheless, there can be one conclusion on that matter.

Mr. President, if Dr. Tugwell believes what he stated here I would not in a time of crisis vote to give him administrative authority. After he has stated what he did, the fact that he says now that he did not mean it, that it is not so, and it does not represent his views, would indicate that there is such a lack of mental integrity that I could not support the confirmation of his nomination.

So far as I know, no nominee has come up for nomination whose nomination I have not supported, because it is my theory, and it is my practice to follow that theory, that the President ought to be supported in the execution of the laws with which he is entrusted and I do not think it is either wise or commendable, unless there is some distinctly good reason for it, to refuse to confirm someone whom the President would like to appoint to administer the law. So it has been my unbroken practice not to contest the confirmation of Presidential nominations. However, after the hearings in this case, which I have taken all yesterday and last night and some time this morning to read, there is sufficient objection in my mind to prevent my going along with those who will vote for the confirmation of Dr. Tugwell's nomination.

I am not going to be influenced in any way by any utterances on this floor by anyone as to what my motive is in voting for or against this nomination. Those who charge that there is purely a political motive would certainly not make such a charge against certain Senators who have spoken and who will vote against the nominee, and the statement that we are trying to attak someone above under the guise of attacking someone below has no foundation, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. President, if the people were as well acquainted with the general attitude of college professors as I am they would not be surprised at the ease with which statements made on occasions to public audiences may be retracted when the responsibility comes of putting into operation the philosophy enunciated.

A college professor is in the business of teaching. His business is not to give information. His business is to discipline the mind of his pupils. That is the field of his activity. Therefore the greatest opportunity for instilling that discipline is afforded by the inexact sciences and not by the exact sciences. We do not find dreamers teaching mathematics; we find them teaching sociology, ethics, and sciences, sciences that admit of possibilities in various directions. The chief means of strengthening the minds of young men and women is to have them engage in a line of investigation to which there is no end, to which there is no fixed limit. It is not necessary that it should be an investigation where finality may be achieved. It is the continual deferring of finality which affords the greater opportunity, in that the strengthening process comes from pursuit rather than possession. The college professor is not instructing his pupils in order that they may attain finality. He instructs them in order to give them power to think, and ability to think comes from the exercise of the thinking processes. Consequently, all kinds of theories, good and bad, are announced. There is no responsibility as to whether or not they are sound. That is not even a first consideration. A principle that is unsound in the classroom offers just as much opportunity to strengthen the mind by pursuit as one that is sound, and even more so, because the distance to which the mind goes is greater than in the case of a fixed principle.

That is the reason, Mr. President, why so few of the professional men in the universities ever keep their feet on the ground. There is no criticism to be indulged against these promoters of theories so long as the theories are being used merely as bases for the development of power to think. So long as those who enunciate them are kept at their own lasts within the limit of the classrooms they will be rendering a splendid service, because they are not teaching dogma; they are not in the attitude of doctrinaires, and are not attempting to produce the conviction. Universities are not for that purpose; universities are seminaries of ideas.

The ideas may be sound or they may be unsound, but that is not of concern; so long as the theory is limited in its influence upon those who are being taught, no particular harm follows; but when an individual whose mind is filled with vagaries, who has no certainty but only theory, is called to a position of responsibility where he may inaugurate some of his theoretical ideas and put them into actual practice, then the possibilities become very serious. That is our problem here.

I recognize that when the President of the United States announced the new deal, without specifying what it would be, it was quite natural for him to bring to his aid those in whom he had confidence. In order that he might be informed on money and financial matters, he brought one group of experts; and so we have the Warrens and the Rogerses. In connection with the consideration of agriculture, he brought another group, and so we have the Tugwells and others; and in the consideration of questions involving what ought to be done toward the rehabilitation and regimentation of industry, he brought another group of young men. The President is not to be faulted for that; but when bringing a college professor to indicate what ought to be done as to agriculture, there ought to have been a sharp differentiation between the mere theorist whose function was teaching, without reference to whether what he taught as a theory was true or not—his function being to train the mind of the pupil—and the man who stands upon principles which are well accepted and which have been worked out in actual practice.

Mr. President, at a time such as this we are apt to seize upon theories that are untried. Depressions are not the time to try experiments, although they afford a fertile opportunity for every sort of nostrum that can be offered. As in the case of socialism, so long as there is prosperity within our midst, socialism cannot grow, but as soon as depression comes, socialism finds its field. That is what we now see.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Ohio has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

As in legislative session,

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 9620. An act to improve housing conditions; to provide employment; to provide for the insurance of mortgages; to insure the savings in savings and loan associations and similar institutions; to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, the Federal Reserve Act, and the Farm Credit Act of 1933; and for other purposes; and

H.J.Res. 365. Joint resolution to amend the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, as amended.

REXFORD G. TUGWELL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the nomination of Rexford G. Tugwell to be Under Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I do not hope to make any substantial contribution to this debate. The question has been well covered, and I think every Member of the Senate probably has decided how his vote will be cast. Senators are anxious to vote and to proceed with the transaction of other business. I think everyone familiar with the situation here understands that when the votes shall be counted Dr. Tugwell will have from 20 to 30 majority and his nomination will be confirmed. It is likely that nothing which may now be said will change a single vote. I am therefore reluctant to take any time.

However, there is one phase of the situation as to which, as a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I believe I should make a statement in fairness and in justice both to Dr. Tugwell and to other representatives of the Department of Agriculture.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrn] has repeatedly stated—he has stated it on the floor and in public speeches—that one of his objections to the confirmation of Dr. Tugwell was a public statement by him in which he designated proposed amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act as "clarifying amendments." The implication has been drawn that by reason of the use of the word "clarifying" Dr. Tugwell has sought to impose upon members of the Committee on Agriculture and upon the Members of Congress, because, under the construction of the Senator from Virginia, the amendments are more than "clarifying."

That seems to be a most technical and narrow construction of the English language and a hypercritical criticism of the use of terms, and while frankly I think there is more in the proposed amendments than mere clarification, it seems to me indeed strange that a Member of the Senate should base his criticism and his objection to the confirmation of a nomination to high office upon that ground.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. I know the Senator from Alabama does not ! want to do me an injustice.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I certainly do not. Mr. BYRD. All I said was that Dr. Tugwell had given out a public interview in which he stated that-

The amendments would permit us to continue to do what we are already doing, and if we should get a setback in court we would have to stop doing certain things under certain circum-

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course the Senator said that, but that is not all he said.

Mr. BYRD. I said that the officials of the Department of Agriculture had said the amendments were clarifying, and in the interview of Dr. Tugwell to which I referred he had said that the amendments "would permit us to do what we are already doing." I say if that is true, then he is exceeding the authority given him by Congress.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator has made no charge against Dr. Tugwell for the use of the word "clarifying." Is that correct?

Mr. BYRD. If the Senator will read the RECORD of last Saturday, he will see that I said then that by reason of Dr. Tugwell's reply to my letter, in which he said "we are merely continuing to do what we have already done", he was exceeding his authority, and therefore I could not vote for his confirmation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is one ground the Senator has interposed, but I have asked directly if he made any charge against him for using the word "clarifying" in a misleading

Mr. BYRD. I say that not only Dr. Tugwell but Chester Davis, and other officials of the Department, have stated the amendments are merely clarifying, when as a matter of fact they are not clarifying.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is what I wanted brought out. The Senator admits it.

Mr. BYRD. I cannot permit the Senator from Alabama to place me in a false position before the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no desire to do so.

Mr. BYRD. My statement with respect to the matter is in the RECORD of last Saturday when I published the reply of Dr. Tugwell to the letter I had written him.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is no occasion on earth to draw any implications of deception or misleading conduct against Dr. Tugwell on account of the use of the word "clarifying." If my memory serves me aright, such an implication has been drawn. The word "clarifying" was brought into the case by Secretary Wallace in his first statement before the committee, in which he said:

The amendments propose to clarify and make more explicit the powers already exercised in behalf of the farmers under this act.

The same statement was made by Mr. Chester Davis and the same statement was made by the attorney for the Department long before Dr. Tugwell made any declaration upon the subject as carried in the newspapers, which since that time has been the basis of the criticism against Dr. Tugwell.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. CUTTING. In order to substantiate what the Senator has said, may I invite his attention to the following quotation from what the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd] said on Friday last:

This question that I am discussing involves the good faith of Dr. Tugwell and the Secretary of Agriculture in saying to the people of this land that they are asking for clarifying amend-ments, when in fact these amendments confer great additional authority upon the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I cannot yield. My time is so limited.

Mr. BYRD. Will the Senator from New Mexico read what I said subsequent to that statement?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I decline to yield further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama declines to yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the suggestion having been made that someone connected with the Department has misused the word and misinformed or misled Members of Congress is not justified by the conduct of the officials of the Department of Agriculture. Secretary Wallace, Mr. Davis, and the attorney for the Department came before the committee. The committee held open public hearings for 4 days. We then went into executive session, and my recollection is we were in executive session 2 days more, with officials of the Department attending the meetings, explaining from time to time when called upon for information about the reasons for particular amendments. Every word in the proposed amendments was given careful attention by the committee, and full deliberation and full discussion was had, with perfect frankness on the part of the officials of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Alabama will recall that the committee first prepared an amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act. The amendment which the committee had prepared was discussed with Mr. Davis and the attorney from the Department. They explained to us the full purport of the amendment which they had prepared, and what would be the effect of the amendment we offered. which was limited. No one in the committee was misled at all.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Not in any sense of the word.

Mr. HATCH. After that explanation the committee dropped further consideration of the amendment which the committee had drafted, and adopted the amendment which had been prepared by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct, and that was done after full explanation and discussion with the representatives of the Department.

Mr. President, in the first place, Dr. Tugwell never came before the committee. I do not know why the matter has been brought into the discussion. So far as the committee is concerned, he had nothing to do with the preparation or advocacy of the proposed Agricultural Adjustment Act amendments. How that matter got into the discussion of the case I am unable to understand, upon any basis of fairness or justice to Dr. Tugwell, even from the standpoint of those who are critical of the proposed amendments.

It has been said that one ground of objection to Dr. Tugwell is the fact that he proposed to continue doing things under the Agricultural Adjustment Act which he knew the Department was not justified in doing under that act. I deny any such statement. Dr. Tugwell made no such statement. There is nothing in the record in this case upon which such an inference can fairly be based.

On the contrary, when charged by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrn] with proposing to continue doing such things which the Department was not authorized under the law to do, Dr. Tugwell, in the open hearing, as shown by the printed record of the hearing, said they believed they were justified in doing everything that had been done; that they believed the Congress so understood when the original act was passed, and that the chief reason now for desiring the amendments was because certain lawyers had raised questions which involved the power of the Department to do things which they had done. But Dr. Tugwell proceeded to point out that in the five cases which had gone to the courts and which had been fully argued by counsel and decided by the courts, every one of the five decisions was favorable to the exercise of the power which the Department of Agriculture had sought to exercise.

Mr. President, I submit it is a far-fetched conclusion to assert that because questions had been raised and because, out of an abundance of caution and prudence, the Department desired to eliminate with certainty the arguments and objections which had been made against the exercise of these powers. I submit that does not justify any reasonable or fair ground for voting against the confirmation of Dr. Tugwell. If Secretary Wallace or Mr. Davis or the attorney for the Department came here for confirmation, the confirmation of his nomination might well be opposed because forsooth he was acting under advice that his actions were justified under the law.

Here is the same man whom the Senate confirmed a little more than a year ago by unanimous vote to perform the same duties he will perform if confirmed upon this occasion.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator has just admitted tacitly that the only purpose in the creation of this office is to increase Dr. Tugwell's salary.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have made no such admission, none whatever, directly or tacitly, and the Senator ought to know it.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator said Dr. Tugwell, if confirmed, would perform exactly the same functions he is now performing. Therefore, the only difference that can possibly be found in the situation is that the purpose is to bring about an increase of salary for Dr. Tugwell, and that, too, in these times when the compensation of World War veterans—

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, my time is so limited that I cannot have it taken up with an argument like that, which does not need an answer. It answers itself.

Mr. CLARK. Of course, the Senator cannot answer it. That is the reason why he will not yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Senator will give me 2 minutes more time, I will answer it.

Mr. CLARK. I shall be glad to take the floor at the conclusion of the Senator's remarks and yield him 2 minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. All right; I thank the Senator. I will do it then. I shall be glad to do it.

Mr. President, in the first place, I am glad Dr. Tugwell is to get a promotion and an increase in his salary, because I believe his faithful, conscientious, efficient services in the Department of Agriculture, giving his time, giving his talents. giving the benefit of his long training and study in agricultural questions, deserve consideration of that character where it is consistent with the public interest and within reasonableness to do what is proposed to be done. But, Mr. President, since the inauguration of Mr. Roosevelt the activities of the Department of Agriculture have been increased probably more than those of any other department of the Government. True and faithful to his declarations and his philosophy that our recovery must be based upon the rescue of agriculture in this country, President Roosevelt has, by the legislation proposed by him and enacted by Congress, set on foot numerous agencies to endeavor, at least, to bring benefits and advantages to all classes of agriculture in this

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Give me 2 minutes.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, of course the Senator from Alabama did not comply with the terms of my request by yielding to me to finish my statement; but I shall be very glad to yield to him to conclude this very eloquent defense of Dr. Tugwell in my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri is recognized in his own right.

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am proceeding now, I will say, in good faith to answer the Senator's question as to why this office was created.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator did not permit me to conclude my question, but cut me off by a refusal to yield further. Now, if the Senator wishes to conclude his eloquent defense I shall be glad to permit him to do so in my time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I thank my good friend from Missouri very much.

Mr. President, while it is entirely immaterial, since it is now written into the law, I am proceeding to explain the reasons for the creation of this office. Dr. Tugwell stated that he was not consulted about it. Dr. Tugwell stated that he was not even informed that he was to be appointed; but the Secretary of Agriculture came before the committee and pointed out what I was describing when my time expired, namely, the very great increase in the activities of the Department of Agriculture.

I am not now discussing whether the expansion of the Department's activities was wise or unwise. I am dealing with the facts, with the administration of the agencies that have been set up, and under which a bona fide effort is being made, at least, to benefit agriculture in this country. It was pointed out that every other department of the Government had more Assistants than the great Department of Agriculture, with more employees, with more activities, with more far-flung responsibilities than almost all the other departments combined. Even the Department of Labor had more than two Assistant Secretaries, I believe. Some departments have three and four, and perhaps five. Here was this great Department standing as it stood back in the early days, when agriculture was given no substantial recognition in this country, with one assistant alone, with only two persons-the Secretary and the Assistant Secretary-authorized to sign official papers relative to the activities of that great Department.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I think the Senator has used the 2 minutes which I promised to give him.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not blame the Senator for wanting to cut me off.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator did not permit me to state my question. The Senator, I think, has unwittingly not only answered my question but corroborated my remarks with which I interrupted his speech.

The only purpose of this species of legislation, as it appears from the Senator's own statement, is to increase the salary of Dr. Tugwell. If it had been necessary for the Department of Agriculture to have further Assistant Secretaries, a proposition to that effect might have been sent in in ordinary course, and might have been acted on in the usual way by the Congress. That was not done, because that would not have increased the salary of Dr. Tugwell. The creation of the offices of additional Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture would have left Dr. Tugwell drawing exactly the same salary he was already drawing as Assistant Secretary of Agriculture.

A recommendation for the creation of the office of Under Secretary was made and referred, under the rules of the Senate, to the proper committee having jurisdiction over it—the committee of which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead] is a distinguished member, and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris], and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Cutting], and other Senators who have spoken today on behalf of this nominee. Before the committee had even had a chance to act on the matter, surreptitiously, and in violation of the rules of the Senate, it was brought in here and slipped over when it was known that if any notice had been given, if even a reference to the subject had been made to the chairman of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter, a point of order would have been made against the amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CLARK. I gladly yield to the Senator from Georgia.
Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Missouri states that the amendment was brought in here surreptitiously and in violation of the rules of the Senate. The Senator from Missouri is a very able parliamentarian. For a long time he served as the distinguished Parliamentarian of the House of Representatives. Does the Senator from Missouri think this amendment was adopted in violation of the rules of | also sufficiently involved and sufficiently erudite that it the Senate?

Mr. CLARK. I say that when the Committee on Appropriations go outside their jurisdiction, and by committee action authorize the chairman of the subcommittee to offer an amendment in this body which is known to every member of the committee to be subject to a point of order, they are violating the rules of the Senate unless they make public announcement of the fact before the amendment is offered. I not only say that but I adhere to it.

Mr. RUSSELL. But there was no violation of the rules of the Senate. Under the rules of the Senate, any amendment can be offered to an appropriation bill; but it is subject to a point of order, which can be made by any individual Member of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK. Of course, that is perfectly true. I say to the Senator, however, that in my judgment, it is exceedingly bad practice for the Committee on Appropriations to transgress on the legislative jurisdiction of other committees, and to bring in propositions and offer them here as committee amendments without notice to the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell] on another occasion explained fully the history of the amendment creating the office of Under Secretary of Agriculture. In my judgment there is no justification for the implication and the assertion which the Senator from Missouri has made that the amendment was brought in here and "slipped over." It was proposed by the Senator from Georgia. No objection was made to it. It was voted in by the Senate just as hundreds, aye, thousands of other amendments have been adopted to various general appropriation bills.

We pass measures here every day by unanimous consent. Yesterday we passed 330 bills and resolutions by unanimous consent. Any Senator could have objected to the consideration of any bill that was passed; and I think it is an injustice to the committee to have the statement made that anything was "slipped over."

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I cannot permit the Senator to make a speech in my time. My time is very limited.
Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I thank the Senator for

Mr. CLARK. I am just as familiar as the Senator from Arkansas is with the fact that anything can be done in the Senate by unanimous consent. On the other hand, I submit that bringing in a substantive proposition of this sort, which raped the jurisdiction of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and putting it on an appropriation bill without any notice, was, I think, a violation of correct parliamentary practice.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President-

Mr. CLARK. Now I desire to make some remarks. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator if I have time before my time expires.

I simply desire to say that when the roll is called I intend to vote against the confirmation of Dr. Tugwell. I intend to do that not because of any examination of the numerous published books, magazine articles, syndicated newspaper articles, or other authorized interviews with Dr. Tugwell. because, unlike the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], I have not taken the trouble to read through them. As a matter of fact, the only one of Dr. Tugwell's published articles or speeches that I have taken the trouble to read through was the one inserted in the RECORD the other day at the suggestion of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore]; and I am perfectly frank to say that that speech was so involved that when I got through reading it I did not know what he was talking about. [Laughter.] It is entirely possible that that speech may have meant what he apparently said he meant. It may have meant what the Senator from North Carolina thought he meant, what the Senator from Virginia thought he meant, what I thought he meant; but it was to enter into fixing this rate, which involved their business might possibly honestly be subject to the construction which Dr. Tugwell later put on it in his testimony before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which on its surface appeared to be a recanting of the doctrine expressed in his speech.

I intend to vote against Dr. Tugwell's confirmation, Mr. President, on an entirely different ground.

I agree with what has been said here by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] and other Senators to the effect that in the Senate's action on nominations by the President the President must necessarily and properly be given a very wide latitude. I adhere entirely to that proposition. On the other hand, I also adhere to the view that when the framers of the Constitution included in the Constitution the provision that nominations for certain offices should be made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, they did not intend that to be a meaningless phrase; they meant that the Senate, in proper cases, should exercise some independent view of the matter.

Therefore, Mr. President, I adhere to the view that where a man is proposed for a most important office whose expressed policies and indicated course of action are such that a Senator sworn on his own oath believes them to be dangerous or inimical to the welfare of the United States, it is his duty under his oath of office to oppose him.

That was the view taken by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Cutting], and the other Senators when they opposed the confirmation of Mr. Chief Justice Hughes for the Chief Justiceship of the Supreme Court of the United States. In that case, as in this, no question was raised as to the character of the nominee; no question was raised as to the ability of the nominee; and no question was raised as to the good faith of the nominee. Senators did not believe that the course of conduct which the nominee had theretofore indicated was such as to justify them in voting for his confirmation, and they therefore voted against it.

Such is my position as to Dr. Tugwell. I have no personal animus whatever against Dr. Tugwell. I have said frankly that I have not read the numerous books and magazine articles for which he is being criticized, but I did have a personal experience with Dr. Tugwell, not as a matter of theory, when he was expressing himself before a scientific body or an economic body of some sort, but, in the exercise of his official duty as Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, I heard Dr. Tugwell enunciate a doctrine which, to my mind, under our present Constitution and under our present laws, showed him to be a dangerous public official.

I had occasion, a few days after the present administration came into office, to escort to the Department of Agriculture a group of constituents of mine who were protesting against a rate which had been put into effect 2 days before the late Secretary Hyde left office, a rate having to do with charges to be made by a stockyard in the Middle West; a rate which men whom I had known and in whom I had confidence for more than 30 years alleged to be confiscatory; a rate which, it was alleged, had been put into effect by Secretary Hyde 2 days before he left office out of pure revenge for certain action these people had taken in the course of the last political campaign.

It was not my business to try the case for my constituents. I may say that the complainants involved not only the old-line members of the livestock exchange at East St. Louis but also the largest farm cooperative in my State, one of the largest farm cooperatives in the United States. As I have said, it was not part of my business to try the case for them. It was part of my business to see that they got a day in court if it was possible for them to have it.

I took them to the Department. That was the first time I ever met Dr. Tugwell, and it was the only time I ever had any conversation with him. In the course of the proceeding the attorney for the protestants remarked that in the whole course of the hearing it had been absolutely impossible for them to find out even the elements which were try to develop, by proper questions, even the elements that were to go into fixing the rate, a bureaucratic solicitor from the Department of Agriculture would object, and an examiner appointed by the Department of Agriculture would sustain the objection on the ground that it involved a Department secret. That seemed, to my view, a very severe attack on the whole proceeding, and, to my utter amazement, Dr. Tugwell said-and, as I say, this was the first and last conversation I ever had with him-

I cannot see that in a system of national planning either the capital investment or the cost of operation has anything to do with fixing a rate.

Mr. Secretary, it seems to me that if you were engaged in any sort of business, particularly a business like this, whether as an old-line operator or as the representative of a cooperative, the amount it was necessary for you to invest to carry on the business and the necessary cost of the operation of rendering the service which you were supposed to render would have a great deal to do with the price at which you could afford to perform this service.

He said:

I still cannot see that in a system of national planning either the capital investment or the cost of operation has anything to do with it.

Mr. President, in the case of a man who is invested with this tremendous power, under our system, I hold that to be subversive of the Constitution of the United States and of the statute under which he is operating. Therefore I shall vote against the confirmation.

Mr. RUSSELL obtained the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, inasmuch as at least 10 minutes of the time of the Senator from Missouri was taken up by other Senators, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Missouri be given at least 5 more minutes.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I have concluded my remarks. I have nothing further to say.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 852. An act to amend section 24 of the Trading with the Enemy Act, as amended;

S. 1735. An act to amend an act approved May 14, 1926 (44 Stat. 555), entitled "An act authorizing the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota to submit claims to the Court of Claims'

S. 3147. An act to amend the act approved June 28, 1932 (47 Stat.L. 337); and

S. 3723. An act to amend the Mineral Lands Leasing Act of 1920 with reference to oil- or gas-prospecting permits and leases.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8912) to amend section 35 of the Criminal Code of the United States.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2248) to protect trade and commerce against interference by violence, threats, coercion, or intimidation, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

REXFORD G. TUGWELL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the nomination of Rexford G. Tugwell to be Under Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri charges upon the floor of the Senate that the amendment creating the office of Under Secretary of Agriculture, the nominee for which is now under consideration, was enacted into law through surreptitious means. That statement, and the implications therein contained, are wholly without foundation and wholly untrue, as will be borne out by the records of the Senate, which are printed not only for the benefit of the Members of the Senate but for the benefit of the people of the United States generally.

The Congressional Record for March 14 of this year will show that this amendment was offered on the floor of the and financial life. They said that every time they would | Senate when the Senate was regularly convened in session. The Members of the Senate not engaged in other duties were present in their places, and the amendment was adopted, and no point was raised against it.

Mr. President, it comes with ill grace for one who is a boasted parliamentarian to come in at this late date, 2 or 3 months after this action of the Senate, and complain that he had no notice as to the amendment, when he boasts of his parliamentary prowess and rises continually on the floor of the Senate to urge points of order.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from Missouri asserts that he has never uttered any boast, either publicly or privately, of being a dictator or a parliamentary expert.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator has offered more parliamentary points of order since he has been a Member of this body than all of the other Senators combined.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, that is not true; but I will say that I could offer a parliamentary point of order at this time if I cared to do so.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes. The Senator from Missouri was not in his place, where he belonged, to offer a point of order at the time the amendment was pending, but he comes in 3 months later and says he did not know what the other Members of the Senate were doing, and did not find out about it until the name of Dr. Tugwell came before the Senate.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I am perfectly willing to submit to the judgment of the Members of this body as to whether I have not been in my place three times as much as has the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Georgia does not come in and whine when he cannot vote on matters. If I have been compelled to go to the various Departments of the Government to present the views of my constituents or to handle matters for them when matters have been voted on here on which I desired to register my views, I did not blame the Senate for not standing still and waiting for me to get here.

The Senator from Missouri contends that he had no notice that this amendment would be offered. Does the Senator think that the Committee on Appropriations should have sent him an engraved or embossed notice that it was going to have the Senate vote on March 14 on an amend-

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator contend that the Committee on Appropriations had any jurisdiction of this subject matter?

Mr. RUSSELL. I contend that the Committee on Appropriations as well as the Senate took jurisdiction of it.

Mr. CLARK. And raped the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That is exactly my contention.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the amendment was adopted, and appeared in the Congressional Record. I realize that perhaps the Senator from Missouri could not have been in his place; but the Senator from Missouri knows, and knows far better than I do, that under the rules of the Senate at any time within 2 days thereafter a motion could have been made to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

There is no question but that Members of the Senate who cannot be here have the RECORDS of this body available for their information. We have one copy of the Congressional RECORD placed upon our desks, which we find when we arrive in the Senate. We find one at our front doors in the morning, and still another in our offices; and if the Senator from Missouri was not on the floor, he could have read the RECORD, and he would have found printed the amendment; and had he raised any question as to the fact that he could not be present and had been deprived of being heard upon the amendment, he could have made a motion for reconsideration of the vote. As the Senator in charge of the bill, I would have interposed no objection.

offered. The Senator says he had no notice. This was a farm bill, providing funds for the Department of Agriculture. The Senator from Missouri comes from a great agricultural State. The hearings before the Senate committee were printed and available for his information, full from end to end of discussion relative to the creation of this new office in the Department of Agriculture, available to any Member of the Senate: and if the Senator had desired to read the hearings, he could have seen that the matter was fully discussed by the Secretary of Agriculture and by other witnesses.

I have absolutely no apologies to make for the amendment. It was adopted under the rules of the Senate by the Senate itself, and I was no more enthusiastic about it than were some Members who now complain.

The hearings will show that I had pointed out to the subcommittee, and also to the Secretary of Agriculture, that the amendment was subject to a point of order, that any member of the Senate who desired to kill it could do so by one single objection, and that after that was pointed out to the subcommittee, they recommended it to the full committee, the full committee instructed me to offer the amendment on the floor, I did so, and it was agreed to.

Then the Senator from Missouri comes in and attempts to take the untenable position that he opposes the nomination of Dr. Tugwell because of the manner in which that amendment was adopted.

Mr. President, I hold no brief for Dr. Tugwell, but I do say that any opposition to the confirmation of any man appointed by the President of the United States should be based upon more tenable ground than the manner in which the amendment was adopted by the Senate. Surely Dr. Tugwell was not here to cast a spell over the Senate and the Senator from Missouri when the amendment was adopted.

Mr. President, on the subcommittee dealing with this question was the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who was a member of the Committee on Agriculture: the distinguished senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] was a member of that committee by virtue of his rank upon the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry; the minority leader, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary], a former Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was also a member of the subcommittee as was the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. Therefore the Committee on Agriculture had the representation of at least four members on the subcommittee and two members on the conference committee which worked out details of the bill with the Members of the House. I do not think Senators should come in here 2 or 3 months later and say "I did not have the vaguest idea that this office was to be created", when we find in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on page 577, that the matter was debated at great length on the floor of the House, and that the leader of the minority in the House, the Representative from New York, objected to the Senate amendment there because he said Dr. Tugwell would be appointed. It was still not too late then, if anyone followed the proceedings of Congress. to have used the proper parliamentary methods and brought the matter back before the Senate.

Therefore, Mr. President, I resent the statement that there was anything surreptitious or underhanded or out of order about it. As chairman of the subcommittee which handled this matter, which reported this amendment, I refuse to assume responsibility for the negligence of the Senator from Missouri when he comes in 3 months later and discovers what the body of which he is a Member has done in the creation of this office.

So much for that. On the pending question I shall vote for the confirmation of Dr. Tugwell. I do so, Mr. President, because in my judgment no reason has been presented here which would debar him from discharging the duties of Under Secretary of Agriculture. His name was submitted by the President of the United States. If any of these dire predictions which the Senators have made upon this floor no governmental interference with commercial, industrial,

I cared nothing about the amendment when it was | should come to pass I have enough confidence in the President of the United States to believe that Dr. Tugwell's position with the Government would be terminated immediately and that another would be appointed to fill his place.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to detain the Senate for long. On May 30, 1933, soon after the publication of the book by Dr. Tugwell, The Industrial Discipline and the Governmental Arts, I discussed the subject matter of that text in a speech on the floor of the Senate. I made certain forecasts at that time. I supplemented those remarks several days later on June 10, and from what has transpired since that time down to the present justifies my observations, Mr. President, that our Government, from the point of view of continued delegation of absolute authority to a chief executive, has been placed on a parity with the Governments of Germany, Italy, or even

Mr. President, if we are to compare the transformation that has taken place in our Government since March 9, 1933, resulting in the overthrow of the democracy that was enthroned under the principles of Thomas Jefferson, it would compare favorably, so far as dictatorial control is concerned, with the Hitler form of government in Germany. the Mussolini government in Italy, or, still better, the Russian form of government by Lenin.

We have all but been completely Russianized. We are at the present time in the Mensheviki period of the "revolution" with Dr. Tugwell as the prophet.

Under the authority already granted or usurped, the stage has been set for the reign of the Bolsheviks. No further act of Congress would be needed to be completely on a par with the Soviets, excepting the federalizing of all our schools and the closing of the churches.

When I cast my vote upon this nomination, after 5 years of service in this body, it will be, with one exception, the first negative vote I have cast against the confirmation of any nomination sent to the Senate by either the former President or the present Chief Executive.

Mr. President, I stayed in the hearings of the committee only for a brief period of time, due to the crowded condition of the room and because of the many Senators on the committee and Senators who were not members of the committee who desired to interrogate Dr. Tugwell. I did not undertake to ask him any questions.

How chameleon-like was the transformation of the witness, Dr. Tugwell, in his devotion to the fundamental laws of our land as compared with Dr. Tugwell, the author, in dealing with our Constitution. The position that he took as a witness as compared with the position that he took in his texts, together with what has taken place in this Government in conformity with his ideas and principles, justifies the position that I took a year ago and that I take today, and when my name is called I must vote "nay' against the confirmation of his appointment.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, if the doctrine preached by some of those who oppose Dr. Tugwell's confirmation should generally prevail in this Chamber, only a crawfish or a lightning bug could ever hope for senatorial approval. The first is a simon-pure reactionary which travels backward habitually, heedless of necessity and regardless of destination. The second systematically illuminates that which is past and revels in the darkness of the future. It is aptly described in the following doggerel:

> The lightning bug is a wondrous sight, But you'd think it has no mind, It pumps around in the darkest night With its headlight on behind.

Mr. President, fortunately for the country the Senate has not adopted and will never apply the crawfish or lightningbug standard of qualification to a Roosevelt appointee.

We have today learned that Dr. Tugwell has committed the unpardonable sins of denouncing the doctrine of laissez faire and declaring that business which is founded upon that reactionary doctrine should be modified or destroyed. Because Dr. Tugwell opposes the theory that there shall be or financial affairs, he is denounced as a dangerous radical who would tear the Constitution to tatters. Once more we hear the familiar cry of the worshippers of the past that the Bolshevik wolf is coming and that poor old Uncle Sam is about to be devoured. But false alarms have ceased to terrify the Senate. And who is here so benighted as to declare that he is in favor of the business practices of the wicked days of old, the practices that impoverished a province to enrich a prince; that glorified a single master by making a thousand slaves; that enthroned plutocracy and made millions as poor as Lazarus?

Who is here that will say by his vote this afternoon that he wants to go back to the dark days of the Hoover disaster and the laissez faire theories which prevailed throughout this country during that most blighting period in the history of the Nation? If such be present, he should vote against Dr. Tugwell, who is not only a great humanitarian but an outstanding artificer of the new deal, the deal which under the direction of one of the greatest of Presidents has in 15 months banished starvation, employed millions of the idle, rehabilitated business, and restored happiness and confidence to a distressed and discouraged people.

Those who vote against Dr. Tugwell because he discards the old formulas of disaster and believes in experimentation in behalf of progress and preaches a new gospel of success will but supply an additional but wholly unnecessary proof of the fact that history repeats itself as certainly as the day follows the night. Four hundred years before Christ, Socrates preached a new gospel for humanity, and his ignorant envious neighbors poisoned him and thus rewarded him for his inestimable service to the world.

Later, the greatest of all political philosophers appeared on earth, taught the doctrine of service and sacrifice, demonstrated the virtue of our doing unto others as we would have others do unto us, and pointed the way to happiness on Earth below and endless bliss in Heaven above. For His service He was nailed to the cross and a spear was thrust into His side.

More than fourteen hundred years later a great Italian decided that he ought to discover a new world. Columbus braved all the dangers of uncharted seas and all the horrors of superstition and gave us the greatest country beneath the stars. As a result of his discovery we have the United States of America. But Columbus, as a reward for his service, was confined in a dungeon and loaded with chains.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. I think the Senator ought to include old Galileo because he made it possible for Columbus to safely sail over the sea.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, Galileo and hosts of other great discoverers and inventors, from the twilight hour of creation's morning to the present moment, have been crucified for helping to make the world a better place in which to live. The man who accumulates hundreds of millions rides in a yacht, maintains mansions in both hemispheres, and dodges his taxes is exalted, while the benefactor is humiliated and persecuted, and the unfortunate who steals a loaf of bread to satisfy his hunger is sent to jail. The people of the United States are tired of that kind of government. Thank God, Dr. Tugwell does not endorse it.

Mr. President, in reaction, and retreat, and not in experimentation, in an awful crisis like that which has jeopardized the civilization of the world for the last 4 years, is the real menace to mankind and human happiness. From the Garden of Eden to the Garden of Gethsemane, from Calvary's crimsoned cross to the bloody banks of the Somme and the Marne, not reaction, not retreat, not cowardice, but progress and courage clothed with the sunlight and armed with the sword of truth have fascinated the eyes, charmed the ears, and delighted the hearts of the children of men.

Mr. President, I refuse to vote for another crucifixion. I refuse to participate in compelling one of the President's most useful friends to drink a bowl of hemlock. I refuse to help bind a Columbus of the new deal with chains.

I shall vote against the crucifixion, against the hemlock and the chains, and for Dr. Tugwell's confirmation. My act in so doing will be to me in future years—

A rainbow to the storms of life! The evening beam that smiles the clouds away, And tints tomorrow with prophetic ray.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Rexford Guy Tugwell to be Under Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let us have the yeas and navs.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD (when Mr. GLASS' name was called). My colleague the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber. I am authorized to say that were he present he would vote in the negative.

Mr. FESS (when Mr. McNary's name was called). The senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. He has a general pair with the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran]. I am not advised how either of these Senators would vote were they present.

Mr. METCALF (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. Tydings]. As he is not present, I must withhold my vote. Were I allowed to vote, I should vote "nay." I am advised that if present the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Tydings] would vote "yea."

Mr. REYNOLDS (when his name was called). I have a special pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass], who is necessarily absent. I am informed that if he were present he would vote in the negative. Were I permitted to vote, I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed] who is detained by illness. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. Trammell] and vote "yea." I am advised that if present the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed] would vote "nay."

Mr. WALCOTT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. McAdoo] who is detained by illness. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that I am informed and authorized to state to the Senate that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuys] has a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Keyes]. I am not advised how either of these Senators would vote.

I am authorized likewise to announce the pair between the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin]. I am authorized to add that were the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] present he would vote "yea", and were the Senator from Vermont present he would vote "nay."

I announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Tydings] was suddenly called from the Chamber on official business; that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran] is detained on public business; that the Senator from Florida [Mr. Trammell] is necessarily detained from the Chamber; that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Thomas] was called to the department on official business; that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Coolidge] is necessarily detained.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I am advised that if present the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Thomas] would vote "yea." I also desire to announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] is absent attending the Democratic preprimary convention in Massachusetts.

Mr. HEBERT. The senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed] is absent from the Senate on account of illness. His pair has been stated. If the Senator from Pennsylvania were present he would vote "nay."

So, the nomination of Rexford G. Tugwell was confirmed. Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, in view of the delay that has occurred in disposing of the nomination of Mr. Tugwell, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the action of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Felthan Watson, of Missouri, to be district attorney, United States Court for China, to succeed George Sellett.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Edwin G. Moon, of Iowa, to be United States attorney, southern district of Iowa, to succeed Robert W. Colflesh, resigned.

Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Charles H. Cox, of Georgia, to be United States marshal, northern district of Georgia, to succeed Louis H. Crawford, whose term will expire June 24, 1934.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGill in the chair). The reports will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I now ask that the Senate proceed with the call of the Executive Calendar.

TREATIES

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read Executive D, Seventythird Congress, second session, a treaty of friendship, commerce, and consular rights between the United States and the Republic of Finland, signed at Washington, February 13, 1934.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, there are a number of treaties on the calendar, and it is desired by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and other members of the committee, that an arrangement be effected for their consideration.

I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its labors today it take a recess until 10 o'clock tomorrow, and that the Senate then proceed to the consideration of the treaties in open executive session.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I talked with the Senator from Arkansas about this matter a little earlier in the day. I have just been reminded that the Republicans are to have a conference at 10 o'clock tomorrow on a matter which the Senator knows about, and which I had overlooked.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. In view of the statement of the Senator from Ohio, I will modify the request so that the rendered notable service.

The result was announced—yeas 53, nays 24, as follows: | Senate shall meet at 11 instead of 10 o'clock, and make no other change in the proposal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Arkansas as modified? The Chair hears none, and the agreement is entered into.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Clinton E. MacEachran, of Massachusetts, to be Foreign Service officer of class 4, a consul, and a secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT-SMITH W. PURDUM

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Smith W. Purdum, of Maryland, to be Fourth Assistant Postmaster General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, in connection with the confirmation of the nomination of Smith W. Purdum to be Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, I desire to make the observation that this is only the seventh time in a period of 50 years in which a man who has grown up in the Postal Service has been honored by a nomination to a distinguished position of this character.

It has seemed to me that the fact is at least worthy of mention on this floor, because the Post Office Service throughout the history of the Government, has spanned this country and has enlisted the work and services of thousands of loyal men and women. I think it only a proper recognition of the work they have been doing that the Postmaster General and the President have accorded Mr. Purdum this honor.

It may be of interest to make note of the instances in which this has been done in the past.

In 1925, Mr. Robert S. Regar was promoted from the position of Chief Clerk of the Department to that of Third Assistant Postmaster General.

In 1916 Mr. John C. Koons was promoted from the position of chief inspector to that of First Assistant Postmaster

In 1908 Mr. Joseph Stewart was promoted from a position as head of the railway-adjustment division to the position of Second Assistant Postmaster General.

In the same year Mr. Charles P. Grandfield, then chief clerk to the First Assistant Postmaster General, was himself made the First Assistant Postmaster General.

In 1889 Mr. Edwin C. Madden was made Third Assistant Postmaster General.

In 1883 Mr. Henry Lyman, then chief clerk in the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster General, was made Second Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. Purdum was one of the four inspectors in the Postal Service who, at the outset of this administration, were made deputies to the four Assistant Postmasters General.

Mr. Vincent C. Burke was made deputy to the first assistant, Mr. Jesse M. Donaldson was made deputy to the second assistant, Mr. Roy M. North was made deputy to the third assistant, and Mr. Purdum was appointed deputy to the fourth assistant.

Each of these four gentlemen, cooperating with his chief and with the Postmaster General, and with Mr. K. P. Aldrich as Chief Inspector, has given the Post Office Department a most excellent administration, and it seemed to me only proper that some recognition of that fact should be made here upon the floor.

Mr. Purdum has made a remarkable record in the Post Office service.

Beginning as railway mail clerk at the age of 21, he has progressed steadily through the various grades in the Department. During the World War he was post-office inspector, in charge of the Washington, D.C., division and

The bureau of which he now becomes the head has changed the entire Post Office plant. In the past, curiously enough, post-office buildings were always under the care of the Treasury Department. It was not until President Roosevelt, by Executive order, made the transfer that the Post Office Department took over the custody of its own buildings. That work is under the jurisdiction of the Fourth Assistant.

I wish to congratulate the President and the Postmaster General on the elevation of Mr. Purdum. It is an example which I hope will be followed many times in the future. It affords me pleasure and gratification to give testimony here to the high regard I have for the experts of the Postal Service.

THE JUDICIARY

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of George Murray Hulbert to be United States district judge, southern district

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Harlan W. Rippey to be United States district judge, western district of New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified at once of the confirmation of Mr. Hulbert and Mr. Rippey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be entered, and the President will be immediately notified.

HAWAII

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of James L. Coke, of Hawaii, to be chief justice of the Supreme Court, Territory of Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Harold E. Stafford, of Hawaii, to be circuit judge, first circuit, Territory of Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of James Wesley Thompson, of Hawaii, to be circuit judge, third circuit, Territory of Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Delbert E. Metzger, of Hawaii, to be circuit judge, fourth circuit, Territory of Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Miss Carrick H. Buck to be circuit judge, fifth circuit, Territory of Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Seba C. Huber to be United States district judge, district of Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Otto F. Heine to be United States marshal, district of Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk read sundry nominations of postmasters. Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the postmaster nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the postmaster nominations are confirmed en bloc.

THE ARMY

The Chief Clerk read sundry nominations for appointments and promotions in the Army.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask unanimous consent that the Army nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Army nominations are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business. The motion was agreed to.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting copy of a resolution adopted by the Municipal Council of Piddig, Province of Ilocos Norte, P.I., expressing its gratitude for enactment of Public Law No. 127, Seventy-third Congress, known as the "New Philippine Independence Act", which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table.

CLAIM OF WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO. AGAINST UNITED STATES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, his report and recommendation concerning the claim of Western Union Telegraph Co. against the United States, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, favoring the passage of Senate bill 3231, providing a retirement system for railroad employees, which were ordered to lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate numerous telegrams in the nature of petitions from sundry citizens and organizations of the States of Colorado, Kansas, Nebraska, and North Dakota, praying for the prompt passage of Senate bill 3231, providing a retirement system for railroad employees, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from the Tax and Rent Payers Association. Charles L. Fluck, chairman, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying that "Congress shall not adjourn until the Wagner billthe original bill, not amended-shall be enacted into law, 'if it takes all summer'", which was ordered to lie on the

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a memorial from the board of directors of the Radio Manufacturers' Association, Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill 2926, the so-called "labor disputes bill", which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate letters in the nature of memorials from Frank Springer and officers of the Ferd Staffel Co., Alamo Bag & Burlap Co., and Southwestern Jacket Manufacturing Co., all of San Antonio, Tex., remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill 2926, the so-called labor disputes bill", and also proposed amendment of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND presented the memorial of Betsy Ross Council, No. 88, Daughters of America, Woodside, Long Island, N.Y., remonstrating against the passage of legislation loosening immigration restrictions, especially with reference to the immigration of German Jews, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Parliament of the Community Councils of the city of New York, N.Y., favoring Government ownership of the manufacture of armaments, or, as an alternative, governmental control of the manufacture thereof, which was referred to the Special Committee on Investigation of the Munitions Industry.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Master Plumbers, Gas and Steam Fitters and Sheet Metal Workers Association, of Newburgh, N.Y., favoring the prompt enactment of legislation providing for home construction and repair, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN FOOD AND DRUGS

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in full in the RECORD and to lie on the table a resolution adopted by the Associated Manufacturers of Toilet Articles with reference to Senate bill 2800.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Senate Committee on Commerce has reported S. 2800, which is a bill relating to the regulation of food, drugs, and cosmetics and is now on the Senate Calendar; and
Whereas said bill in section 4 states that a drug shall be deemed to be adulterated (a) "If it is dangerous to health under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling thereof"; and
Whereas said bill, in section 5, provides that a cosmetic shall be deemed to be adulterated (a) "If it bears or contains any poisonous or deleterious substance in such quantity as may render it injurious to the user under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling thereof, or under such conditions of use as are in the labeling thereof, or under such conditions of use as are customary or usual"; and

Whereas every legitimate purpose of the bill will be served by protecting the public from dangerous cosmetics through provision that they shall be deemed to be adulterated if dangerous to health; and

Whereas the proposed definition in section 5 may be construed to prohibit as adulterated any cosmetic which when applied to the skin may in some circumstances in the case of some people hypersensitive to the ingredients result in irritation or injury no matter how innocuous the substance may be; and Whereas the reported definition would inevitably give rise to large numbers of civil claims and administrative complaints absolutely without foundation, based on the definition and its inter-pretation by claims attorneys to the effect that any user who can possibly assert a casual relation between some alleged injury and the use of a particular cosmetic is entitled, not only to maintain a civil action for damages, but to cause as well criminal proceeda civil action for damages, but to cause as well criminal proceedings to be instituted against the manufacturer, and make demand upon the Secretary of Agriculture that the product be suppressed; thus opening up a field where the possibilities of blackmail and nuisance actions would be unlimited and legitimate industries exposed to wholly needless and unjustified expense and litigation; and

Whereas cosmetics, since they are used only externally, do not require a more drastic definition of what is adulterated as is the case with drugs which are used both externally and internally,

whereas the definition of an adulterated cosmetic as drafted is unjust and unnecessary to the protection of health, and places in the hands of the administrative authority the arbitrary bureaucratic power of prohibiting the manufacture and sale in interstate commerce of cosmetics which are in fact in no way dangerous or injurious: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Associated Manufacturers of Toilet Articles respectfully petitions the Senate of the United States to substi-tute for the definition of an adulterated cosmetic, the same language as that used in defining what constitutes an adulterated drug, and that for the further protection of the public, section 5 of said act be amended to read as follows:

"A cosmetic shall be deemed to be adulterated: (a) If it is dangerous to health under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling thereof, or if no conditions of use are thus prescribed, then under such conditions of use as are customary or usual."

And that the secretary of this association be directed to take steps to bring this resolution to the attention of the United States Senate and have it presented to that honorable body as a petition and memorial.

A. W. WELSH, Secretary.

RECEIVERS APPOINTED BY COURTS-RECONSIDERATION AND PASSAGE OF A BILL

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, yesterday I lodged a motion to reconsider Order of Business 1464, being House bill 8544, making receivers appointed by any United States courts and authorized to conduct any business or conducting any business subject to taxes levied by the State the same as if such business were conducted by private individuals or corporations. I desire to offer the amendment, which I send to the desk, when the motion to reconsider is considered by the Senate. I have conferred with the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee and both members of the subcommittee who considered the bill, and the amendment is acceptable to them. They are for it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to have the motion to reconsider brought up at this time?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir. I lodged the motion yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed will be reconsidered.

Mr. BLACK. What is the bill? Mr. GORE. It relates to the taxation of property in the hands of a Federal receiver.

Mr. BLACK. Very well.

Mr. GORE. I now ask that the bill may be considered so that I may offer the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 2, after the word "corporation", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, however, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prohibit or prejudice the collection of any such taxes which accrued prior to the approval of this act, in the event that the United States court having final jurisdiction of the subject matter under existing law should adjudge and decide that the imposition of such taxes was a valid exercise of the taxing power certain sections of the Banking Act of 1933 and the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes, and to have it printed and lie on the table.

In connection with that I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Congressional Record a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury to the Speaker of the House of Representatives pertaining to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be printed and lie on the table, and the publication will be made as requested by the Senator.

The letter referred to is as follows:

APRIL 27, 1934.

Hon. Henry T. Rainey,

The Speaker House of Representatives.

My Dear Mr. Speaker: I have the honor to forward herewith a my Dear Mr. Speaker: I have the honor to forward herewith a draft of a bill to amend section 5153 of the Revised Statutes, designed to clarify the situation with respect to the giving of security by national banks for deposits of public moneys.

This matter has been the subject of an exhaustive study, and the enactment of the proposed legislation is recommended by the Comptroller of the Currency. I am forwarding herewith a copy of excerpts from a memorandum forwarded to me by him. If you deem it advisable, it will be appreciated if these proposals can be submitted for consideration through the appropriate channels.

Respectfully yours,

H. MORGENTHAU, Jr., Secretary of the Treasury.

Attached hereto is text of proposed amendment to section 5153 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 90), which amendment relates to the designation of depositaries of public money by the Secretary of the Treasury and the giving of security by national banking associations for deposits of public money of the United States and for various other types of deposits made by public officials, consisting of money for which they are accountable under the law by virtue of their official capacity. The essential respects in which this amendment changes the present law is in that it eliminates doubt under recent decisions as to the power of national banks to give security for the protection of deposits of public money belonging to various Government agencies or of money deposited thereby where they are accountable for such money by reason of the official capacity in which held. which held.

The amendment operates with similar effect as to deposits by officers, agents, or employees of the States, Territories, or insular possessions or any public instrumentality or agency thereof, where the depositing official is charged with the custody of and is accountable for such money by virtue of his official position. Provision is made that security heretofore given for the various types of deposits referred to shall be deemed validly given except where heretofore determined to be in relation of the second true. where heretofore determined to be in violation of the act of June 25, 1930.

There is urgent necessity for the prompt enactment of the legis-lation, due to recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United lation, due to recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, particularly two decisions rendered February 5, 1934, in City of Marion, Ill., v. Sneeden, Receiver, and Texas & Pacific Railway Co. v. Pottorff, Receiver, in which the Court took the position that national banks have no implied power to give security for deposits of public money, notwithstanding the fact that for more than 60 years national banks have been giving such security with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, in conformance to the views expressed by the Attorney General of the United States in 30 Ops. Atty. Gen. 341, to the effect that the section being amended "is more reasonably construed as a recognition of the existence of the power on the part of national banks to give security for deposits than as a grant by implication or authority to give security for Government deposits alone." A large number of national banks have been placed in the hands of receivers in the past 3 years. Almost all of these banks held deposits of public money for which security had been pledged. Millions of dollars in such deposits belonging to the Phillippine Islands, the United States Housing Corporation, and similar entities poration, United States Housing Corporation, and similar entitles were on deposit in these banks under a contract, whereby the bank had pledged collateral security therefor. These pledges were considered valid by this office and these agencies permitted to avoid loss of such deposits through realization upon the collateral held. Unless curative legislation is enacted to cover this situation, it may be the duty of this office as a matter of law to require matter under existing law should adjudge and decide that the imposition of such taxes was a valid exercise of the taxing power by the State or States, or by the civil subdivisions of the State or States imposing the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

SECURITY FOR DEPOSITS OF PUBLIC MONEYS

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present an amendment to the bill (S. 3748) to amend The same situation exists with respect to deposits of funds by the States and their various agencies. Generally speaking, there has been a preference given national banks by the depositing officials thereof. The State Treasurer of Illinois within the past 10 days has indicated he feels that he must withdraw approximately days has indicated he feels that he must withdraw approximately $54,000,000 from the national banks in Illinois, $26,000,000 of which is in two Chicago banks. The legal representatives of various drainage and irrigation districts in California have indicated that unless the law is clarified, they must withdraw some $50,000,000 from national banks in California. When one considers the total amount of such deposits in national banks all over the United States which may thus be suddenly withdrawn, and the consequent forced liquidation of assets which may be required of such banks in order to meet such withdrawals with resulting ill effect upon market conditions, it becomes imperative to avoid such result by having appropriate legislation promptly enacted eliminating the difficulty.

nating the difficulty.

I accordingly recommend that appropriate action be taken to have this amendment enacted into law.

PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION LOANS TO THE DISTRICT

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senate passed the bill (S. 3404) authorizing leans from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works for the construction of certain municipal buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The bill provides for certain public works within the District of Columbia. The measure went to the House of Representatives. In the House a number of amendments were submitted to the bill, the principal amendment being to reduce the appropriation from $20,000,000 to $10,000,000 plus. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the amendments of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3404) authorizing loans from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works for the construction of certain municipal buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which were, on page 1, line 8, to strike out "$20,-000,000" and insert "$10,750,000"; on page 1, line 9, to strike out "heretofore"; on page 2, line 2, to strike out all after "plant," down to and including "1408))," in line 6; on page 2, line 8, to strike out all after "Virginia," down to and including "schools," in line 12; on pages 2 and 3, to strike out all of section 2; on page 3, line 3, to strike out "3" and insert "2"; on page 3, line 4, to strike out all after "thereof" down to and including "2)," in line 5; on page 3, line 24, to strike out "4" and insert "3"; on page 5, line 5, after "1936." to insert "Until 70 percent or so much of said sum authorized by section 1 of this act as may be expended as therein provided shall be reimbursed to the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, with interest as provided in this section, 10 cents of the tax levied and collected upon each $100 of the assessed valuation of all real and tangible personal property subject to taxation in the District of Columbia shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of a special account for such reimbursement to the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works and shall not be available for any other purpose. The Commissioners may, in their discretion, anticipate from said special account the payments required by this act."; and on page 5, line 6, to strike out "5" and insert " 4 ".

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as it passed the Senate the bill was meritorious and entirely just. It would have enabled the District of Columbia to inaugurate certain improvements which are indispensable, among them being the removal of pollution from the Potomac River, the construction of certain schoolhouses, a tubercular hospital, and so forth. I regret to say that the House felt disinclined to approve the bill as it passed the Senate. After considerable debate the Rules Committee finally submitted a special rule under the terms of which the appropriation was limited to $10,000,000 plus. With that amendment and in that manner the bill passed the House.

I have conferred with the District Commissioners, with Members of the House, with the Park and Planning Commission, and under all the circumstances it is felt by those concerned that there is no value in prolonging the discussion of the controversy. Therefore, I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia of the Senate to move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON CRIME INVESTIGATION

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the report of the committee investigating crime conditions in the United States.

There being no objections, the report (No. 1440) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JUNE 14, 1934.

Mr. President, it will be recalled that on January 11, 1934, as chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce, popularly known as the "committee on racketeering", I introduced for the committee some 13 bills for consideration by Congress. The activities of this subcommittee were continued by Senate Resolution 196, which passed the Senate on April 20, 1934. This resolution somewhat changed the activities of the committee, authorizing it to investigate criminal practices and crimes, so that it is now known as the "committee on crime and criminal practices."

Since my report on January 11, there have been introduced some 29 additional bills all designed to close gaps in existing Federal laws and to render more difficult the activities of predatory criminal gangs of the Kelly and Dillinger types. Of these bills 11 have become law. I regret that others have not been passed, but for one reason or another on the eve of adjournment some remain pigeonholed in the several committees of the Senate or the House, hile a few remain on the calendar of Senate or House. The following are the bills that have become laws:

S. 3068. A bill to provide deportation of aliens upon conviction of a felony.

This bill is intended to make mandatory the deportation of aliens upon conviction of a crime involving punishment of imprisonment for a term exceeding 1 year. This is a far-reaching piece of legislation and should be passed. The bill is pending before the Senate in modified form, S. 3771, as reported by the Committee on Immigration.

S. 3069. A bill relative to coercion of witnesses.

This bill provides a penalty for making the testimony of any person unavailable in any court or before any jury by writing or using any other means of coercion or intimidation. The bill is pending before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 3070. A bill making it a felony to willfully fail to appear after having been admitted to bail.

This bill makes it a felony for any person who has been admitted to bail in connection with a charge of an offense punishable by death or imprisonment for a term exceeding 1 year to willfully fail to appear. The bill is pending before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 3071. A bill to prevent the promotion of frauds through interstate communication.

This bill provides fine or imprisonment for any person who shall communicate or attempt to communicate any message by any method whatsoever for the purpose of promoting fraud. It is pending before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 3073 and 3074. Bills to amend sections 1015 and 1016 of the Revised Statutes.

These bills make it mandatory on the judge or other persons authorized to take bail to inquire into the source of money or security offered for such bail, and if it shall appear that any money or security so offered shall be the proceeds of certain crimes of violence to refuse to grant such bail. They are pending before

S. 3075. A bill to permit the appointment of special agents of the Division of Investigation as State officers. Report No. 1123.
This legislation is intended to increase Federal jurisdiction within the several States by the appointment of special agents in the Division of Investigation on the nomination of the Governors of the covered States. Such special grants so pended to also possess of the several States. Such special agents so named to also possess the police power of the State from which they are nominated on the employment of the Attorney General. These particular special agents would have jurisdiction both Federal and State. The unsuccessful attempts to secure the arrest of Dillinger is evidence unsuccessful attempts to secure the arrest of Dillinger is evidence of the desirability of such legislation. It passed the Senate on June 13, 1934; now pending before the House Judiciary Committee. S. 3076. A bill to prohibit the transportation in interstate or foreign commerce and carriage through the mails of certain gambling devices, and for other purposes.

This bill is intended to make it unlawful to transport within the limits of the jurisdiction of the United States certain gambling devices, including slot machines. The committee in its investigation obtained a catalog of 80 pages known as the "Secret Blue Book." Every device offered for sale in this catalog is controlled in some mechanical or electrical way giving the innocent victim no chance whatever and making gambling a sure thing for the professional gambler. This piece of legislation should be enacted. The bill is pending before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce. Commerce.

S. 3476. A bill to prohibit the making, passing, or negotiation of spurious checks or other financial paper purporting to be payable by institutions in other States.

This bill is aimed at the transportation and negotiation of spurious paper in interstate and foreign commerce. Spurious paper is drawn on both real and fictitious banks. It is usually negotiated in a widely separated locality from the place in which it is drawn. The unfortunate thing in this type of fraud is the fact that the banks are not the losers but the innocent merchant who receives and cashes the spurious paper is the victim when the same is presented to his bank in the nature of a deposit. The bill is pending before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 3556. A bill prohibiting the transportation in interstate or foreign commerce of plates, dies, forms, or tools intended to be used in the reproduction of any security or financial paper.

used in the reproduction of any security or financial paper.

This bill is designed to stop the transportation in interstate or foreign commerce of plates, dies, forms, or tools intended to be used in the making of counterfeit securities or financial paper. The hearings of this committee indicated that professionals engaged in the transportation of spurious money, stocks, and securities carry with them plates or dies which are of small bulk and readily transported. Printing presses are available now in almost any community, and it is frequently more convenient and advisable to transport the means of producing counterfeits rather than to transport a large bulk of counterfeit paper. The methods of reproduction and engraving adopted by the modern counterfeiter have followed the development of the legitimate printer's art. It is believed that this legislation is meritorious and should be passed. The bill is pending before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. Judiciary.

S. 3623. A bill authorizing the introduction in evidence in criminal cases of testimony taken at a preliminary hearing, and for other purposes.

In many criminal cases when brought to trial the testimony of important witnesses is not available owing to the fact that the witnesses are dead, have become intimidated, or are kept away from the trial by the willful acts of the accused. This bill is believed to be a substantial reinstatement of the common law and believed to be a substantial reinstatement of the common law and it is believed that as such it will be held not to contravene the Constitution. It is the common practice of gangsters who are indicted and held for trial to kill or intimidate witnesses intended to be used by the prosecution. It this legislation is enacted it will have a far-reaching effect in criminal trials, particularly where the accused is tried for crimes of violence. It is believed that this legislation should be passed. The bill is pending before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 3680. A bill to provide for the taxation of manufacturers, importers, and dealers in small firearms and machine guns, to tax the sale or other disposal of such weapons, and to restrict importa-tion and regulate interstate transportation thereof.

The purposes of this legislation are as indicated in the short tle. It is pending before the Senate Committee on Commerce. To the same end, a new and revised firearms bill was introduced today. It is known as "S. 3795."

One of the achievements of this committee, I think, is what we have accomplished in the study of juvenile delinquency. Anyhow, we are convinced that this is America's most pressing social problem.

Extensive hearings were held, and educators, social workers, penologists, and police officials contributed richly to the symposium. At the proper time the committee will describe the individual activities of various persons who have contributed to our efforts.

a result of our work the Congress has written into the District of Columbia appropriation bill provisions for character education in the schools in Washington. Plans for that activity are being formulated, and we hope that out of this experiment will be found another means of guarding against juvenile delinquency and adult crime. We expect to make another report covering this particular subject.

covering this particular subject.

It is the feeling of the committee that our hearings are well worth study. We call particular attention to the digest of the hearings, which has been widely distributed because of the calls made for it.

Made for it.

Needless to say, our work is far from complete. We have other measures under contemplation, and the program of legislation which we have already proposed has not yet been enacted into law. It is our expectation that our hearings will continue at the beginning of the next session. Further efforts will be made to deal with crimes of violence, kidnaping, racketeering, so far as they may be reached through legal procedure.

G.A.R. ENCAMPMENT, ROCHESTER, N.Y.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H.R. 9145) to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic to be held at Rochester, N.Y., August 14, 15, and 16, 1934, and at the National Convention of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, to be held at Colorado Springs, Colo., during the first week in July, was passed yesterday during my absence from the city. It relates to an appropriation of $3,700 for the expenses of the Marine Band to go to Rochester, N.Y., to the annual convention of the Union soldiers.

I wish, with reference to that particular matter, to attach an amendment authorizing a like appropriation of $3,700 to pay the expenses of the Marine Band from Washington to my home city of Asheville, N.C., for the purpose of attending the annual convention of the Thirtieth Division, an overseas outfit composed of men from my State of North Carolina and her sister States of South Carolina and Tennessee.

I might add in that connection that Asheville is located almost in the heart of the Great Smoky Mountain National Park which will soon be opened generally to the public. For various and sundry reasons the people of North Carolina are particularly interested in having with them on that occasion the Marine Band.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator does not intend to seek action on the motion now, does he?

Mr. REYNOLDS. No; I should like merely an opportunity to enter the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from North Carolina, in view of the situation, that he ask as in legislative session that he may enter the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and then call up the motion at some future time.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Very well; I submit that request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina, as in legislative session, that he may enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which House bill 9145 was passed? The Chair hears none, and the motion is entered.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS-ADDRESS BY BAINBRIDGE COLBY

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address on economic conditions delivered by the Honorable Bainbridge Colby, former Secretary of State, before the Economic Club in New York City on May 24, 1934.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It is not surprising that Mr. Mills should see in much of current legislation and administration a retrogressive tendency, a reverting to the past, even the remote past, and to viewpoints long regarded as definitely left behind in the evolution of the

There is a very respectable body of philosophical thinking which does not regard the inherent tendency of life as upward and onward—in other words, as progressive.

On the contrary, this school of thought holds that the proclivity of the race toward deterioration is constant, and that the most important responsibility of the progressive forces in society

It is to arrest and halt the ever active tendencies to deterioration.

This is not a sanguine philosophy, and yet it justifies those who insist upon a careful scrutiny of radical proposals before their adoption, lest it be found that in our enthusiasm for change we have sacrificed more than we have won, and the net result is loss

The first effort of progress must therefore be to retain the progress already made. The fruits of hard-won victories in the past are not lightly to be relinquished. The points of departure for new social advances should be the front of the line and not the back areas of the human struggle from which it has taken us years to emerge.

Mr. Mills has given what may prove a very profitable direction to our thought. It has often happened in the past that attempts to introduce new benefits are seen on closer inspection to be attempts to resuscitate past evils. If the new deal is to any, or to a considerable extent, an old mistake, it behooves us all to know it. In the field of government, and in dealing with the great forces that make up the Nation's life, we cannot afford to go it blind. The determination as to whether we are going forward or back, it seems to me, lies at the very threshold of all other decisions. Ardor, no matter how impatient, must pause while that decision is being made. So important a fork in the road requires that the signposts be carefully scanned.

The "great issues of the contemporary world", as we hear the problems of the hour described, are probably neither so great nor so unexampled as, for instance, Mr. Tugwell and Mr. Richberg think them.

The talk of revolution, and even the use of the word, seems Mr. Mills has given what may prove a very profitable direction

The talk of revolution, and even the use of the word, seems confined to the members of the "brain trust", who flash it upon us as the dread and solitary alternative to their unpalatable designs upon our liberties. They remind me of a well-known author who strove to crowd his novels with excitement. A critic observed that, as you turned his pages, "the suspense of the author was almost unbearable."

With the exception of the rostrum in Union Square, where there is no closed season for Communists and other advocates of violence and class upheaval, the talk of revolution seems to extend no further than the intimate intellectual circle which has gained the attention-to what genuine extent, I cannot say-of the President.

The great mass of Americans have little interest and less patience for such talk. They know they are passing through a storm. They are confident they can weather it. It might be much worse. Their faith remains unshaken in the saving grace ultimately of industry, integrity, and prudence—in other words, sobriety and common sense—to effect an adjustment of their lives to the march of social and industrial evolution.

march of social and industrial evolution.

There is a feeling, ready to be called forth, against any attempt of the law to control individuals in things in which they have not been accustomed to be controlled. Nevertheless, the tendency of all the changes taking place in the world is to strengthen society and dimnish the power of the individual. Between these two tendencies, the struggle is not new. It is going on now—before our eyes. The question is in what spirit we shall survey it and at what point make a stand for individual freedom against intolerable encroachment, whatever guise the latter wears and from whatever quarter it proceeds.

latter wears and from whatever quarter it proceeds.

In the first place we must be fair. The times are too serious for criticism vitiated by partisanship, conscious distortion of fact, or exaggeration, whether of claims on behalf of the new measures or apprehended consequences.

We should not allow ourselves to forget that when Mr. Roosevelt took office, the country was weighed down by the cumulative effects of many policies and practices now seen to have been tractically matches. tragically mistaken.

Our strength had been wasted and consumed by extravagance in every field of expenditure, improvident foreign loans amount, riotous speculation, reckless borrowing by States, municipalities, and even counties and townships. An insane belief nicipalities, and even counties and townships. An insane belief prevailed that social and industrial anarchy could continue indefinitely, and that stimulants were as nourishing as food.

These vanities of thought and conduct were bound to come home to roost. Our troubles of a year ago were due to the fact that they came home to roost all at once. The country was as near prostration as it could come and still avoid collapse when Mr. Roosevelt brought his fresh energy and his inspiriting self-confidence to the work of rescue.

confidence to the work of rescue. He has done many things that had to be done and were difficult to do. That he has justifiably resorted to experimentation in many fields where solutions were not at hand nor their nature clearly discerned is the opinion held by most thoughtful Ameri-

Action was imperatively required. The adverse currents in the Nation's life had to be arrested and reversed, however hazardous the expedients resorted to. Not all could succeed—that some must fail was clearly perceived. The venture was demanded by the country's plight. The dangers of incaution were far less than the dangers of inaction.

Despite the preserve

Despite the pressure and urgency of his task, the President has steadfastly and conscientiously recognized the fact that practical supremacy under our Constitution resides in the representatives of the people. This truth he has never lost sight of, although it is an open question what actual function, what precise part in the machinery of government shall be directly performed by the representative body.

Great variations in this respect are compatible with the essence of representative government, provided the functions are such as secure the representative body in the control of everything in the last resort

And we must not forget that there is a radical distinction be-

And we must not forget that there is a radical distinction between controlling the business of government and actually doing it. The same body may be able to control everything but cannot possibly do everything; and in many cases its control over everything will be more perfect the less it personally attempts to do.

Instead of the function of governing, for which it is radically unfitted, the proper office of a representative assembly is to watch and control the government; to throw the light of publicity on its acts; to compel the full exposition and justification of all of them which anyone considers questionable; to censure them if found deserving of censure; and if the men who compose the government abuse their trust or treat it in a manner which conflicts with the deliberate sense of the nation, to expel them from flicts with the deliberate sense of the nation, to expel them from

"This", says John Stuart Mill, from whom I am quoting, "is surely ample power and security enough for the liberty of the nation."

Truly the cry of usurpation cannot be raised against a President so conscious of the source from which governmental power springs, and so observant of the constitutional channels of its flow.

The present administration has now held office for nearly a third of its elected term. If it is too early to pass judgment it is not too soon to include in opinion, and opinion is not necessarily hostile because it is discriminating.

Criticism is one of truth's implements. It need not be constructive only, to be valuable and patriotic—much that we hear structive only, to be valuable and patriotic—much that we hear to the contrary notwithstanding.

"Negative logic" is the phrase used by John Stuart Mill in describing criticism which points out weaknesses in theory, or errors in practice, without establishing positive truths. He remarked the fashion of all times to disparage such criticism but added that, as a means of attaining any positive knowledge or conviction worthy of the name, it could not be appraised too highly. Until people are systematically trained to it, said he, there will be a low general average of intellect.

From day to day we are told that the regimentation of American life is steadily proceeding. We are sternly admonished that "America must choose"—choose between our inherited and deeply ingrained faith in freedom and individual liberty, endeared to America must choose "—choose between our inherited and deeply ingrained faith in freedom and individual liberty, endeared to us by time and the triumphs we have won under their banners, and this un-American alternative called "regimentation", or as it is sometimes described, "planned direction" of all our actions to which the new control can be applied.

As a Democrat, I propose to take the time necessary to get my bearings. Belonging to a party which throughout our bitters.

As a Democrat, I propose to take the time necessary to get my bearings. Belonging to a party which, throughout our history, has jealously resisted every undue extension of governmental function at the expense of the individual's liberty. I feel entitled to ascertain what has happened to my party, that its present leaders should be so intent upon crushing every sentiment and garroting every principle, regarded heretofore as characterizing the Democratic Party.

I recall a remark President Wilson made to me one day during the height of the war. Said he:

"I have come to conclusion that one of the chief duties resting upon the President of the United States is to keep his shirt on."

Here is an admonition to be put alongside the somewhat tem-pestuous warning that "America must choose."

The years teach much which the days never know,

We are not unaccustomed to interventions by the State in the siness and relationships of the individual. With the progress business and relationships of the individual. With the progress of society and the growing complexity and interdependence of all relationships, there has been not only in this country but in all civilized countries, an increasing disposition to look to the State for needed initiative and protective intervention which society could not otherwise provide.

There has always been a willingness on the part of our countrymen to tolerate strong leadership on the part of the Executive. It goes beyond tolerance. It is, in fact, an expectation of the people that the President shall indicate the way to be traveled, particularly in times of difficulty or crisis, to which the slower pace of customary or established procedure is unsuited.

But there is a very definite condition or implication attached to this tolerance, and it is this: That the mold of our constitutional government shall not be broken and that whatever of innovation is attempted shall be conformable to the spirit of America and to the principles upon which the Nation has been builded. Furthermore, the right of the State to intervene in any situation presupposes that it can do so with sufficient equipment of impartiality and knowledge, which is supported and validated by experience.

When a man for instance who stands high in the President's

When a man, for instance, who stands high in the President's confidence, holding an important official position in the administration, and frequently put forward as its spokesman, is disclosed as referring to our popular morality as having its roots in a past age; to our religion as clinging to outworn ethics and being irrelevant for the present; to our public-school education as dominated by the two, both thoroughly outmoded; and when, with such opinions to start with, this official voice speaks of the present trends as destined to completely remake American economic life, the reaction in the mind of the average American is, How do you get thet way? get that way?

It is clear that an administration harboring such thinking will have to meet America at the cross-roads and sustain a vast amount of criticism which by no stretch of the imagination could be called constructive.

In fact, the hope of the country, its fate and ultimate happiness, may depend on the capacity of the present generation of Americans for bold and searching criticism. By that I do not mean the expression of mere dislike for the innovations we are called to unhesitatingly accept, nor mere denunciation of the alien and un-American philosophy which we are disturbed to find coiled and hidden under the astute phrasing of the new

I mean criticism which will pluck off masks, face unpleasant facts and uncover them, reach down to the vitals of covert design and unavowed purpose, and exhibit to the people in clear outline and intelligible terms the changes sought to be impressed upon their Government.

Consider for a moment what has taken place in a little over a twelvementh.

The Federal Government has been empowered to control the production and distribution of all agricultural products.

To control the production and distribution of substantially all other articles moving in commerce.

To regulate the business of banking to the exclusion of the

To regulate and control the issuance, distribution, and sale of all securities.

To fix the civil rights and liabilities of persons engaged in the sale of all articles moving in interstate commerce or whose sale is solicited by means of interstate communication or through the mails.

At a single session of Congress there has been passed a body of laws which in effect transfers to the Federal Government the entire police power of the States.

A vast bureaucracy has been called into being and fastened upon us without our realizing it, much less authorizing it. We are startled to find ourselves subject to bureaucratic rule down to the mallest and most intimate activities that enter into our daily

It makes a Democrat thoughtful to behold such a transforma tion of the United States of America. Almost overnight it has been brought to pass. But our people, emerging at last from a season of bewilderment and passivity, begin to see the shadow cast upon their liberties by the new measures, the new agencies of government, and the new social and political theories, which have government, and the new social and political theories, which have suddenly attained so luxuriant a growth.

Gradually it has dawned upon the country, and it is now quite plain, that recovery was only partially the aim of the administration. A great part of its interest has been in radical institutional overturn and the new modeling of the State.

It has moved toward its objectives at times, I regret to say, with a certain indirection, avoiding admission of its designs until it was found convenient to lay aside concealment.

Thus measures, which were to meet an emergency, we are now told are to be permanent.

told are to be permanent.

Other measures, which were to promote recovery, but have had quite the opposite result, are now justified as reforms, regardless of their consequences.

The guaranties of the Constitution are dismissed lightly, as if they were irrelevances in the present-day life of America. The basic principles of the Constitution, we are told, must be somehow got around. A little jugglery of phrase by an agile bill draftsman will suffice, or so it is thought by the new school of statesmanship—the adolescent school, I might call it, or perhaps,

But will it suffice? This is a question the determination of which is drawing near.

In our long history there have been recurring periods when our institutions have seemed to be in peril. More than once in our history, dangers comparable to those which seem now to threaten have hovered close about us. There have been periods of great anxiety for the Constitution, periods when the people have been apprehensive as to what the courts might do.

But if one will review the history of past crises, it will be seen how splendidly the Constitution has met each one, and how faithfully our highest court has discharged its duty as the Constitution's guardian, as well as its interpreter.

There seems to be in each successive generation of Americans an attachment and loyalty to the Constitution, which the restless innovator and the mad-cap theorist are prone to underestimate. This loyalty is neither noisy nor assertive. It mobilizes quietly but ponderously. Nothing has yet been able to withstand it. It has always prevailed. It will again.

While it cannot be denied that we are seemingly embarked on perilous courses, there are nevertheless reassuring elements in the situation. These should not be forgotten.

It should not be forgotten that we are swimming with a life-

It should not be forgotten that we are swimming with a life-line around our waist. It is designed for just such moments in the Nation's life when temporary pressures make the trial of untested expedients peculiarly tempting.

The Constitution still lives, and we are a constitutional democracy.

The President is sworn to uphold it. The courts are sworn to apply it. It is the inviolable sanctuary of our liberty—the ark of our freedom.

Storms have beat upon it. It has survived them all. Armed rebellion could not prevail over it. Treason has not been able to overthrow it. It has bound the States together against division and dispersal. It has, time and again, turned defiance into obedience, and mockery into veneration.

It is the most American thing about America. Darkness shall not envelop it. The sons of evil shall not stand against it.

not envelop it. The sons of evil shall not stand against it.

There is another ground for assurance in these unsettled times. It should not be lost sight of. You may have noted that the President, very wisely it seems to me, has avoided personal commitment on any matter of theory or apparent constitutional departure. It will therefore not be difficult for him, as the inevitable failure of some of the experiments of his administration are revealed, to abandon them. He is morally free to pass judgment on the extent to which any experiment or innovation, which has been attempted, is incompatible with the habits of thought, the racial instincts, and the governmental traditions of the American people.

ine racial instincts, and the governmental traditions of the American people.

In addition, we may gratefully bear in mind that in all the confusion of cults and the babel of theory that have come out of the college classrooms, amidst the endless debate as to the relative merits of regimentation and free collectivism, planned economy and compensatory economy, we have preserved unimpaired the right of free speech, the right of a free press, and the complete freedom of amendment, recission, and repeal in our representative body.

complete freedom of amendment, recission, and repeal in our representative body.

In other words, we have preserved intact the entire machinery for the correction of our errors. It has been well said that the source of everything respectable in man, either as an intellectual or as a moral being, is that he is capable of rectifying his mistakes by discussion and experience. Wrong opinions and practices have always yielded to fact and argument.

So long as this power of self-correction is at our command, we may err and stray from the true spirit of our institutions, but we have not lost the way back nor the means of reaching home again.

FOREIGN TRADE-LETTER FROM GEORGE N. PEEK

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have in my possession a letter to the President, on foreign trade, written by Mr. George N. Peek, special adviser to the President on foreign trade. It is a very valuable document dealing with the commercial and financial trend in this country from 1896 to 1933. I think it should be made available to every Member of Congress, and others. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that it be published in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LETTER FROM GEORGE N. PEEK, SPECIAL ADVISER TO THE PRESIDENT ON FOREIGN TRADE

OFFICE OF THE SPECIAL ADVISER TO THE PRESIDENT ON FOREIGN TRADE, Washington, May 23, 1934.

The PRESIDENT.

The PRESIDENT,

The White House.

Dear Mr. President: Pursuant to our conversations, I have caused certain studies to be made with respect to foreign-trade problems. In the course of these studies we have set up a tentative international balance sheet to see what the present situation is with respect to our foreign business and to attempt to ascertain from the records some reasons for the prevailing conditions.

The figures in the attached exhibits show that the trend in our international trade has been cumulatively disadvantageous to us. In our international commercial relations we have not utilized the

In our international commercial relations we have not utilized the simple device of a balance sheet to discover whether we have been doing business at a profit or at a loss. As you have stated a number of times, our exports and our imports of goods and services must balance. During the periods covered by the figures these exports and imports have been grossly out of balance; nevertheless, we have pointed with pride to our "favorable balance of trade."

We have no adequate national bookkeeping system for our foreign financial relations. The statistical bases for the balance of payments estimates since 1922 are the figures published annually by the Department of Commerce. For earlier years extensive use was made of the studies by the Harvard University Committee of Economic Research which compiled estimates for a number of years, ending with 1921. The basic data are unsatisfactory in some respects and in some instances represent estimates, but they serve to indicate the necessity for developing exact balance sheets between this country and each of the countries with which we are now dealing, or with which we propose to deal.

From these data we have assembled the figures covering the years from 1896 to 1933, inclusive, in order to show the commercial and financial trends of this country with the rest of the world. Thus assembled, they indicate that in this 38-year period—we sold to the world goods in the amount of ______$121, 250, 000, 000 we bought from the world goods in the amount of ______$4, 604, 000, 000

This increase in debt is represented by foreign securities and other investments in foreign countries bought by United States citizens, net $14,398,000,000, and war loans advanced by the United States Government, $10,304,000,000, making a total of $24,702,000,000. From these figures must be deducted United States securities and other investments made by foreigners in the United States, net $2.057,000,000, resulting in the above net increase in debt of $22,645,000,000. Our national assets will be diminished by the amount of this debt which is not paid. (These diminished by the amount of this debt which is not paid. (These figures represent net capital movement and should be added to the estimated $2,500,000,000 which foreigners had invested in the United States in 1896, and the estimated $500,000,000 which we had invested in foreign countries in that year, to reflect the approximate present position.)

proximate present position.)

For the purpose of better comparison and in order that the account for the war period may be set off by itself because of its special features, the accounts have been set up for four separate periods within the total period of 38 years covered by these studies. The first period is from 1896 to 1914, during which a relatively satisfactory state of commercial intercourse existed throughout the world; the second from 1915 to 1922, in which our trade with the world was distorted by the World War; the third from 1923 to 1929, during which the foundations for present conditions in world trade were laid; and the fourth from 1930 to 1933

I invite your attention to certain outstanding items of each of these periods, namely:

PERIOD 1896-1914

1. The value of the goods we exported exceeded by the sum of $8,853,000,000 the goods we imported.

2. Our tourists and immigrants spent or sent abroad funds to the extent of $6,080,000,000.

I am transmitting with this letter certain summary sheets for the periods discussed and a recapitulation, in detail, for the en-tire period. During these preliminary studies I have become con-vinced that a change is necessary in our approach to foreign-trade activities and their relation to our domestic problems. We must develop complete balance sheets between this country and each of the countries with which we are now dealing or with which we propose to deal. Certain information necessary in preparing these new balance sheets is not now available to the Government—I have particular reference to capital movements. To understand the past and to prepare for the future we must get the facts.

Faithfully yours,

GEORGE N. PEEK, Special Adviser.

TARIFF ON COPPER

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, through the courtesy of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. Thomas] there has come to me a copy of an article entitled "Copper's Inadequate Tariff", written by Col. Charles H. Rutherford, a distinguished citizen of Arizona. The article appeared in the

it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> [From Plain Talk Magazine, March 1934] COPPER'S INADEQUATE TARIFF By Col. Charles H. Rutherford

American copper mines and copper workers are facing a crisis, and a serious one at that. At the present time they are practically all closed down. But unlike nearly all other closed-down industries they do not look toward industrial recovery with optimism.

For the recovery of business in the United States to a more normal level will not open these closed copper mines and smelting plants as it wil most of the other stagnant businesses in the United States. Only a higher tariff on copper, which will enable American-produced metal to compete with the pauper-produced product of foreign countries, will save them.

Most of the competition the American copper mines are up

Most of the competition the American copper mines are up against comes from—

(1) Africa, where slave and semislave labor is used.

(2) Canada, where copper is a by-product mined with nickel, aluminum, gold, and silver.

(3) Chile and Mexico, where labor is also very cheap.

The President of the United States has the authority under a recently passed enactment to put an embargo on copper; that is, stop its importation altogether.

The executives of the Arizona copper mining, in common with those of the copper-mining industry of the 13 other copper-producing States of the Union, hope that the President will establish this embargo. The very life of the American copper mines depends upon the actual embargo, or upon a tariff high enough to prevent the importation of all foreign copper.

The powerful American groups oppose this embargo, or the proposed tariff high enough to accomplish the same result. One of these groups is that back of the American fabricating plants. The other is that owning and operating copper mines in foreign country.

Country.

The owners of the fabricating plants are opposed to an embargo or a higher tariff because the products they manufacture are already covered by a high tariff. Therefore, the fabricators wish to buy their raw copper in the cheapest markets and maximize their profits.

American owners of foreign copper mines oppose an embargo or a higher tariff because this country consumes more copper products than any other nation and is therefore by far their best copper market

And what makes the position of those domestic owners of foreign copper mines still more untenable is the fact that while they also control copper mines in the United States, their principal efforts are to sell their cheap foreign-mined copper in this country. To do that they manipulate affairs to produce a minimum of copper from American mines, because they make a greater profit out of copper produced from their foreign holdings.

The chief organized opposition to a tariff or embargo on foreign copper comes from the American Metal Co., of 61 Broadway, New York. This is a combination of the American Metal Co., of New York. This is a combination of the American Metal Co., of New Mexico, the American Zinc & Chemical Co., the Blackwell Zinc Co., the American Metal Co., of Canada., and the Compania Minera de Penoies. The latter subsidiary is a Mexican concern, and owns thousands of acres in the sub Rio Grande Republic with smelters at Porreon and Monterery.

Officers are Ludwig Vogelstein, chairman; Otto Sussman, president; H. K. Hochschild, vice president and secretary; Heath Steel, B. N. Zimmer, vice presidents; W. H. Brady, treasurer; E. H. Hothorn, assistant secretary; Norman Hickman, assistant treasurer; Walter Hochschild, assistant to chairman; John MacLetchie, auditor.

The present tariff on copper of 4 cents a pound is but a drop in the bucket compared with the differential in the cost of production between slave or pauper labor and labor which maintains the American standard of living.

As an evidence of the effect on the American copper industry of this condition, it is estimated by copper men that only 18 percent of the amount of copper which was produced in 1928 is being produced in 1934.

The extent to which the American copper industry has been

The extent to which the American copper industry has been hit is shown by production figures in the United States Statistical Abstract for 1929. In 1928 Arizona produced 735,632,000 pounds of copper, Utah 298,375,000, and Montana 251,046,000. The smaller copper-producing States of Michigan, Nevada, New Mexico, Tennessee. Colorado, Idaho, and Washington produced between them 461,382,000 pounds.

The N.R.A. program now being carried out in this country by the present administration has for its avowed purpose two main objectives: (1) To increase wages, (2) to increase prices so that increased wages may be paid.

As the leaders of the present administration delve deeper into the N.R.A. problem, the more apparent it becomes to them that tariffs cannot be lowered at the same time this N.R.A. program is being successfully carried out. And do not forget that President Roosevelt has the authority to increase tariffs 50 percent or he

March issue of Plain Talk Magazine. I ask permission that | may declare an embargo on the importation of any foreign may declare an embargo on the importation of any foreign product that enters into competition with a home product.

Thus it is entirely possible for the President to stop the importation of copper after recommendations have been made by governmental agencies, regardless of whether Congress raises the tariff on copper or not. In this connection it may be noted that after recommendations have been made by the United States Tariff Commission, the tariff has been raised on tuna fish and sardines, not to speak of bobwhite quail.

If a tariff increase on tuna fish and sardines, a small industry, is worthy of the attention of the Tariff Commission, it would not stretch the imagination of any of its members to comprehend not stretch the imagination of any of its members to comprehend not stretch the imagination of any of its members to comprehend that the raising of the tariff on copper, one of the major industries of the country, would do many times more good. In fact, it would put back to work more than half a million employees of the copper industry and save the American copper market.

Those opposed to a higher copper tariff or an embargo are constantly drawing this herring across the path of facts to deceive the citizens of this country: Very often some pseudoauthority in the copper industry—always someone representing the owners of foreign copper mines or fabricating plants in the United States—rises up and proclaims that all the copper now being imported into this country is brought here in bond for the sole purpose of being refined in our excellent refineries, and that after it is refined it will be exported.

That is not the truth. The facts are that this foreign copper

That is not the truth. The facts are that this foreign copper is brought here in bond, and so also are all the other imported products on which this country levies a tariff. It is also true that this imported copper, after it is refined, may be stored in a bonded warehouse, just the same as any other imported product on which there is a tariff.

And it is also true that whenever the importers or owners of this stored copper pay the present small duty of 4 cents a pound on this copper stored in our bonded warehouses, then that copper may be taken out of such warehouse and sold on our market, just as any other duty-laden imported commodity may be taken out of our bonded warehouses and likewise sold on our market.

The facts are that from Canada alone the importation of copper ore and concentrates into the United States increased from 1,519 tons in March 1933 to 4,223 tons in August of this year, or nearly 300 percent. That imported Canadian copper is still in bonded warehouses in this country and may be sold on our market as fast as the 4-cent tariff on it is paid.

And remember that all the copper mined in Canada is a byproduct of other more valuable metals mined at the same time from the same mines such as nickel aluminum, gold, and silver.

product of other more valuable metals mined at the same time from the same mines, such as nickel, aluminum, gold, and silver. And as a by-product any price it brings is just that much profit. There is no way in which the copper mines of Arizona and those of the 13 other copper-producing States can be reopened and kept open, except by putting an embargo on all foreign-mined copper, or a higher tariff that will accomplish the same result so that for the country and letter.

or a higher tariff that will accomplish the same result so that no foreign copper may be imported into this country and later dumped from bonded warehouses upon our markets.

Under present conditions there will be such a large quantity of this imported copper that it can be taken out of bonded warehouses and sold in such a manner as to beat down the current market price of copper whenever that price rises somewhere near 9 cents a pound.

Yet that is what recently here in the country was a such as the countr

Yet that is what recently has been done and is being done now. If we are to restore prosperity to Arizona, then our copper mines must resume their normal production. This will put thousands of men to work and lessen the heavy tax burden now borne by the agricultural, commercial, and other interests, as well as the small home owners.

In order to secure the early reopening of our copper mines the President should immediately declare an embargo on foreign copper in order that our people be given employment, and to revive for the Nation a great industry.

CORRESPONDENCE RELATIVE TO FOREIGN DEBTS

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask that there may be incorporated in the RECORD the correspondence between the State Department, the French Government, and the British Government with reference to the foreign debt

There being no objection, the correspondence was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRANSLATION OF NOTE FROM THE FRENCH AMBASSADOR, M. ANDRÉ DE LABOULAYE, TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE, MR. CORDELL HULL, JUNE 12. 1934

Embassy of the French Republic in the United States, Washington, June 12, 1934.

Mashington, June 12, 1934.

Mr. Secretary: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the letter which Your Excellency was pleased to address to me on May 26 transmitting a statement of the sums due by France to the United States on June 15, 1934, under the terms of the agreements of April 29, 1926, and July 6, 1931.

In compliance with instructions which I have just received, I have the honor to inform Your Excellency that as there has been no new development in regard to intergovernmental debts since the month of December 1932 the French Government is not in a position to resume on the 15th of the present month, the payments which, since December 15, 1932, it has found itself constrained to postpone as the result of the consequences of the moratorium of that year.

On this occasion my Government desires to reaffirm that it does not contest the validity of its debt and that it is still prepared to seek an agreement with the American Government in regard to that debt upon a basis which in existing circumstances may be acceptable to both countries.

The Government of the Republic hopes that such an agreement may be reached in the near future and it desires to reaffirm to the American Government the assurance that it will consider a duty to neglect no opportunity which may arise to attain that result.

I take this occasion, Mr. Secretary, to renew the assurance of my highest consideration.

ANDRÉ DE LABOULAYE.

His Excellency the Honorable Cordell Hull, Secretary of State of the United States, Washington, D.C.

NOTE BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE, MR. CORDELL HULL, TO THE BRITISH AMBASSADOR, SIR RONALD LINDSAY, JUNE 12, 1934

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 12, 1934. His Excellency the Honorable Sir Ronald Lindsay, P.C., G.C.M.G., K.C.B., C.V.O.,

British Ambassador.

Excellency: The observations contained in your note of June 4

Excellency: The observations contained in your note of June 4, 1934, concerning the indebtedness of His Majesty's Government to the United States have been studied with close attention.

This Government is sensible of the elements of the situation set forth by His Majesty's Government, the heavy war expenditures undertaken in its own behalf and in behalf of its Allies, the burden of taxation that has been borne by the British people, and the transfer difficulties that under certain circumstances may arise in the foreign exchanges. With certain observations, however, and the inferences drawn therefrom, I regret that the American Government is unable to concur and in three instances it feels that, for the purpose of record, it should make its own attitude clear attitude clear.

First, His Majesty's Government states in effect that, unless payments were made in full in the sum of $262,000,000, as set forth in the communication from the United States Treasury dated May 25, 1934, the United Kingdom would fall within the effects of the recent legislation mentioned in paragraph 7 of your note, so that the payment of this amount is regarded as the only alternative to suspension of all payment. The Attorney General has advised me that, in his opinion, the debtor governments which, under the ruling of his office of May 5, 1934, are not at present considered in default because of partial payments made on earlier installments would have to pay only the amount of the installment due June 15, 1934—for Great Britain $85,670,765.05—in order to remain outside the scope of the act.

Second, in regard to the record cited by the British Government Second, in regard to the record cited by the British Government of its loans to its allies and the fact that His Majesty's Government has given up great sums due to it under those loan contracts, this Government must emphasize the complete independence between the aforementioned transactions and the debt contracted by His Majesty's Government to this Government. The British Government undertook to borrow under its own name and on its own credit standing, and repayment was not made contingent upon the fate of debts due to the British Government.

Third this Government notes with disappointment the declaratingent upon the fate of debts due to the British Government. Third, this Government notes with disappointment the declaration of His Majesty's Government that "while suspending further payments until it becomes possible to discuss an ultimate settlement of intergovernmental war debts with a reasonable prospect of agreement, they have no intention of repudiating their obligations, and will be prepared to enter upon further discussion of the subject at any time when, in the opinion of the President, such discussion would be likely to produce results of value."

In effect, this Government reads the declaration of His Majesty's Government to mean that it will fail to meet any further payments on the debt due to the United States as evidenced by the settlement of June 19, 1923, until this Government shall first scale down this debt to an unascertained sum to which His Majesty's Government might be willing to accede. This declara-Majesty's Government might be willing to accede. This declara-tion appears to represent insistence by His Majesty's Government that before it makes any payment whatsoever it must be assured that before it makes any payment whatsoever it must be assured of a settlement satisfactory to it and not necessarily in accordance with any accepted standards of payment or readjustment of the amounts due. The only indications before this Government of the extent to which His Majesty's Government has proposed to meet its obligations are the small fractions of the sums due mentioned by His Majesty's representative in the course of the discussions in the spring and autumn of last year referred to in your note of June 4. Adhering to the opinion so often expressed by the United States Government, a situation of this kind necessarily calls for the initiation of proposals by the debtor and not by the creditor. by the creditor.

Should His Majesty's government wish to put forward proposals for the resumption of payments, this Government would be glad to entertain and discuss them informally. For instance, no proposal has ever been presented to this Government looking toward payments in kind to an extent that might be found mutually practicable and agreeable. Any proposals of this or a similar character which promise mutual benefit will be carefully considered for eventual submission to the American Congress.

In conclusion, may I refer to the statement made by the President in his message to the Congress on June 1: "The American people would not be disposed to place an impossible burden upon their debtors, but are, nevertheless, in a just position to ask that substantial sacrifices be made to meet these debts."

Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurances of my highest con-

TEXT OF NOTE DATED JUNE 4, 1934, FROM THE BRITISH AMBASSADOR TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE

BRITISH EMBASSY,

British Embassy,

Washington, D.C., June 4, 1394.

Sign: In their note of December 1, 1932, His Majesty's Government gave a full statement of the reasons which convinced them that the existing system of intergovernmental war debt obligations had broken down. They pointed out the difference between these war debt obligations and normal credit operations for development purposes; they showed the economic impossibility of making transfers on the scale required by these obligations and the disastrous effect which any further attempt to do so would have on trade and prices. They emphasized the sacrifices which the British Nation had made in this matter and the injustice of the difference between their funding settlement and those accorded to other debtors. They concluded that a revision of the existing settlements was essential in the interests of world revival and they urged that further payments should be postponed pending such a revision. Nothing that has since occurred has led His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom to change the views they then expressed.

Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom to change the views they then expressed.

2. That the present settlement imposes upon the people of the United Kingdom a burden which is both unreasonable in itself and inequitable in relation to the treatment accorded to other countries may be clearly seen from the following figures.

In respect of the war advances totaling $4,277,000,000, payments totaling $2,025,000,000, have been made up to date by His Majesty's Government to the United States Government. Yet despite these payments the nominal amount of the debt still outstanding as at June 15, 1934, amounts to $4,713,785,000.

Meanwhile, in respect of war advances totaling $5,773,300,000 made by the United States Government to other European governments, aggregate payments made up to date amount to only $678,500,000. Thus though the war advances to these other governments exceed by one-quarter the advances made to the United Kingdom, payments made by the United Kingdom amount to three times what the United States Government has received from those other powers.

On the other hand His Majesty's Government are creditors as well as debtors in respect of these intergovernmental obligations. While as stated above they borrowed $4,277,000,000 from the United States, they themselves made war advances to the allied governments totaling £1,600,000,000 ($7,800,000,000 at par). These loans were raised by His Majesty's Government from the people of the United Kingdom and the annual interest thereon, and eventually United Kingdom and the annual interest thereon, and eventually their capital repayment, must, in the absence of payments by debtor governments, be met out of the general taxation of their own people. In this respect the position of the United Kingdom is precisely similar to that of the United States; but whereas the United States have received very substantial payments against the domestic charges involved, His Majesty's Government have had to meet the domestic charges of their war loans to allied governments in full, as they have paid over to the United States Government all that they have received both from war debts and war reparations. that they have received both from war debts and war reparations, and they have in addition paid nearly as much again out of their

If the United States feel the burden of their war advances of $10,050,000,000, against which they have received $2,703,-000,000, how much heavier is the burden of the United Kingdom, which with one-third of the population of the United States has had to meet the full charges on its war advances of $7,800,000,000 without any net receipts against these charges and has in addition made large payments out of its own resources on account of its war debt to the United States?

None the less, convinced that any resumption of payments on the past scale could not but intensify the world crisis and might provoke financial and economic chaos, His Majesty's Govrement have suspended their claims on their debtors in the hope that a general revision of these intergovernmental obligations may be effected in the interest of world recovery. But it would be impossible for them to contemplate a situation in which they would be called on to honor in full their war obligations to others while continuing to suspend all demands for payment of war obligations due to them.

3. The improvement which has taken place in the budgetary situation of the United Kingdom in no way invalidates this conclusion. This improvement is due entirely to unprecedented clusion. This improvement is due entirely to unprecedented sacrifices made by the people of this country. Since the war they have been carrying a burden of indebtedness amounting to approximately £8,000,000,000 ($40,000,000,000) or £173 ($850) per head of their population, about one-fifth of which represents war loans made to allied governments. They have balanced their budgets and even realized a surplus by the painful process of reducing expenditure and increasing taxation.

For 15 years they have been paying taxation on a scale for

For 15 years they have been paying taxation on a scale for which it would be hard to find a parallel elsewhere. During the whole of this period the burden of taxation has been higher in the United Kingdom, and for a considerable part of the period twice as high as in the United States, including all Federal, State, and local taxation. This taxation, amounting to close on onequarter of the national income, has aggravated the depression over a long period, and the necessity of maintaining an army of unemployed resulting from this depression has constituted a formidable problem to the national finances ever since the war ended. Yet in order to restore the national credit in 1931, the people of the United Kingdom accepted further and heavy increases in tayation accompanied by rigorous control of expendit. creases in taxation, accompanied by rigorous control of expenditure, and cuts in salaries and allowances of all kinds; and despite all these measures the budget would have again shown a despite all these measures the budget would have again shown a deficit last year had it not been possible to secure by the conversion operation carried through in 1932 a reduction in the rate of interest paid on a large proportion of the public debt. This reduction has enabled His Majesty's Government to remit a part of the emergency sacrifices imposed in 1931 and to restore part of the cuts on salaries and the whole cut in unemployment allowances, the continuance of which was imposing a severe strain of the cuts on salaries and the whole cut in unemployment allowances, the continuance of which was imposing a severe strain on the national conscience. It would have been a gross act of social injustice to have denied this relief to the people of this country in order to pay war debts to the United States while suspending war debt payments due to the United Kingdom.

4. But although it is desirable that the internal budgetary position of this country should not be misunderstood, it is really irrelevant to the question of intergovernmental debt, the payment of which has to be related to the balance of trade and not to the volume of internal revenue. The revenues of the United Kingdom are sterling revenues, whereas the debt payments to America have to be made in dollars or in gold. In order to secure the means to pay, therefore, any sums available in sterling would have to be transferred across the exchange. The attempt to transfer amounts of this magnitude would as its immediate effect cause a sharp depreciation of sterling against the dollar, which as His Majesty's Government understand would not be consistent with the monetary policy of the United States Government. And in the long run such international transfers would be impossible without a radical alteration in the economic policies of the United States. Payment of debts implies the willingness of be impossible without a radical alteration in the economic policies of the United States. Payment of debts implies the willingness of the creditor to accept goods and services sufficient to cover the debts due to him over and above the goods and services required to cover his exports, and to make it possible for the United States to receive payment of their claims, it would be necessary to effect a complete reversal of the existing favorable balance of trade between their country and the rest of the world. In the case of the United Kingdom the balance of trade is heavily unfavorable, and the balance of accounts is not such that His Majesty's Government could contemplate the transfer of any substantial sum across the exchange, unless it was compensated by equivalent receipts from the foreign debts of this country. If this were done sterling would not be affected by the payments to America, but the burden would be thrown on the currencies of the European debtor countries, thereby aggravating the present crisis, which it is the object of both the United States and His Majesty's Government to alleviate. ment to alleviate.

5. Thus the question of the British war debt is only a part of the wider question of intergovernmental obligations resulting from the World War. As has already been pointed out, the United Kingdom, while it was a debtor to the United States, was itself a creditor for larger amounts from France, Italy, and other exallied Powers in respect of war debts, and these in turn are cocreditors with the United Kingdom of Germany in respect of cocreditors with the United Kingdom of Germany in respect of reparations. These intergovernmental debts, as stated in the British note of December 1, 1931, are radically different from commercial loans raised by foreign governments on the markets for productive purposes. War debts are neither productive nor self-liquidating, and the unnatural transfers required for their payment would involve a general collapse of normal international exchange and credit operations. The administration of the United States under President Hoover recognized this fact and initiated a moratorium on intergovernmental payments in 1931 in order to avert an immediate collapse. But the moratorium of 1931 caused another change in the situation; it made any resumption of the pre-existing reparation and war-debt settlements impossible, and the revision of reparations embodied in the Lausanne Agreement was made subject to conclusion of a subsequent agreement for a revision of war debts.

6. It was with these facts in mind that His Majesty's Government approached the United States Government in December ment approached the United States Government in December 1932, and the United States Government in their note of Decem-1932, and the United States Government in their note of December 7 welcomed their suggestion for a close examination between the two countries of the whole subject. After this exchange of notes His Majesty's Government paid the installment due on December 15, 1932, in gold, explaining that this payment was not to be regarded as a resumption of the annual payments contemplated by the existing agreement, and that it was made because there had not been time for discussion with regard to that agreement to take place, and because the United States Government had stated that in their opinion such a payment would greatly increase the prospects of a satisfactory approach to the whole problem.

In accordance with the arrangement then made, discussions took place first in the spring and later in the autumn of last year between representatives of the two countries, and His Majesty's Government appreciates the sympathetic manner in which their representatives were listened to. But on both occasions it was found impossible to arrive at a settlement acceptable to the two Governments in face of the unprecedented state of world economic and financial conditions. Accordingly the discussions were adjourned, and on June 15 and December 15, 1933, His Majesty's Government made token payments in acknowledgment of the debt and the President expressed the personal view that he would not regard His Majesty's Government as in default.

7. In their note of November 6 last His Majesty's Government expressed their readiness to resume negotiations on the general question whenever, after consultation with the President, it might appear that this could usefully be done, and His Majesty's Government is glad to note that the President in his message to Congress on June 1 has again stated that each of the debtor governments concerned has full and free opportunity to discuss this problem with the Government of the United States. But unfortunately recent events have shown that discussions on the whole question with a view to a final settlement cannot at present usefully be renewed. In these circumstances His Majesty's Government would have been quite prepared to make a further payment on June 15 in acknowledgment of the debt and without prejudice to their right again to present the case of its readjustment, on the assumption that they would again have received the President's declaration that he would not consider them in default. They understand, however, that in consequence of recent legislation no such declaration would now be possible, and, if this be the case, the procedure adopted by common agreement in 1933 is no longer practicable.

8. His Majesty's Government are in fact faced with a choice between only two alternatives, viz., to pay in full the sum of $262,000,000 as set forth in the communication from the United States Treasury, dated May 25, or to suspend all interim payments pending a finel revision of the settlement which has been expressed their readiness to resume negotiations on the general

States Treasury, dated May 25, or to suspend all interim payments pending a final revision of the settlement, which has been delayed by events beyond the control of the two Governments. Deeply as they regret the circumstances which have forced them to take such a decision, His Majesty's Government feel that they could not assume the responsibility of adopting a course which would revive the whole system of inter-governmental wardebt payments.

As already pointed out the resumption of full payments to the United States would necessitate a corresponding demand by His Majesty's Government from their own war debtors. It would be a recreation of the conditions which existed prior to the world crisis and were in a large measure responsible for it. Such procedure would throw a bombshell into the European arena which would have financial and economic repercussions over all five continents and would postpone indefinitely the chances of world recovery.

Accordingly His Majesty's Government are reluctantly compelled to take the only other course open to them. But they wish to reiterate that, while suspending further payments until it beto reiterate that, while suspending further payments until it becomes possible to discuss an ultimate settlement of intergovernmental war debts with a reasonable prospect of agreement, they have no intention of repudiating their obligations, and will be prepared to enter upon further discussion of the subject at any time when in the opinion of the President such discussion would be likely to produce results of value.

I have the honor to be,

With the highest consideration, sir, your most obedient, humble servant humble servant, R. C. LINDSAY.

The Honorable Cordell Hull, Secretary of State of the United States, Washington, D.C.

THE SQUARE DEAL-ADDRESS BY SENATOR REED

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] on May 14, on the subject of The Square Deal.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SQUARE DEAL

We have heard much in recent days about the old deal and much about the new deal. I want to speak to you for a few minutes about the square deal.

I have always regarded Theodore Roosevelt as one of our greatest Presidents. As a young man, he was to me something of a political idol. I was 17 years old when he organized the Rough Riders and started for the Caribbean. I was 20 when he first became President, upon the death of President McKinley. I first became active in politics in what has come to be known as the "Roosevelt era." Theodore Roosevelt, with his buoyancy, his fighting spirit, his idealism, was inevitably the idol of the young men of that day. It was natural that, along with others of my own age, I should have been influenced by the gospel which he preached, as well as by his personal example as a brave, clean citizen, a leader of men, and one who stood stanchly by the things in which he believed.

Later, as he reached the full peak of his powers, and as I in I have always regarded Theodore Roosevelt as one of our great-

Later, as he reached the full peak of his powers, and as I in turn matured and began to take a serious interest in public affairs, my admiration of Theodore Roosevelt, the man, increased affairs, my admiration of Theodore Roosevert, the man, increased rather than diminished.

In thinking back I am sure that it was his strong sense of social justice, his habit of fighting for the under dog, which captured my enthusiasm and left me with the lasting impression that among all our Presidents, with their varied qualities of greatness, here was one who consistently fought for those things which he thought were right—for the square deal for every man. In doing so he exhibited a blend of warm human sympathy with hard-headed common sense rarely found in men who are known as reformers.

There have been other crusaders before and since; other reformers, other idealists, with a lofty vision of things as they ought to be. It was part of Theodore Roosevelt's greatness that he was able to look at things as they are, to accept humanity as he found it, and accepting the facts of human nature, do what he could to see that the strong did not trample the weak, and to introduce into politics a breath of fresh air which is sadly needed.

In thinking of politics of today, of governmental trends, of policies, and of slogans, I am beginning to believe that what the country needs is a new vision of the square deal; a new birth of practical idealism, in which ideals will be tested by sound common sense. There is much about what has come to be known as the "old deal" that I do not like. There is a great deal about the new deal which I know is wrong in principle, unsound in practice, and dangerous in the hands of inexperienced experimenters. If we can take what we know to be sound from the old deal and add to it what we have found to be worthy in the new deal, and with common courage go forward toward the goal of deal and add to it what we have found to be worthy in the new deal, and with common courage go forward toward the goal of the square deal, in which each of us will think a little more of the other fellow and a little less of himself, and try a little harder to act unselfishly for the common good of the country as a whole, we shall have set the United States on the high road to a destiny greater than it has known.

All right, you say, but these are generalities. I grant you that they are. I am laying down a set of principles. We have thought and talked too much in terms of statistics. Statistics are imporand talked too much in terms of statistics. Statistics are important, but no nation was ever founded or saved by a statistical chart. The thing that matters is not how many hogs were slaughtered to raise the price of hogs, but that any hogs should be slaughtered and their carcasses destroyed while people are hungry. The thing which should concern us is not the exact number of unemployed as the fact that there are any unemployed and any who are in want in a country so rich as ours. Thinking in these terms, it is principles which count. So tonight, instead of talking, as I so often do, about the details of the tariff, or the processing taxes, or the billions of dollars given to the professors to spend on new experiments, I want to talk to you about some of the things which I think are wrong with us, and what ought to be done about it.

In the first place, I wonder sometimes whether we are not losing something of the strength of character which led our ancestors to leave their homes in Europe and come here to build a new home in a new country. I wonder whether we are not a new home in a new country. I wonder whether we are not becoming soft. With a little thought we should see for ourselves that the real cure for our troubles is, as it always has been, hard work, self-denial, intelligent initiative, competition, recognition of the rights of others, and that sense of brotherhood which makes us willing always to feed and clothe the unfortunate, and to help the other fellow.

We have seen developing again a sectional spirit, a selfish spirit, which can never serve as a satisfactory foundation for national happiness. We have got to look inward less and outward more. Pennsylvania has got to think of Iowa and Iowa has got to think of Pennsylvania. We both have to think of Texas, and Texas has to remember that her markets are in the other States. Some has to remember that her markets are in the other States. Some States, like California, more self-contained than the rest, seem to get along pretty well by themselves, uninfluenced to the same extent as other States by the general business trend. But even California, self-contained though it is, is a part of the country as much as Massachusetts. We are all neighbors, after all, brought closer together each day by the speeding up of transportation and the interchange of ideas.

That means, of course, that all of us will have to think more and more as time goes on, not of Pennsylvania or Texas or Iowa or of California alone, but of the United States. For in the end the fate that overtakes the United States will overtake each State. We will stand or fall together.

the fate that overtakes the United States will overtake each State. We will stand or fall together.

I do not like the processing taxes of the new deal, for I know that they are unfair to the East, that they have placed an additional burden on the city dweller of small income who is least able to bear it, and that they will prove in the end to be a burden also on the farmer, and to hurt him because they will further lower the buying power of his city customers. You farmers who are listening to me tonight know that the farmers cannot prosper unless the cities prosper, and you city people who are listening know that the cities cannot prosper unless the farmers also prosper and are able to buy your goods. One trouble with us is that most of us seem to be trying to get all we can out of the rest of us, without realizing that the effect of uneven distribution, or of unequal taxation, is to injure all of us.

I do not like to see labor and capital engaged in a continuous clash. Capital should know that those who labor are those who buy, and labor should realize that unless capital is permitted to make a reasonable profit, there can be no industry on a large scale.

I see often, in riding the train between Washington and Philadelphia, great factory buildings standing empty and idle, their windows broken awaiting orders that never come giving emindows broken awaiting orders that never come giving emindows broken awaiting orders that never come giving emindows the come and capital empty and idle, their windows broken awaiting orders that never come giving emindows the come and capital empty and idle, their windows broken awaiting orders that never come giving emindows the come and capital empty and idle, their windows broken awaiting orders that never come giving emindows the come and capital empty and idle, their windows broken awaiting orders that never come giving emindows the come and capital empty and idle, their windows broken awaiting orders that never come giving emindows the come and capital empty and idle, the

I see often, in riding the train between Washington and Philadelphia, great factory buildings standing empty and idle, their windows broken, awaiting orders that never come, giving employment to no one—gone the way of those who fall to survive in the struggle for existence. I see working on the roads, men who were formerly employed in those factories. It may be that the factory owner and the factory labor were both responsible in part for this state of affairs. I do not know. But I do know that if the United States is to survive in the struggle with other nations, most of which have been launched since the war on a new program of industrial growth, we must begin to think of pulling together more and fighting less among ourselves.

What will it profit the capitalist if in fighting for an excessive profit he loses all his business? And what will it profit labor if it wins all of its battles only to find that no one can make a profit and that people cannot buy?

Machinery is being invented every day to take the place of human labor. The men formerly employed in a glass factory in my own State of Pennsylvania begged me recently to vote for a tax on glass-making machines. If to do so would have helped them, I should gladly have voted as they asked. Instead, I was compelled to remind them that the same kind of glassware is made on the same kind of machines in European countries and made on the same kind of machines in European countries, and that if our machines are taxed and Europe's machines are not, even the men who run the machines in this country would be thrown out of work.

We provide a tariff law taxing foreign manufactures to protect American labor engaged in making similar products. We have greatly restricted immigration with the same end in view—to protect our own people in their work. We have in the United States the greatest self-contained empire in the world. Under normal conditions there is a wider diffusion of work and of wealth in the United States than in any other country. If we can prevent our tariff and immigration bars from being broken down in the interest of European and oriental immigrants and of European and est of European and oriental immigrants and of European and oriental goods, we will be able to work out our problems and get back on our feet. I do not like those policies of the new deal which threaten to weaken these two defenses against the attacks of foreign competitors and against the invasion of the United States by multitudes of immigrants with lower living standards than ours, each one of whom, if allowed to enter, would take the work or the business of some Americans. In speaking of the square deal I am thinking of our own people. The idealist may say it is not fair to the Chinese to keep them out of the United States. My answer to that is that it is not fair to the American people to let them in. I am trying to think as an American, and people to let them in. I am trying to think as an American, and as a Chinese.

I do not like the tendency so apparent in the policies of the pro-fessors to bring all industry and all labor, including agriculture, under the control of the Washington Government. I do not think Americans have lost entirely the love of liberty they inherited from their forbears

I do not want them to lose the feeling of freedom, which would surely be lost if we let the Government tell us, as the Soviet Gov-ernment tells the people of Russia, what work to do, where to do it, what to wear, what to eat, and what to think. I prefer to choose my own food and my own clothes, to work at the thing I like best, and to do my own thinking. I believe most Americans feel as I do. We are a free people, and we must remain free. I am sure that we will. I am sure that the American people will reject those policies and repudiate those leaders who seek to take away that freedom.

Badly off as we are, let no one tell you that conditions are better elsewhere. It is still something to be an American, as in ancient days it was something to be a citizen of Rome.

There is still more of opportunity in the United States than anywhere else in the world.

There is more to be achieved in the United States than in any other country.

There are greater material rewards awaiting the man or woman who can find the key to unlock them.

There is a greater sense of justice, of humanity, of freedom, than in any other country.

There were abuses under the old deal which require correction.

They are being corrected.

There are abuses under the new deal which require correction. They will be corrected.

If we can strike a balance between the common sense of the old deal and the impractical theories of the new deal we will have rediscovered, as we must rediscover regularly in a changing civilization, the practical idealism of the square deal.

I would go neither to the left, in the direction of communism, nor to the right, in the direction of fascism. I do not want the United States ruled by a commissar, nor do I want it ruled by a Hitler or a Mussolini. I am against proletariat dictatorship no less than I am against capitalist dictatorship. A square deal for all the people is to be found only under a government in which all the people participate. Somewhere between the old deal and the new deal. I am satisfied that we Americans, if we dedicate ourselves to the task, will find again the square deal.

THE NEW ERA-ADDRESS BY JAMES A. FARLEY

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD an address by the Honorable James A. Farley, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, delivered today, Thursday, June 14, 1934, before the Democratic Preprimary Convention at Worcester, Mass.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman, Governor, ladies and gentlemen, fellow Democrats, Mr. Chairman, Governor, ladies and gentlemen, fellow Democrats, I am delighted to be here in Massachusetts again. It is the first time I have had an opportunity to visit a strictly party group here since the election of 1932, and to thank in person the virile, vigorous, far-seeing, and loyal Democracy of this State who helped to make possible the election of President Franklin D. Roosevelt. It is a matter of great happiness to me to be here with you, and to tell you how much we in Washington respect the statesmanship, how much we appreciate the loyalty, how much we feel indebted for the service of your senior Senator, the Honorable David I. Walsh. He is an able and conscientious servant of the people of this great State and of the Nation. I hope that his services will this great State and of the Nation. I hope that his services will long be given to the Nation with pride by the voters of this great American Commonwealth. To your junior Senators, the Honorable Marcus I. Coolinge, I desire also to pay my tribute, and to the Members of Congress whom you have sent to the National Capitol with the solution of your legislative problems.

We are standing today on a threshold of a new day—a new day for the people. That new day was enunciated boldly and clearly last Friday when in Washington a great message of hope and faith was transmitted to the Congress of the United States by one of the greatest liberal leaders of all history—our own President Franklin D. Roosevelt. I refer to his message on the subject of social insurance, land utilization, and housing, a threefold program for the future—a goal toward which, under his courageous leadership this great liberal party can now set its course.

the future—a goal toward which, under his courageous leadership this great liberal party can now set its course.

Here we have a stirring pronouncement—a banner unfurled to the cause of the average man and the average woman behind which all can march in solid phalanx to battle for the good of all.

Never before in our history has there been such wholesome promise for the American people. And the next Congress of the United States will successfully achieve the consummation of this three points regreat. I am sure.

Three-point program, I am sure.

I do not consider it necessary to review the vivid pageant of performance of this administration since President Roosevelt took performance of this administration since President Roosevelt took office on March 4, 1933. I do not consider it a part of my task to recite the various phases of the recovery program that lifted this Nation from its knees and brought it, right about, almost in the twinkling of an eye, to its feet, straight and erect, facing bravely and fearlessly the rising sun of a new deal.

It is ground-hog day for critics of the new deal. They come out of their holes to see a world still functioning, a sun still shining—their little eyes blinking in amazement. These fault-finding critics, dumb in terror a little over a year ago, are now summoning courage to speak out.

Business is improving, agriculture slowly is reviving, confidence is returning, millions of jobless men are marching back to work, and just as we begin to strike our stride on the march to full economic recovery we behold some old familiar figures in the road urging us to go back.

Who are those solemn-faced gentlemen who warn us against the path of progress? They need no introduction, for they were notorious enough as the directing brains of the Hoover period of suicide and soup.

There, warning us against Rooseveltian progress, are Mellons, the Millses, and the Watsons; the Wadsworths, the Fes

Mellons, the Millses, and the Watsons; the Wadsworths, the Fesses, and the Reeds; the Hales, the Walcotts, and the Austins; and all the rest of their reactionary cohorts. I count them the blackest reactionary group in the service of privilege in all the land today. They are the old guard of the old gang, and they have a past. In the closet of every mother's son of them is the skeleton of his record as an adviser of Mr. Hoover during the 4 years these most-superior gentlemen were engaged in the elimination of poverty and in putting two chickens in every pot.

With 4 years of the dreadful ruin behind them, and because of them, these critics now assume the pose of men who alone know what should be done today. Haven't we then a right to recall the condition of our country when government was directed by their collective and separate wisdom?

There is scarcely a single family between the seas that does not bear the scars of the suffering it underwent from 1929 until these critics passed from power.

And when the financial structure of the Nation was tottering, when industry was languishing, when agriculture was in bank-when industry was languishing, when agriculture was in bank-ruptcy, when 14,000,000 breadwinners were denied their right to work, what had those pretentious and impertinent prophets and spokesmen of Hooverism to propose.

Where was their wisdom then?

I appeal now from the sophistry and quackery of these false prophets to the record of the ruin of their four long despairing prophets to the record of the ruin of their four long despairing years of power.

You will remember the wildest and most greedy market speculation since the historic days of the Mississippi bubble. You will recall that powerful banks, custodians of people's hard-earned money, were so busy with speculation that they had no money to loan for legitimate business enterprise. You have not forgotten how that quack prosperity on paper, in which a few grew rich on the credulity of the many, was held forth as a proof of the capacity of these critics to rule. You must remember that instead of seeking to moderate the madness the Government, dominated by these critics, gave every possible encouragement to the debauch by issuing officially false and misleading statements; and you will remember the inevitable crash—for the page of history that records that tragedy will ever remain one of the blackest in our story.

You will remember—for you cannot forget such things in 18 months—the resulting crash of banks, crushing the hopes of millions whose life savings were thus swept away.

But, if you forget, the historian relentlessly will write of the

But, if you forget, the historian relentlessly will write of the effect of the blind and stupid policy that raised walls against foreign trade until market after market across the seas was closed to the product of our factories and fields; with ships left idle or operating at a collosal loss; with factories reducing their production in proportion to the loss of trade; with millions of industrial workers thrown into the street to exist on the crumbs of private charity or to starve.

And in those days of despairful misery in this land of plenty, what single intelligent plan did the Mills, the Mellons, the Watsons, the Wadsworths, the Fesses, or the Reeds, the Austins, the Wolcotts, or the Hales, or any of the minor figures in the mockery of present-day criticism, advance to meet the gravest crisis we have ever known?

I challenge contradiction—they did not advance a single idea.

have ever known?

I challenge contradiction—they did not advance a single idea. They were wells without water, and cupboards without bread. That is the reason, as you must vividly recall, that the most plaintive and persistent cry that rose from every quarter and every class was a call for leadership, and there was no answer from these pompous critics but the echo of that tragic cry.

Let me stir your memory again. Is it not true that this old guard of the old gang that now urges you back to the sterile days of Hooverism, sat dazed by the magnitude of the ruin their lack of policy had wrought, silent in their fear, twirling their thumbs, in the nervous apprehension of their utter helplessness?

Isn't it true that not one of them from Mellon and Mills down to Dave Reed and Jim Watson had the initiative or the courage to propose a plan, nor the honesty to concede their blunders? They sat in a state of moral inertia and mental paralysis, hoping against hope for something to turn up?

Isn't that your recollection of those halcyon days to which these impudent critics would invite you back?

But in justice to their mentality I sometimes wonder if they were as dumb as they seemed. I have sometimes thought that through their policies they had built up a system of privilege through which a small group waxed wealthy while the average man lost his birthright; and rather than correct the wrongs on which they thrived, they preferred to stand pat, in the desperate hope that the storm would pass, and with the system of privilege intact, the exploitation of the millions might go on.

At any rate, as you well know, the Mellons, the Mills, the Wadsworths, the Reeds, the Watsons, and the rest of them, when leadership was needed, had but one idea—stand pat! They could not even rise to the dignity of the corner medicine peddler, for the time came when they were ashamed to bank their cheap and tawdry wares.

And so they stood pat month by month throughout those tragic

And so they stood pat month by month throughout those tragic years, and you will remember how the army of the unemployed increased; how the bank failures constantly accelerated; how the bankruptcies of merchants multiplied; how hard-earned homes were swept away; how month by month more factory wheels stopped turning; how day by day the farmers were dispossessed; and how week by week, the line of the jobless lengthened, until the period of the leadership of those critics of Roosevelt came to be known as the period of starvation, suicide, and soup.

Who can forget that?

Who can forget that?

Remember, too, that as the gloom deepened into darkness, without one single voice of intelligent leadership raised to calm the all too legitimate fears of men, the entire Nation from banker to day laborer gave way to panic and despair.

And so you voted these "wise" men out of power—

Because you were tired of their selfishness.

Because you were tired of their blundering and bungling.

Because you were sick of their misrepresentations of conditions. Because you were through with their thumb twirling, waiting,

Because you were through with their thumb twirling, waiting, and watching for something to turn up.

Because under the inept leadership of the Mellons, the Mills, the Watsons, the Wadsworths, the Vandenbergs, the Austins, the Reeds, the Wolcotts, the Hales—a leadership stationary as a lamppost and as impervious to new ideas—we were moving at an accelerated speed toward utter ruin.

And remember this—you cannot possibly have forgotten—when these discredited leaders passed from power they left the Nation in dire danger of the most colossal financial catastrophe in human history.

And now for a moment let us leave these critics of Roosevelt creaking and recall the last 2 days of the regime for the return of which they have the audacity to ask.

Never had America sunk so low in despondency and despair as it was on the eve of the inauguration of Franklin D. Roosevelt. The Nation was set for tragedy. The financial structure of the country seemed trembling to its fall.

country seemed trembling to its fall.

Saturday noon Franklin D. Roosevelt had this appalling problem dumped into his lap by this selfish band of critics of today; Sunday found him grappling with the problem; and on Monday morning the country thrilled to the drastic courageous measure that he took to prevent a financial wreck.

And when, for the first time in 4 years, Americans heard the clear, strong voice of command at the head of the column, they took heart, lifted up their heads, and thanked God that at last they heard the confident voice of courageous, constructive, and honest leadership.

Isn't that true?

Not much more than a year has passed and what has the here

Not much more than a year has passed, and what has the harvest been?

vest been?

In the tremendous task of saving our civilization and institutions mistakes inevitably will occur, for man is mortal; but Roosevelt, with an open mind, can be counted on to correct them if he finds them. But one fact no one denies—business is on the upgrade again; and the engineers of ruin, the Mills, the Mellons, the Wadsworths, the Watsons, the Vandenbergs, the Austins, the Walcotts, and the Hales and the Reeds have the insolence to warn you against the peril of improvement.

Now that the old guard of the old gang is out of power confidence has been restored. Who denies that now?

The depositors in the banks feel safe; for by his reforms, unpardonably neglected for many years, Roosevelt has made banks safe.

ended—and Roosevelt has ended them.

Millions of jobless men are again employed—and Roosevelt's robust policies have put them back to work.

Cutthroat competition is controlled—and Roosevelt, in the interest of legitimate business, has controlled it.

The earnings of agriculture have increased, the shadow is slowly lifting from the farm—and Roosevelt's policies have put new heart into the tillers of the soil.

Yes; industry and commerce, plunging downward under the rule of the old guard of the old gang that criticizes now, is now climbing upward—and the new deal of Roosevelt has wrought the miracle.

More jobs, more wages, more earnings on legitimate investments, more confidence, more hope, more courage under Roosevelt; and, lo from the tomb a dismal sound—the impudent invitation of the Mellons, the Mills, the Wadsworths, the Reeds, the Vandenbergs, and the Watsons that we turn our backs on the rising sun and march with them back into the black caves where we dwelt in hopeless misery through 4 never-to-be-forgotten years.

hopeless misery through 4 never-to-be-forgotten years.

Do you remember—you must remember—how the silly Pollyanna assurances that conditions were improving when the blind could see that they were growing worse, finally were greeted with cries of derision? And how the quack promise reiterated constantly as the night grew darker that prosperity was "just around the corner", was hooted into silence?

Such was the leadership to which you are invited to renew allegiance—a leadership too blind to see, too ossified mentally to think, too paralyzed to act, too weak and fearful to face and tell the truth.

Isn't that your recollection?

Isn't that your recollection?

What suits you best—Hoover misery and disaster or Rooseveltian progress and hope?

Which would you prefer—to stand pat with these reactionaries for privilege for a few, or to move forward with Roosevelt to a sounder and more equitable prosperity than we have ever had before?

Where do you stand—with the dead past or the living present and the glowing future?

Are you ready for the question?

PARTICIPATION BY UNITED STATES MARINE BAND IN VARIOUS REUNIONS

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill (H.R. 9145) to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic to be held at Richester, N.Y., August 14, 15, and 16, 1934, and at the National Convention of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, to be held at Colorado Springs, Colo., during the first week in July, was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered so that I may offer an amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, what is the status of the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill was passed on yes-

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Has it gone to the House of Representatives?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is still in the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina? The Chair hears none, and the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed is reconsidered.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, after the amendment on line 7, to add the words "and the annual convention of the Thirtieth Division of the American Expeditionary Forces, to be held at Asheville, N.C., on September 28, 29, and 30, 1934."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the second amendment offered by the Senator from North Caro-

The CHIEF CLERK. In the second section, after the word "encampments", to insert the words "and conventions".

The crooked speculations of banking institutions have been and to strike out "$7,700" and to insert in lieu thereof "$11,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic to be held at Rochester, N.Y., August 14, 15, and 16, 1934, and at the National Convention of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War to be held at Colorado Springs, Colo., during the first week in July, and at the annual convention of the Thirtieth Division of the American Expeditionary Forces, to be held at Asheville, N.C., on September 28, 29, and 30, 1934." PAYMENTS UNDER SETTLEMENT OF WAR CLAIMS' ACT-CONFERENCE

REPORT

Mr. KING submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H.J.Res. 325) extending for 2 years the time within which American claimants may make application for payment under the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928 of awards of the Mixed Claims Commission and the Tripartite Claims Commission and extending until March 10. 1936, the time within which Hungarian claimants may make application for payment under the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928 of awards of the War Claims Arbiter having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1, and the Senate recede from its amendment to the title.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2 with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment, and on page 2, lines 4 and 5, of the House joint resolution, strike out "paragraph (h) of subsection (2)" and insert "subsection (h)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

WILLIAM H. KING, WALTER F. GEORGE, JAMES COUZENS, Managers on the part of the Senate. R. L. DOUGHTON, SAM. B. HILL. THOS. H. CULLEN, ALLEN T. TREADWAY, ISAAC BACHARACH, Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I move that the conference report be agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

CONTROL OF COTTON PRODUCTION

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 138) to amend an act entitled "An act to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes" (Public, No. 169, 73d Cong.), approved April 21, 1934.

Mr. President, when the Bankhead cotton-control bill was under consideration by the Senate the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson] offered an amendment, which was agreed to, fixing the quota of that State at 200,000 bales. I also offered an amendment, which was agreed to, affecting cotton having a staple of 11/2 inches or longer. Both amendments have been misinterpreted by the Department of Agriculture, to the detriment of our two States.

The author of the bill, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and the coauthor of the bill, who is a Member of the House of Representatives, have both agreed that this joint resolution should be enacted, so as to carry out the original intent of the Cotton Control Act.

The joint resolution was drafted in the Department of Agriculture and is endorsed by the Secretary of Agriculture. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the act entitled "An act to place the cotton industry on a sound financial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes" (Public, No. 169, 73d Cong.), approved April 21, 1934, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

1934, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 25. (a) No tax-exemption certificates shall be issued to any person not engaged in production of cotton in the crop year during which such certificates are issued.

"(b) Whenever after apportionment under sections 7 and 8 any surplus number of bales remain of the amount allotted to any county under section 5 (b) such surplus bales shall be allotted, in such quantities as the Secretary of Agriculture determines, to such other counties within the State as the Secretary of Agriculture determines have an insufficient allotment. Said bales shall be apportioned, pursuant to sections 7 and 8, within the respective counties to which allotted, but in no case shall any farm receive any of such allotment so as to receive a total allotment in excess of its estimated production for the crop year in which such allotment is made.

in which such allotment is made.

"(c) In computing the production of any State pursuant to section 5 (a) the total production of cotton for such State in the 5-year period 1928-32, inclusive, shall be used regardless of the length of staple of such production."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, because there was objection to the cotton-control bill when it was pending in the Senate, I ask the Senator whether this joint resolution clarifies the bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. It does.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I think I shall have to call for the regular order, unless this is very important

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the joint resolution is thoroughly understood, and it is agreeable to the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. FESS. Very well. Let it be acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arizona that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. W. BRUNSWICK

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, several years ago I introduced into the RECORD certain material which was thought to be a criticism of Mr. W. W. Brunswick, recently of the American Consular Service. I have received a letter from Mr. Huston Thompson, which he has requested me to have printed in the RECORD. In view of the fact that this is a reply to material which I put into the RECORD, which might be deemed a criticism of Mr. Brunswick, I am very happy indeed to ask consent of the Senate to insert the letter in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D.C., May 24, 1934.

Hon. ROYAL S. COPELAND.

United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

My Dear Senator: This letter is in response to a recent interview had with you by Mr. W. Brunswick, recently of the American Consular Service, in which you suggested a method of procedure relative to correcting the effect of certain damaging statements that had been made against Mr. Brunswick and inserted in the Congressional Record.

Pursuant to his official duty, on April 29, 1931, Mr. Brunswick, our consul in Barbados, British West Indies, made a confidential world-trade directory report to the Department of State touching on the general business reputation of one Victor Parravicino, a resident of the Barbados, engaged at the time in the commission business, the operation of a hotel and bar, and other enterprises. Parravicino obtained a copy of Mr. Brunswick's report and instituted suit in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia against Mr. Brunswick and the surety on his bond. While this suit was pending there was published in the Congressional Record on January 19, 1933, certain printed and written matter, to which, under all the rules of fairness, Mr. Brunswick should have been entitled to reply. No reply was made at the time for the reason that Mr. Brunswick believed the litigation should be tried in the courts only.

The case came on for hearing in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and was thrown out on the pleadings. It District of Columbia and was thrown out on the pleadings. It was then appealed by Mr. Parravicino to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, and on February 5, 1934, this court after a hearing handed down an opinion affirming the judgment of the lower court and sent the case back for dismissal. Inasmuch as the matter published in the Congressional Record reflected seriously on the character of Mr. Brunswick and his honesty of purpose, and in view of the fact that the action of Mr. Brunswick, I am making the suit is a complete vindication of Mr. Brunswick, I am making the request that if it is possible you will have this statement published in the Record. This is only fair in view of the fact that the charges of Mr. Parravicino disrupted a consular career of 25 years of honest and faithful service.

Among the matters published in the Congressional Record on January 19, 1933, was a World Trade Directory Report, by J. C.

January 19, 1933, was a World Trade Directory Report, by J. C. Dorr, the consular successor of Mr. Brunswick in the Barbados, which report was accepted without question by the Department and placed on file in the State and Commerce Departments. We which report was accepted without question by the Department and placed on file in the State and Commerce Departments. We have made an investigation of this report, and do not hesitate to say that it was filled with gross inaccuracies. The worst feature about it was that it was used as a basis for a complaint before the Department against Mr. Brunswick. The fact is that Mr. Brunswick's report was a very fair statement, while the Dorr report showed partiality and unfairness.

The result of all this action against Mr. Brunswick was that charges were brought against him before the personnel board of the State Department, and he was finally offered the alternative of being discharged or being retired on a very small pension after a physical examination. On my advice, because the litigation was not then settled, he accepted the latter way out. As a result of all of this unfair action against Mr. Brunswick, he has suffered in mind and body and has had a heavy loss financially.

I may say that, together with other attorneys, I have represented Mr. Brunswick in this matter without any retainer or any consideration whatsoever, and solely for the reason that his case appealed to me so strongly and I felt he had been so outrageously treated. As one of the steps in remedying the injustice done to him I am asking that, if possible, this statement may be incorporated in the Congressional Record as in part a corrective of the serious charges that were made against him in the aforesaid article that appeared in the Record in 1933.

Cordially yours,

Cordially yours,

HUSTON THOMPSON.

DISTRICT LIFE-INSURANCE CODE

Mr. WAGNER obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask a very great favor of the Senate.

For a number of years we have been very much interested, in the District of Columbia, in having enacted a suitable bill dealing with life-insurance companies, and, failing to get such a measure, many frauds have been committed on stockholders in some of the corporations and those who had insurance policies have been robbed.

Several years have been spent by competent lawyers and competent insurance representatives of the District of Columbia, and they have drafted a measure which meets all objections and meets the desires and wishes of the insurance commission of the District and of the District Commissioners. It passed the House practically unanimously, and it was given great attention by Representative HARLAN, who spent many months in the consideration of the bill. The District Committee yesterday unanimously recommended the passage of the bill.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I shall not object to this, but I will object to anything else until we get on with the bill which is the unfinished business.

Mr. KING. The only reason why I am so anxious about this is that it is a long bill and will have to be engrossed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has recognized the Senator from New York. The Chair understands that the Senator from New York yielded to the Senator from Utah for the purpose of asking unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill.

Mr. KING. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, when was the bill reported?

Mr. KING. It was reported today.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will not the Senator let it go over until tomorrow morning?

Mr. KING. I shall have to do so.

PROTECTION OF TRADE AND COMMERCE AGAINST INTERFERENCE BY VIOLENCE, THREATS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2248) to protect trade and commerce against interference by vio-Ience, threats, coercion, or intimidation, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the term "trade or commerce", as used herein, is defined to mean trade or commerce between any States, with foreign nations, in the District of Columbia, in any Territory of the United States, between any such Territory or the District of Columbia and any State or other Territory, and all other trade or commerce over which the United States has constitutional jurisdiction.

Sec. 2. Any person who, in connection with or in relation to any act in any way or in any degree affecting trade or commerce or any article or commodity moving or about to move in trade or commerce

(a) Obtains or attempts to obtain, by the use of or attempt to (a) Obtains or attempts to obtain, by the use of or attempt to use or threat to use force, violence, or coercion, the payment of money or other valuable considerations, or the purchase or rental of property or protective services, not including, however, the payment of wages by a bona fide employer to a bona fide employee; or (b) Obtains the property of another, with his consent, induced by wrongful use of force or fear, or under color of official right; or (c) Commits or threatens to commit an act of physical violence or physical injury to a person or property in furtherance of a plan

(c) Commits or threatens to commit an act of physical violence or physical injury to a person or property in furtherance of a plan or purpose to violate sections (a) or (b); or (d) Conspires or acts concertedly with any other person or persons to commit any of the foregoing acts; shall, upon conviction thereof, be guilty of a felony and shall be punished by imprisonment from 1 to 10 years or by a fine of $10,000, or both.

SEC. 3. (a) As used in this set the term (**Transpired**)

SEC. 3. (a) As used in this act the term "wrongful" means in violation of the criminal laws of the United States or of any State or Territory.

(b) The terms "property", "money", or "valuable considerations" used herein shall not be deemed to include wages paid by a bona fide employer to a bona fide employee.

SEC. 4. Prosecutions under this act shall be commenced only upon the express direction of the Attorney General of the United

SEC. 5. If any provisions of this act or the application thereof to

SEC. 5. If any provisions of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 6. Any person charged with violating this act may be prosecuted in any district in which any part of the offense has been committed by him or by his actual associates participating with him in the offense or by his fellow conspirators: Provided, That no court of the United States shall construe or apply any of the provisions of this act in such manner as to impair, diminish, or in provisions of this act in such manner as to impair, diminish, or in any manner affect the rights of bona fide labor organizations in lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof, as such rights are expressed in existing statutes of the United States.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Robinson] to this matter. This bill passed the Senate and went to the House, and the provisions in the bill which were criticized have been corrected by the amendment. Therefore, if it is agreeable to the Senator from Indiana to withdraw his proposal for a reconsideration, I will ask that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I asked for a reconsideration originally because those interested in American labor were opposed to the bill as it was drafted. should like to ask the Senator from New York now whether or not labor is satisfied with the bill?

Mr. COPELAND. I am assured by the Attorney General that the Federation of Labor is now satisfied.

I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD EMPLOYEE'S RETIREMENT SYSTEM

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3231) to provide a retirement system for railroad employees, to provide unemployment relief, and for other purposes.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I desire briefly to address the Senate upon the pending legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] has given notice that he will object to the consideration of anything except the pending business. He has called for the regular order, which is the bill before the Senate.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I desire to address the Senate briefly upon the pending legislation. To begin with, I should like to pay a tribute to the chairman of the subcommittee which had this legislation under consideration. I am sure my colleague, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD], who, together with myself, introduced this legislation, will concur in that tribute. I am sure that if it were not for the indefatigable services rendered by the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Brown] as chairman of the subcommittee it might very well be that this legislation would not now be before us for consideration.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I will say that I heartily concur with the distinguished Senator from New York in commending the great efforts put forward by the chairman of the subcommittee, the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Brown]. It is due to his continual work that it has been possible to report the legislation at this time.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, insurance for the aged is one public measure not subject even to the shallow objections that have balked other proposals for social legislation in this country. Popular fancy may be caught temporarily by the plea that a man is unemployed because he is shiftless, or that he has met with an accident because he is careless; but old age, while not a certainty in any particular case, is not a preventable evil.

In this country the falling birth rate and the increase in the average span of life have constantly enlarged the number of people who pass the mark of 65 years. In 1850 only 2.5 percent of the total population were old in this sense; today the figure stands at 5.5 percent, while in numbers the change has been from 600,000 to 6,500,000. It is competently estimated that within 40 years about 20,000,000 people in this country will be over 65 years of age.

As the machine age takes the place of the craftsman, it is becoming more and more difficult for the old person to find a place in industry. In consequence over 5,000,000 of them today are dependent upon others for their support.

A very small proportion of these unfortunates find their way into private homes for the aged. But such institutions are very scarce and are open only to those who are not dependent in the ordinary sense. Then there is the public poorhouse, which certainly cannot be considered a rainbow at the end of the trail of the worn-out worker. The vast majority of the aged, however, are supported by younger members of their own families.

It is this latter type of support which has constituted the chief argument against old-age pensions. The cry of preserving family solidarity has been prolonged and widespread, but its effectiveness is diminishing day by day. The young family living upon a modest income is not benefited by supporting old dependents. The strain destroys morale and breeds subtle animosities. It is equally certain that the person who has become too old to work does not live happily when he is a burden upon his loved ones, while the last 10 or 15 years of active working life are often blighted with the fear of coming dependency.

Next is heard the argument that old-age dependency results from lack of thrift. But no one who has made a study of the average family income in the United States would claim that it is sufficient to afford protection against old age. The young and eager individuals cannot be asked to deny themselves the necessities and small pleasures of life in order to provide for long years of old age which they may never face. If 85 percent of our old people have been guilty of lack of thrift, then this is the common human failing which should be recognized and guarded against; and social insurance in truth is not a substitute of thrift but the application of thrift principles on a Nation-wide scale and on a sound scientific basis.

Finally, one must meet the argument that public relief for the aged would cost too much. This neglects the very obvious truth that the aged represent a burden upon society, no matter in what manner it is paid. They are not taken out and slaughtered, along with underdeveloped children, as was done in some earlier and more ruthless civilizations. At present this cost is a double burden because of the uncertain, haphazard, and slipshod manner in which it is handled. It is a drain upon the economic, physical, and nervous resources of the young who happen to be burdened excessively. It is a strain upon industry which is forced to carry along people who are too old to do first-class work and too worthy and loyal to discharge.

In this connection there is a direct relationship between the problem of old-age pensions and the relief of unemployment. Quite aside from the present depression, we face a technological situation in the foreseeable future when from four to six million people of youth and able bodies will be unemployed during so-called "normal times." A large proportion of these could be drawn into industry if places could be made by the withdrawal of those who are older and less efficient and who deserve and want a few years of rest.

I believe that a Nation-wide and general system of oldage protection should be devised speedily. Under the leadership of our socially minded President, such will undoubtedly be the case. But, in the meantime, nothing could be more helpful than the establishment of a system in a single compact industry which will serve as a laboratory for experiment. The railroads are peculiarly adaptable to this initial undertaking. They have, on the whole, a relatively high-paid class of workmen who can afford without self-denial to undergo the charges of compulsory savings. They are by custom and function well suited to Federal supervision and guidance. Finally, they afford to the public one of the most dramatic examples of the public dangers involved in having older and less alert people in charge of operations.

This bill, S. 3231, provides for an adequate system of retirement pensions for all employees on all transportation facilities subject to the Railway Labor Act.

It provides that any employee may retire upon reaching the age of 65 and having served for 5 years, or after 30 years of service. While retirement is compulsory at 65, it may be extended for yearly periods up to 70 years by mutual consent of employer and employee.

Upon retirement an employee shall receive a monthly annuity payment equivalent to 2 percent of his monthly compensation multiplied by the number of years that he has served. Monthly compensation is defined as the average monthly compensation during the entire period of service, whether regular or intermittent, and whether served in whole or only in part after the passage of this act. In no event, however, is any part of an employee's wage over $400 per month to be considered in calculating either his contributions or his annuity, and in no event shall the annuity exceed 75 percent of his monthly compensation.

The bill, therefore, as it properly should, gives promise of relief to men who are now old and near the end of their service, as well as to those who are just beginning to work. However, to prevent an excessive windfall going to the older men, the bill provides that in their case the annuity shall not exceed 60 percent of their monthly compensation and that this percentage shall be reduced by 4 percent for each year the worker is under 65 when he retires. This reduction based upon age, of course, will not be applicable if the retirement is due to disability rather than volition.

If any employee dies before or after retirement, his estate shall be entitled to receive whatever sums he has paid in, compounded at 3 percent interest, less whatever annuity payments he may have received.

To provide funds for the pension system each employee is to make a compulsory contribution deducted from wages equal to 2 percent of his compensation. The employer will have to match this by a sum exactly twice as great. The board created by the bill is empowered to raise or lower the rate of contribution in order to provide the proper amount to pay the expenses of annuities and other disbursements on a current income and outgo basis.

All funds collected under the bill are to be earmarked in the United States Treasury under a "railroad retirement fund", and may be invested in obligations of the United States

The board is also empowered to consolidate existing private pension systems with the new system in whatever manner is acceptable to all the parties involved. But if any party is not willing to concede to this, the new system will go into full force nevertheless. At the same time, if any existing system provides greater benefits than the one set up by the bill, the greater benefits shall not be disturbed.

To administer the bill a board of 3 members is established comprising 1 representative of employers, 1 of employees, and 1 of the general public. The board is empowered to take all action, make all regulations, and institute all proceedings necessary to give effect to the law. The orders of the board shall be enforceable in the United States district courts.

Sufficient sanctions are provided. Any employer or employee who is guilty of substantial misrepresentation in connection with the administering of the act is subjected to a fine not exceeding $10,000 or to imprisonment not exceeding 1 year. In addition any employer who is willfully delinquent in his contributions may have imposed upon him an additional contribution tax of 1 percent of his required payments for each month the payment is delayed.

The purposes and promises of the bill are manifold. It will afford unemployment relief by removing the older men from service and creating opportunities for the young. It will create efficiency and thus benefit employers and the public by refreshing the service with young and active people. It will help the railroads by removing from their pay rolls and putting on a pension basis people who have outlived their usefulness and who are being carried along as an act of charity. Most important of all, it blazes the way for full treatment of the problem of old-age security, which has been met in every other great industrial country and which there is no reason or excuse for neglecting in our own.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee. The Chair understands the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Metcalf] has some amendments to offer to the amendment of the committee. Under the parliamentary rule he may now offer those amendments to the committee amendment. The Senator from Rhode Island is recognized for the purpose of offering his amendments.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island offers an amendment to the amendment of the committee, which will be stated.

The Legislative Clerk. It is proposed, on page 15, to amend section 1, paragraph (a), of the committee amendment, so as to read:

The term "carrier" means any carrier by railroad, express company, sleeping-car company, or other operator of transportation facilities or any subsidiary or auxiliary services used by or operated in connection with any such carrier.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, I am heartily in favor of legislation which will bring security in old age to the persons who devote their lives to railroad transportation. I feel that this proposed legislation is right in principle, and that we should do something to bring about a uniform system of retirement. However, I feel that this is hurried legislation, prepared without accurate knowledge of what it will cost of a thoroughly studied plan of organization.

It is significant that the Federal Coordinator of Transportation, Mr. Eastman, has expended some $300,000 for the purpose of studying a retirement system for the railroads. Preliminary studies have been made but Mr. Eastman has had no opportunity to make a summary of his findings and report to the Congress. It has not been possible for the proponents of this bill to prepare an accurate actuarial, for such an actuarial would cost not less than a half million dollars and would take many months to prepare.

Coordinator Eastman appeared before both the Senate and House committees and opposed this bill on the ground that it was premature. He agrees with me and with members of the committee that such legislation is desirable, but he feels, as I feel, that a pension system which is ill-advised and not carefully constructed will endanger the possibility of a wellrounded, permanent, and secure system. His testimony before the House committee, which covered some 28 pages of objections to a basically similar House bill, are summed up in his own language as follows:

Summing up, my conclusions are that while better provision for retirement annuities for railroad employees is very desirable from every point of view, H.R. 9596 is subject to the following criticisms:

1. The provisions of the bill in important respects are not clear, would be difficult and expensive to administer, and would breed much controversy and litigation.

2. In certain respects the provisions of the bill would discriminate unfairly between individuals and also between classes of

3. The estimates of cost to both the companies and the em-3. The estimates of cost to both the companies and the employees which are given in the report of the Senate committee are much too low. The annuities which would become payable would be considerably larger both in individual amount and in total volume than the framers of the bill have apparently anti-

4. The bill is frankly based on the principle of securing knowledge as to all that may be involved and the results after the system of retirement annuities goes into effect rather than before, and making subsequent adjustments in the light of the knowledge acquired as the result of actual experience.

No annuities will become payable under the bill prior to January 1, 1935, and they may be held up longer by litigation which the bill will invite. Before that date I shall be able to present the bill will invite. Before that date I shall be able to present to the Congress the results of the survey which has been made, including actuarial analyses of the data, and to present a plan definitely adjusted to the facts so ascertained. I hope and expect that it will be possible to include in this plan, also, provision for unemployment benefits, placement service, and dismissal wages under certain conditions. In the circumstances I am of the opinion that it is desirable to suffer this comparatively short delay rather than to adopt a measure having the imperfections of the one before you. In the meantime, the present railroad pensions will continue in operation and will protect the situation to

I understand that some 90 percent of the railroads already have a pension system.

Coordinator Eastman has completed a survey of approximately 400,000 railroad employees. Over half of these had left the service prior to the date on which the survey was made: and from this great mass of information, for which the United States Government has paid $300,000, it should be relatively easy to construct a plan for a retirement system that would be both sound and desirable.

In the first place, Mr. Eastman declares after a thorough study of preliminary figures drawn from his survey that the estimates of the cost of this bill are much too low. There is no way under the sun to tell accurately what assessment will be necessary to carry the load during the next 4 years. This is an experimental period. These 4 years will be used for the purpose of rounding out a pension system, and in a large degree for duplicating the work already done by Coordinator Eastman with money contributed by the Govern-

This pension system is built on an estimate of an average of $1,600 income for retirement purposes for each railroad employee. From the studies already made by Coordinator Eastman he estimates that $2,000 is a much more accurate average. As a consequence of this, it would appear that the 2 percent per year annuity which would be paid to retired workers is too high to yield the fair amount which the proponents of this bill desire. On a basis of 11/2 percent, the either the railroad or the employee, and without the benefit | average pension would be $75 per month. On the basis of 2 percent, as in the bill, and under the estimates of the proponents of the bill, this pension would be $83.33 per month.

I feel that a pension system for the railroads is just and that it should be permanently installed. However, we should not risk a system which might fail from its own topheaviness, but we should start conservatively by allowing the board to make its studies, install a wide-spread and conservative system, and report to the Congress as soon as possible, in order that we might redraft legislation for a permanent, satisfactory system. We should start out with a pension system which would pay retired employees 11/2 percent per year of their average pay instead of 2 percent, and then increase this, should it become necessary, in the next Congress. This would assure the railroads and the employees that the assessments which will be necessary to cover the cost of this bill will not be greatly increased during this experimental period and will lessen the danger of our building up a topheavy system. I feel that 2 years should be sufficient for this experimental period.

I also feel that this system should be extended beyond the railroads, to include all common carriers. It would seem inconsistent for the Congress to authorize a retirement system for the railroads and ignore the employees of their competitors. The persons who engage in bus and water transportation are engaged in equally hazardous occupations, and in occupations which are in the interest of the general welfare.

While I feel, as Coordinator Eastman feels, that we should wait another 6 months until we have complete actuarials, so that the matter of cost to both employees and railroads might be accurately determined, I am so heartily in sympathy with the principle of pensions that I am going to content myself by offering what I believe to be perfecting amendments to the bill. These amendments are drawn in the light of more recent information, taken from the preliminary surveys made by the Government.

I have had no opportunity to give a thorough study to this material, as it did not become available until about 2 days ago. However, I have the 28-page statement of Coordinator Eastman, which came into my hands this morning, and which would appear to boost the probable cost of this pension system by a great amount. Consequently we should move with caution in order not to jeopardize a fair and permanent retirement system which would be desirable for the railroads and employees alike.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, what is the purpose of the amendment which the Senator has offered?

Mr. METCALF. The bill covers only the organizations subject to the Railway Labor Act, together with their subsidiaries. If we are to inaugurate a pension system, why not extend its benefits to the employees of other common carriers who are engaged in equally hazardous occupations, and whose retirement likewise would make jobs for other people? It is unfair to enforce a retirement system on railroads and exempt their competitors from such a system.

Mr. President, I thought I would telegraph to the presidents of four or five of the railroads in the North, South, East, and West, asking their views on this subject. Here is a reply I received from the president of the Union Pacific, at Chicago. I did this only a day or two ago.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 12, 1934.

Hon. JESSE H. METCALF.

United States Senate. Your wire date our objection to the pending railroad pension bill is that it immediately forces upon the railroads a very heavy expense without reliable actuarial information as to extent of liability. Such a study is now in progress under direction Federal Coordinator of Transportation with funds appropriated by C.W.A.; Mr. Eastman's testimony before committee estimated that annuity payments 1935 would be $91,000,000, rising rapidly to $136,000,000 in 1938.

Upon basis provided in bill as applied to 1933 pay rolls railroads would contribute $56,000,000 and employees $28,000,000. So plan would start with a certain deficit of $7,000,000 next year, rising to $52,000,000 with 4 years. Pensioners would either be deprived of full amount of annuities of railroad and employee contribution would be practically doubled. The amounts given above are in addition to the amounts paid by the railroads now to pensioners which are not illiberal in the great majority of cases. which are not illiberal in the great majority of cases.

As we understand President has advised Congress he expects to present study and recommendation of a somewhat similar nature with respect to all industries and which will be supported by actuarial studies it would be most unfortunate to have one branch of industry now singled out and without sufficient information subjected to arbitrary treatment upon a basis which might prove exceedingly embarrassing by comparison when the whole subject of industrial annuities is considered. We earnestly urge that Congress delay any action until it can have advantage of Mr. East-

C. R. GRAY, President Union Pacific Railroad.

The figures stated in this telegram will make us all realize that it might be necessary at this time to increase passenger and freight rates.

Mr. President, I sent a telegram also to Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and his reply is as follows:

BALTIMORE, Mp., June 12, 1934.

United States Senate:

Your message this date just received. Am in favor in principle of a suitable pension plan for railway employees. Baltimore & Ohio Co. has maintained such a plan at its own expense for nearly 50 years. I am not in favor of the Wagner-Hatfield pennearly 50 years. I am not in lavor of the Wagner-Hatheit pension bill, referred to in your message, because, as I understand it, I think it places too great and unnecessary a burden on the cost of rail transportation. I venture to suggest that it might be well, before taking final action on the matter, to await results of very thorough investigation which Federal Coordinator of Transportation is making of this same subject. Am quite certain that data which he is accumulating will throw more light upon the matter than any investigation heretofore made in that connection than any investigation heretofore made in that connection.

DANIEL WILLARD,
President Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

Mr. President, I have another rather long telegram, which I read as follows:

New York, N.Y., June 12, 1934.

NEW YORK, N.Y., June 12, 1934.

Jesse H. Metcalf,

United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

Greatly appreciate your inquiry requesting my views Wagner-Hatfield pension bill. So far as I know all railroad executives are and necessarily must be opposed to it because it would involve an utterly crushing financial obligation completely beyond any visible capacity of the carriers. At present railroads are paying approximately $26,000,000 a year in pensions and pending bill would superimpose on existing burden an additional payment by them of more than $80,000,000 in the first year. A careful review of the provisions of this bill forces the conclusion that it will be devastating to the railroad industry. Federal Coordinator of devastating to the rallroad industry. Federal Coordinator of Transportation now engaged in exhaustive analysis of whole subject, and it is respectfully and earnestly urged that no pension legislation be enacted pending more deliberate consideration including Coordinator's report. Manifestly present financial condition of carriers cannot be overlooked, and it is submitted that legislation that would tax them beyond endurance is neither timely, constructive, nor in public interest.

F. E. Williamson

President New York Central Railroad.

I have another long telegram here, from W. R. Cole, president of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. When I sent out my telegrams, I tried to send them north, south, east, and west, so that I would get a general idea of what the presidents of the railroads all over the country thought of the proposed legislation. Mr. Cole's telegram is as follows:

Louisville, Ky., June 12, 1934.

Hon. J. H. METCALF.

Senate Office Building: Your wire date for your information I quote the following telegram which under date of May 29, 1934, I addressed to Senators from Kentucky, Tennessee, and Alabama: "May I not urge that you oppose the passage of the substitute for Senate urge that you oppose the passage of the substitute for Senate bill 3231 to provide a retirement and pension system for railroad employees, now pending before the Senate for the following reasons: First, this bill would add $50,000,000 per annum to the expenses of the railroads over and above the amount now being disbursed by them in connection with their individual pension system; second, the bill is a hurriedly prepared composite of other bills containing new features and the railroads have had no opportunity to be heard on the pending bill; third, the Government has placed at the disposition of the Federal Coordinator of ment has placed at the disposition of the Federal Coordinator of Transportation $300,000 to make a thorough study of the matter contemplated in this bill upon which he is now actively engaged and certainly no legislation should be enacted pending the result of his investigations and recommendations and I am authoritatively advised that he is opposed to any effort to enact pension legislation at this time?"

W. R. Cole, President, Louisville & Nashville Railroad.

Mr. President, the amendment I have sent to the desk makes compulsory retirement at the age of 70 years, but exempts for a period of 5 years after the effective date of the bill compulsory retirement for those occupying official positions. The bill now makes compulsory retirement at 70 years, but also states that compulsory retirement shall take place at 65 years without the mutual consent of employee and employer. Many valuable employees of railroads are between the ages of 65 and 70, and I can see no reason why the age of 70 should not be substituted for 65, particularly since this bill provides that a man may work between the ages of 65 and 70 by agreement between the railroad and the employee.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, as I understand it, the Senator wants to have the bill include the employees of such transportation organizations as bus companies, water-transportation companies, and so on?

Mr. METCALF. Where they compete with railroads. Mr. DILL. The bill contains no provision for payments into the fund by such organizations. It would be necessary to rewrite the bill in that connection. It should be said also that none of these organizations now have pension systems such as the railroads have.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, let me suggest a further objection. The Senator is attempting to include transportation facilities which may be engaged only in intrastate commerce, and we have no power to bring them under the system.

Mr. METCALF. They would not come in.
Mr. WAGNER. The Senator would take all limitation off and provide for every kind of transportation facility coming in.

Mr. METCALF. Those which compete with the railroads, and that, of course, can only be where they handle interstate commerce.

Mr. WAGNER. It might still be intrastate. Besides, there is no way in which the Senate could ascertain how many additional employees would be included in the system under the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island. All the actuarial calculations which have been made, which are the basis for the legislation, would be thrown out of gear altogether.

Mr. METCALF. As I understand it, Mr. Eastman claims that all the data now available are not correct. He states

Mr. WAGNER. Whether they are correct or not, the Senator is asking us now to include every kind of transportation system in the United States, and we have no knowledge as to how many employees might be represented, and what their average wages would be. This matter ought to be provided for in some independent legislation.

Mr. METCALF. If the word "interstate" were put in this amendment that would do, would it not?

Mr. WAGNER. Even then we would not have definite knowledge as to just what transportation we were bringing in.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, does the Senator want to bring in water carriers?

Mr. METCALF. Yes. I believe in treating every one alike, and treating every one fairly. The man on the horse car or the street car should be brought in. Let us be fair to them all. A great expense is being placed on the railroads, but their competitors are being left out.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. METCALF. I yield.

Mr. HATFIELD. I may say for the information of the Senator from Rhode Island that the Senate committee has given study to the subject for a period of 2 years, and the actuarial investigation has been made by men whose reputation and standing is unquestionable from the actuarial point of view. Were an amendment of this kind, which takes in another group of transportation people to be adopted, it would mean the ruination altogether of this bill.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may I also make the observation that the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island is a member of our committee, and there were ample opportunities for him to present this amendment for the consideration of the committee. I think it would have been a more appropriate time to make this request, when the matter was considered in committee, so we would have had some opportunity to make inquiry and study in relation to the subject.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, if the learned Senators who have made such a great study of this bill think this amendment would make it difficult to carry out the operations under the bill, I will withdraw my amendment. I, however, still think it is a very fair amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COPELAND in the chair). Does the Senator withdraw the pending amendment?

Mr. METCALF. I withdraw the amendment.

I send another amendment to the desk and ask to have

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island. The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 18, line 2, to strike out the word "four" and to insert the word "two."

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, this amendment would require the Retirement Board to report to the Congress within 2 years instead of within 4 years. As the studies of Coordinator Eastman will be available within the next few months. I can see no reason why a complete picture of the retirement system cannot be secured under 2 years. This will make it possible for us to complete a thorough and fair pension system in the next Congress. It is my belief that this system should be built up on a permanent and solid basis as quickly as possible, and that we should not extend our period of experiment as long as 4 years.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, I send another amendment to the desk and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed on page 15 to amend section 1, paragraph (b), so as to strike out all except the first sentence.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, this amendment would confine this retirement system to employees of the common carriers only. Under the bill the system is extended to include officers or other official representatives of labor organizations. This section of the bill is intended to take care of the walking delegates and persons who do not give their actual time to the service of the roads, but are engaged in organization work and the like.

At this time I desire to read a telegram from the president of another of the big railroads, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., June 12, 1934.

Hon. JESSE H. METCALF, United States Senate, Washington, D.C .:

Your wire date railroad pensions. Very large percent of mileage in United States is operated by companies which have established in United States is operated by companies which have established voluntarily pension systems under which they now pay about $36,000,000 annually. Senate bill $231 is on so-called "pay-asyou-go basis", which means that employee compelled now to contribute creates no fund to which he may look for his own protection, but in exchange for his money receives only promise that others years hence will furnish money for his pension when he reaches pension age. Payments made by railroads and employees will be mingled with purely voluntary payments of labor representatives to pay immediate or early pensions to such representatives, but possibility of future contributions by such representatives. sentatives, but possibility of future contributions by such representatives, but possibility of luture contributions by such representatives to assist in paying pensions of genuine railway employees depends wholly on willingness of labor representatives to continue their payments. Section 9 undertakes to make railroad employees of Government, officers and employees who may have employees of Government, officers and employees who may have never had a day of railroad service, and apparently section 3 promises them pensions without cost to them at joint expense of railroads and genuine employees. Bill provides immediate compulsory retirement of large numbers who will contribute nothing or very small amounts, but who will receive pensions for remainder of their lives on same basis as men who continue contributions over long periods of years.

Young men are treated with inequality since they must contribute over long period of years while contribution of older men will continue for shorter periods though they will receive same pensions as younger men. One reaching 65 becomes entitled to pension if at any time he has had as much as 5 years' railroad pension if at any time he has had as much as 5 years' railroad service, provided he has any railroad service at all after passage of act, so that a man who entered service at 21 after serving 5 years may quit railroad service for other employment which he prefers or finds more lucrative and may spend practically his entire active life in other work yet on reaching 65 he can require railroads and genuine employees of railroads to pay him pension toward which he need have made only 1 month's contribution if his service precedes passage of bill. Bill undertakes accumulate all years spent in service of all railroads treating them as a single employer. Thus it not only deprives them of benefits of incentive to employees to continue in service but requires solvent railroads to pay for account Insolvent railroads and requires existing railroads to pay for account railroads no longer in existence. In addition this pay for account railroads no longer in existence. In addition this feature of bill opens up large possibilities of fraud on account of difficulty of getting records covering service alleged to have been rendered 25 to 50 years in the past. Bill makes no exception in case of employee whose misconduct or even criminal act has recase of employee whose misconduct or even criminal act has required his dismissal from service. Provision for optional retirement at end 30 years' service regardless of age will make it possible in many cases for man to retire in prime of life with pension possibly competing unfairly with others seeking employment by being in position to accept smaller compensation which, combined with his pension, may still pay him more than he received in railroad employment. Computation average wage under section 3 unfair because 12-month period in which employee draws largest wages during his whole service is taken as basis for his average wage instead of taking average of what he actually earned.

This unfairness is increased by treating as 1 month in de-

This unfairness is increased by treating as 1 month in determining years of service every month in which he performed at least 1 day's service. Bill will not relieve railroads of their present outstanding pensions but in addition thereto will cost them at the outside about $55,000,000, which cost will increase very fast. Known financial condition of railroads is such that they are not in position to hear this increased burden. Asserts very last. Known mancial condition of railroads is such that they are not in position to bear this increased burden. Assessments proposed by bill will be insufficient to cover pensions proposed so that immediate deficit will arise which will so increase that assessments on both railroads and employees will double within few years. By its own terms bill is 4-year experiment, but it makes definite promises of pensions to be paid at expiration of many years so that it will be impossible abandon experiment or make substantial change in it after compalling railroads. ment or make substantial change in it after compelling railroads and employees contribute to it for 4 years, or if it be found possible abandon or change experiment disappointment and injustice resulting to employees would cause disturbance of relationships which would be injurious not only to railroads and employees ships which would be injurious not only to railroads and employees but to public as well. Federal coordinator has conducted exhaustive studies and understand is preparing definite proposals for plan designed to eliminate many objectionable features of present bill and especially designed to eliminate speculative and experimental feature. Passage of experimental bill without awaiting result of study conducted by public officer at public expense, in my opinion, is unseemly, especially in view of opinion in recent Presidential message that social project for old-age and unemployment protection should not be handled piecemeal. Constitutionality believed doubtful because measure in effect dictates terms of employment and wages; also measure does not relate to interstate commerce since it makes no distinction between employees engaged in interstate commerce and those solely in intraployees engaged in interstate commerce and those solely in intra-state commerce, or between those engaged in carrier service and those in noncarrier service, such as railroad, mines, and hotels. Bill has no real relation to safety since it makes no distinction between those engaged in hazardous and nonhazardous employment. Hope you will find it consistent to oppose passage of this

President Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I want to suggest, looking at the situation realistically, that most of the representatives of employees' organizations are former employees of the railroads. They are elected to an official capacity in some labor organization. There follows a period of time, some 3 or 4 years, that they remain as officials of the organization. Some of them perhaps stay longer. If they lose out in an election they return to the railroads to their former jobs. In the meantime under the terms of the bill they are required to make contributions like the other employees. They get no other benefits than the employee who retains his job and makes regular contributions.

I think, under the circumstances, it would interfere with those organizations securing the best men, because the men would refuse to serve the organizations if by leaving the service of the railroad for a period of time they should lose their right to a pension. They pay for their pension just as all other employees do, and, in addition, are required to make the contribution otherwise required to be made by the carriers.

Mr. METCALF. What percentage would they pay? If they are not then on the railroad pay roll, where would the percentage be based?

Mr. WAGNER. They would pay the same percentage they paid when they were in the direct employ of the company.

Mr. METCALF. Is there any chance that there would be a large number of them who claim the privilege of having a pension?

Mr. WAGNER. As a matter of fact, they represent a very small percentage.

Mr. METCALF. There are so many in each State, are

Mr. WAGNER. A very insignificant number compared to the total number of employees. It is not a significant thing at all.

Mr. METCALF. All these men would be former railroad employees.

Mr. WAGNER. I know of no case where there is a representative of the railroad employees who has not been a direct employee of a railroad company. May I ask the Senator from West Virginia if I am correct?

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, that is true. I think it is one of the requirements under the rules and regulations of the railroad brotherhoods.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, in the committee amendment, on page 19, to amend section 4 so as to read:

Retirement shall be compulsory upon employees who on the effective date have attained or thereafter shall attain the age of 70 years. Until 5 years from the effective date, compulsory retirement shall not apply to an employee who from and after the effective date occupies an official position in the service of the carrier.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, this would simply increase the age limit, and it seems to me it is fair.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, the fact of the matter is that a great many men who have been employed in the railroad service for many years are not able to continue, particularly in the train service, up to the age of 70 years. I think it would be a serious mistake to raise the limit to 70 years,

Mr. METCALF. Oh, Mr. President, there are a number of Senators who are 70 years of age.

Mr. DILL. Yes; but most of them are not fit to run a railroad train.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, there is a provision in the bill that by agreement made from year to year between employee and employer, a 5-year extension of service may he had. This ends in all cases at the age of 70, except that for the first 5 years after enactment officials are excepted from the compulsory retirement provision.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may I also say that the calculations under the bill have been based on the age of 65; and, secondly, statistics show that 85 percent of the workers are dependent at the age of 65 years. The Senator's amendment, by extending the age limit to 70, would to a very large extent nullify the bill. One of the important questions involved is the matter of relieving unemployment.

Mr. METCALF. A great many men would prefer to work until they are 70 years of age.

Mr. WAGNER. If the individual is physically able to continue, he can have an agreement with his employer by which he may continue to that age.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, I send to the desk another amendment which I offer to the committee amendment, and ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 20, it is proposed to amend section 5, so as to provide:

page 20, it is proposed to amend section 5, so as to provide:

Each employee shall pay an employee contribution in a percentage upon his compensation. Each carrier shall pay a carrier contribution equal to twice the contributions of each employee of such carrier. The employee compensation shall be the compensation for service paid to such employee by the carrier, excluding compensation in excess of $400 per month. The contribution percentage shall be determined by the board from time to time, and shall be such as to produce from the combined employee and carrier contributions, with a reasonable margin for contingencies, the amount necessary to pay the annuities, other disbursements, and the expenses becoming payable from time to time. Until the board shall determine on a definite percentage, the employee percentage shall be 1½ percent. Employee contributions shall be deducted by the carrier from the compensation of its employees and shall be paid by the carrier, together with the carrier contributions, into the Treasury of the United States quarterly or at such other times as ordered by the board.

Mr. METCALE. Mr. President, this amendment reduces

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, this amendment reduces the contribution of the employee from 2 percent of his salary to  $1\frac{1}{2}$  percent of his salary. I am proposing it on the ground that a 2 percent contribution by the employees and 4 percent by the railroads is unnecessary for the beginning of the experimental period, and that we should place no heavier burden than necessary on the employee and the carrier. Of course, the Board is empowered to increase this at any time it may become necessary.

Under this amendment the roads would be immediately forced to pay 3 percent of their total pay rolls instead of 4 percent. However, if after a few months the Board finds that more funds are necessary, it can easily increase this amount.

I hope this amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, this is a proposal of a different percentage.

Mr. METCALF. Yes. I am taking Mr. Eastman's figures for it.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Eastman has given two or three sets of figures. I do not know what the effect of this amendment will be, but it seems to me an unwise procedure to adopt it.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, this amendment would absolutely destroy the bill. Mr. Eastman appeared before our committee, and we conceded to him practically everything he asked for. This whole set-up is made upon the recommendation of the actuary. Even the carriers' representative was not far off from the final conclusion that was arrived at by those who were friendly to the bill—only one-half of 1 percent.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, part of the figures that Mr. Eastman gives are the difference between what he says is the average pay and the figures that the other actuary gave. One was about $1,600 a year, and the other was something like $2,000 a year, so there would not be very much difference in the actual pension received; and then at any time the Board can increase this amount. The amendment would not injure the bill at all. The Board could change the amount at any time within 6 months if it should not be coming out right.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I think I state the facts when I say that all the actuaries who were consulted and participated in the preparation of this legislation, and appeared before us, agreed that the contribution provided for in the measure is absolutely essential if we are to retain an actuarially sound system.

Mr. HATFIELD. To assure a solvent fund.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. METCALF. I thank the Senate for listening to me. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the committee amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 15, line 17, before the period, it is proposed to insert a semicolon and the words—but does not include any attorney, physician, or surgeon employed by any carrier.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have shown this amendment to the authors of the bill, and I trust they will accept it.
Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I think there is no objection to this amendment.

Mr. HATFIELD. I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, systems of retirement pay have been thoroughly tried and their success established in many different places. I believe that there is a strong trend in this direction in our country today, and that it is especially applicable to railroad employees. Doubtless the time will come when provision of this kind will be made for all types of industry. I think it is reasonable to pioneer in this field in connection with the railroad industry because so many excellent improvements in our social and industrial life have been made possible through it.

Of course, there are always some few people who object to every forward-looking improvement. These people objected to the installation of airbrakes, the electrification of suburban railroads, the abolition of the dangerous openroad crossing, and the development of collective bargaining. Strangely enough, however, after these improvements had been achieved, the same people expressed great pride in what had been accomplished.

Mr. President, I believe this will apply to retirement pay for railway employees. There is but little economy in retaining aged men in the railroad service, and a sense of humanity should protect them from the hardships incident to travel on swiftly moving trains. A railroad man who has devoted his life faithfully to the service of the traveling public deserves retirement pay when he has attained the age of 65. Then the poorhouse will hold no terror for him, for he will be able to retire to a well-deserved contentment with his family and friends.

Mr. President, a pension for the aged will mean a new job for a younger man and industry will find that there is economy in substituting the young for the old. The law of obsolescence applies to the workman just as truly as to buildings and machines. A carefully planned system of retirement pay will net a saving to the railroads, for it will stimulate better service and greater efficiency among workers who hope to retain their jobs in order to secure the advantages of the retirement system. Money laid aside for the care of the aged will be more than repaid by savings secured through increased efficiency and the employment of youthful labor.

The pending legislation presents a reasonable and gradual approach to this problem, and I earnestly favor it in the interest of both management and labor.

I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Hatfield] and the Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner] in order to say that I have received some inquiries indicating some fear on the part of those from various States whose acquaintance I enjoy. They have been advised that there is a possibility that this measure will supersede the pension systems prevailing in the respective States under the laws of the States. Will the honorable Senators give me their views as to that matter?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I think I can say that the bill will in no way affect any State statute in relation to any form of pension.

Mr. LEWIS. Is there any provision in the bill which safeguards that matter, so that the provisions of State laws shall not be lost?

Mr. WAGNER. The bill deals only with a subject with which the States cannot deal; to-wit, interstate commerce.

Mr. HATFIELD. There is no conflict.

Mr. LEWIS. Then I shall not detain the Senate. Suffice it to say that those who have been advocating the bill assure me that it will not interfere with the laws of the various States.

Mr. HATFIELD. I may say to the distinguished Senator from Illinois that Hon. Herman L. Ekern, a very distinguished attorney who is also an actuary, passed upon this bill, gave great consideration to it, and helped to prepare it. He at one time was attorney general and was earlier commissioner of insurance of the great State of Wisconsin, and I have every confidence that this gentleman, who is connected with the insurance business today, would not sponsor any legislation which would have the effect mentioned by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. I am pleased to have the declaration of both Senators.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois, who made the inquiry, is himself a very distinguished lawyer. He knows that no State is in a position to impose a tax upon an industry that is engaged purely in interstate commerce.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will yield further in that connection, most of the pension laws of the States refer to other matters than railway employees engaged on systems of transportation; so there is no conflict whatever.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, permit me to say, in respect to the question raised by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis] and the statement by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Hatfield], that the statement having been made to me that sufficient study had not been given to the actuarial basis of the bill, I made an investigation to determine what studies had been made. I am satisfied that every care was exercised in this respect.

Even if there were defects, however, I believe that a serious mistake would be made if favorable action were now withheld. The certainty and security that come from pension systems must be afforded to those who are engaged in industry. This is a step toward the ultimate goal.

Several months will necessarily be required to set up the system herein provided. If there are defects, they can be corrected. The bill should pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read three times, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. NORRIS, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, and other Senators called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass], who is detained from the Senate. I do not know how he would vote were he present. Were I permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher]. I understand that he would vote as I intend to vote, and therefore I am free to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FESS (when Mr. McNary's name was called). The senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] is detained from the Senate, and I am requested to announce that if present he would vote "yea."

. Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed], but being informed that he would vote as I intend to vote, I am free to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WAGNER (when his name was called). May I inquire whether the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. Patterson] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. WAGNER. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Thomas] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. Dieterich], called away on official business. He would, if present, vote "yea."

I am also authorized to state that the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] and the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Coolings] have been called away, attending a convention in the State of Massachusetts; and the Senator from California [Mr. McApoo] is necessarily absent. They authorized me to state that they would vote 'yea", if

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin], the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Carey], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Keyes], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Townsend], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Patterson] are necessarily absent. I am advised that all of those Senators, if present, would vote "yea" on this question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Cut-TING]. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Bulow], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd], the Senator from Montana [Mr. Erickson], the Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Mc-CARRAN], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Thomas], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuys] are unavoidably detained from the Senate. I am informed that, if present, all of these Senators would vote "yea."

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I desire to state that the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. Caraway] is unavoidably absent. If present, she would have voted "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 66, nays 0, as follows:

PARTICIPATION OF THE UNITED STATES IN THE PAN AMERICAN INSTITUTE

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I report favorably from the Committee on Foreign Relations the bill (S. 3761) to authorize an annual appropriation of $10,000 to pay the pro rata share of the United States of the expenses of the Pan American Institute of Geography and History at Mexico City, and I submit a report thereon (No. 1436). I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an annual sum of $10,000 to pay the pro rata share of the United States of the expenses of the Pan American Institute of Geography and History at Mexico City, created pursuant to a resolution of the Sixth International Conference of American States.

CLAIMS OF THE UNITED STATES AND TURKEY

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I report favorably from the Committee on Foreign Relations the joint resolution (H.J.Res. 295) authorizing appropriation for expenses of representatives of United States to meet at Istanbul, Turkey, with representatives of Turkish Republic for purpose of examining claims of either Government against the other and for expense of proceedings before an umpire, if necessary, and I submit a report thereon (No. 1438). I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DECORATIONS TO RETIRED OFFICERS

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I report favorably from the Committee on Foreign Relations the joint resolution (H.J.Res. 330) authorizing certain retired officers or employees of the United States to accept such decorations, orders, medals, or presents as have been tendered them by foreign governments, and submit a report thereon (No. 1437). I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment, on page 2, after line 12, to insert "Sol Bloom, M.C., Director of United States George Washington Bicentennial Celebration", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the following-named retired officers or employees of the United States are hereby authorized to accept such decorations, orders, medals, or presents as have been tendered

AUTOMATIC RETIREMENT OF PUBLIC DEBT

Mr. SCHALL. By request, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a letter with an

There being no objection, the letter, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., June 2, 1934.

Hon. Thomas D. Schall,

United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am enclosing herewith a copy of a plan for automatic retirement of the public debt which, to my mind, is not only unique but has real merit and is in substance sound from an economic standpoint. If properly administered, I believe that an economic standpoint. If properly administered, I believe that some such plan could operate successfully to the definite benefit of the Nation. It is free from the objections which prohibit the use of flat money or other schemes for inflation of the currency. In brief, it is really not much more than the transfer of rights now held by private banking institutions to the Government itself. The plan does not originate with me but was evolved by Mr. E. L. Powell, of New Orleans, La., who recently visited me on a business trip and explained it to me in the course of our conversation.

I feel that the plan is worthy of serious consideration and I am, therefore, calling it to your attention.

Cordially yours,

HOWARD O. WILLIAMS.

This plan does not involve the printing of fiat money; on the contrary, the currency proposed to be issued will have back of it the security of issued Government bonds and in addition will have the full taxing power of the Government on the value of all income and property now taxable or to be made taxable through future proper legislation.

The proposed plan offers complete control of the currency.

It provides for the orderly payment of the bonds, and redemption and cancelation of the currency proposed to be issued. Therefore, said currency is certain of orderly retirement in reasonably fixed yearly amounts.

The operation of this plan and the certainty of redemption will prevent any unusual fluctuation in the price of United States Government bonds, for such fluctuation will be of no public interest. The Government would be the only party interested in the price of the bonds and there would be no trading in same; therefore, no reason for fluctuation.

Under the proposed plan, bonds bearing 4-percent interest with 2-percent sinking fund, the debt would be paid off in about 27 years. Interest would be reduced rapidly as bonds were paid.

SUGGESTED PLAN FOR PAYING THE UNITED STATES DEBT

Congress to authorize calling all United States bonds for refunding or paying, and for this purpose to authorize new bond issues, in such amount as would be needed. Interest on called bonds to cease at first interest date after date of call.

Do not exchange bonds. Pay them, obtaining the money as follows: Use new bonds as collateral for 6-month loans; borrow from Federal Reserve, that bank to issue currency to the United States for all such loans—all loans to be renewable—in such form as may be most desirable and the renewal privilege to be stated in the notes and for a period of not less than 25 years, but payable—at the option of the United States—at any time.

Bonds and loan notes to carry same rate of interest.

The United States would provide in the annual Budget for payment of interest on bonds, and sinking fund as is now provided.

The coupons, when paid by the United States to itself as owner of the bonds, would provide the money to pay the interest on

The entire profit to the Federal Reserve would find its way back into the United States Treasury (as surplus over the 6 percent dividend)—and to be dedicated to paying off the loan, and, as loan is paid, an equal sum in bonds to be canceled.

As the loan notes are paid, the currency issued by the Federal Reserve to be retired by the bank same as is done in their dealings with member banks.

As the 6-percent dividend, payable to members of the Federal Reserve Bank System (see par. 3, p. 2), is much more than earned every year, this increases the rate of payment by the exact amount now being paid for bond interest, as under this plan, the entire interest plus the present sinking fund would be available for and dedicated to the retirement of the bonds.

This does not increase taxes, but, as bonds are retired, results in steady decrease. This would result in—

First Providing all pew currency needed without inflation.

First. Providing all new currency needed without inflation.
Second. The supply of new money and the withdrawal from the public of Government bonds as investment would result in present bondowners seriously hunting for new investments and thereby tend to revive all business.

Third. The Federal Reserve earnings in excess of 6 percent paid to member banks on capital furnished by them is the property of the United States Government and would retire the bonded debt entirely in a few years, depending on interest rate and sinking-

Fourth. Government bonds would be entirely removed from the public market, the Federal Reserve bank to be the only holders (as collateral only) and the United States Government to be the only owner. The whole matter is thus reduced to an ordinary business banking transaction, with the Federal Reserve bank as lender and the United States Government as borrower.

REMARKS

It is important in considering this plan to always bear in mind that a member bank can now borrow from the Federal Reserve bank, using United States bonds as collateral, and this plan merely gives the United States the same right and privilege.

Any of the called bonds that may be held in foreign countries can be readily handled by allowing sellers of goods to United States buyers to pay for same in United States bonds at par, the United States to pay for said bonds at par when presented for collection in the United States.

To facilitate the handling of coupons and notes between the Federal Reserve bank and the United States Treasury, the bonds should be issued in large units, say, 50, 100, or 500 million dollars.

When payment or partial payment of note is made any difference between face value of note plus interest and the amount of cash available would be cared for in the same manner as any similar ordinary transaction.

The operation of this plan would reduce the need to provide work at public expense for the purpose of reducing unemployment and to relieve distress.

The need for employing the new money would accomplish this

DEPORTATION OF ALIEN SEAMEN

Mr. KING. Mr. President, inadvertently yesterday the chairman of the Committee on Immigration reported the bill (S. 868) to provide for the deportation of certain alien seamen, and for other purposes. The bill as reported did not contain an amendment which had been suggested, and I ask that the bill be recommitted to the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, from the Committee on Immigration I now report favorably the bill (S. 868) to provide for the deportation of certain alien seamen, and for other purposes, with an amendment, and I submit a report (No. 1439) thereon.

COMMITTEE SERVICE

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] be assigned to the vacancy, on behalf of the majority, on the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ECONOMIC LEGISLATION-RADIO ADDRESS BY TOM DAVIS

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a radio speech by Hon. Tom Davis, of Minnesota, on the subject of Economic Legislation.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Men and women of Minnesota, we are fighting in this campaign for the soul of America.

We are fighting to see that this Nation of ours shall not perish. The Farmer-Labor Party of Minnesota was not founded by Socialists or by Communists.

The men and women who sacrificed in order to build up the progressive cause in this State have been betrayed in their own house. The platform adopted by the recent Farmer-Labor convention cannot and does not represent the sentiments or the hopes of those who believe in this democracy and who sincerely hope for its preservation and success.

No one has the right to ask or demand that the people of this State surrender their liberties or their freedom to any political machine or any political party.

Minnesota is my birthplace and since I arrived at manhood I have taken an intense interest in political affairs.

I have filed for the Republican nomination for the office of

I have filed for the Republican homination for the office of United States Senator at the coming primary.

I have always believed and still believe in the progressive cause. The issues raised in the present election in Minnesota rise above party lines and transcend all personal consideration and go directly to the question of whether or not we shall maintain a republican form of government in Minnesota as guaranteed by the Federal Constitution. Constitution.

My life has been devoted to fighting for progressive men and progressive principles without much regard to party affiliations, but I have never been a Socialist, nor a Communist, and I am not one now.

I have by no means been a worshipper of party above principle. One of the greatest dangers in this country is a tendency to create or erect political machines, and to mislead the voters by appealing to their support of party loyalty rather than their support of civic loyalty.

support of civic loyalty.

The issues before the people of this State are far more important than personal friendship or personal success. I am going down the same road I have traveled for 30 years, and, when the Farmer-Labor Party adopted its recent platform it went to the left and accepted a philosophy of government, and a theory of politics, that I have never believed in and never will believe in.

This country was founded by God-fearing men and women as a protest against arbitrary power.

These men and women knew that personal liberty, the right of free speech, and of peaceable assemblage were the inalienable rights of free men.

rights of free men.

rights of free men.

They believed in the right of individual freedom and individual progress, and people of Nordic blood, of Teutonic strain, and of Celtic ancestry came to this country because they knew it offered the greatest opportunity for individual initiative and personal progress of any country in the world.

When our Government was founded nearly every land was ruled by an autocrat. There were few people whose lives did not depend upon the caprice of an autocrat.

Emperors, kings, and potentates ruled and decided the destiny of untold millions under the ridiculous doctrine of the divine right of kings. Men and women were mere cogs in a machine. They existed for the benefit of their rulers who were their government; they were subject to the whim and fancy, the selfishness, and the intrigue of an autocrat, who exercised arbitrary power over their lives and their destinies.

That, my friends, is the reason why men came from every land and from every clime, of every race and every creed, and on this uncharted continent founded a nation dedicated to liberty and consecrated to the cause of human freedom. They declared that arbitrary power, under whatever guise, should not obtain in a free country.

Thus was founded the American Republic and it has grown with the passing of the years until today, regardless of all our difficul-ties, there is in our country more prosperity, more opportunity, more freedom, and more liberty than in any land under God's shining sun.

It is proposed to change that form of government in Minnesota, and the hope of those who seek this change is to also change the form of government of our Nation. They want to substitute an autocracy for democracy. They want to substitute for individual freedom and individual initiative the arbitrary and ruthless power of an autocrat.

It is now proposed that we should abolish our form of government and create in its place a so-called "cooperative commonwealth", or a Communistic breeding place.

wealth", or a Communistic breeding place.

The Farmer-Labor platform demands that the State shall own all mines, factories, packing plants, rallroads, and utilities; it demands that all insurance business be taken over by the State. If the proposed program of the Farmer-Labor Party should prevail in Minnesota, it would put into the hands of a political machine the most far-reaching and arbitrary power ever known in the history of this country. It would inevitably lead to a dictatorship which would govern practically every activity of our lives.

Our country today is confronted with a crisis which challenges the judgment, the conscience, and the sincerity of all mankind.

In these trying times, when the very destiny of our representative form of government is at stake, there has arisen in the minds of some men the thought that our Government is a fallminds of some men the thought that our Government is a fallure, that democracy is a sham, and that we should turn for help and assistance either to a dictatorship of privileged wealth or to a dictatorship of the so-called "proletariat." I am utterly opposed to a dictatorship in any form in America. The time must never come when the liberties and rights of the people of this country shall be subject to the whim or the fancy of any autocrat.

There is no more room for the divine right of special privilege or the divine right of entrenched wealth to control this democ-racy than there was for the divine right of kings to control the destiny of human beings

A dictatorship of special privilege is a dictatorship of centralized wealth. A fascist form of government is a dictatorship of industry; a dictatorship of the so-called "proletariat" will destroy our democracy.

No autocracy, under whatever name, or whatever guise, has any place in Minnesota.

That platform is a betrayal of the farmers and laboring men That platform is a betrayal of the farmers and laboring men of Minnesota and is basically a communistic platform and nothing else. It ceases to be a progressive document. It is a reactionary and subversive document. If we give them the power to carry out this program, it would sovietize this State; it would wipe away opportunity from rich and poor alike. It would destroy and take away from us every vestige of liberty. It would abolish personal rights. It would destroy personal initiative, crush ambition, and leave this State the laughing stock of the Nation.

In the campaign of 1924, as a candidate for the nomination for Governor I made my opening speech in my old home town of

In the campaign of 1924, as a candidate for the nomination for Governor I made my opening speech in my old home town of Marshall, Minn., and I want to read to you from the News-Messenger of Marshall, under date of April 25, 1924, a report of my speech on that occasion. I quote:

"Opening the plea for good government, Mr. Davis stated that he was a believer in our present republican form of government and opposed to any dictatorship either of the wealthy or the proletariat. The welfare of the Government, he declared, depends upon the individual, who should take an active interest in the Government and in the exercise of the franchise as a duty of citizenship, regardless of party affiliations." of citizenship, regardless of party affiliations."

Two years ago, in a speech in that political campaign, I had the following to say. I quote:

"I want to urge upon you who are listening to me the importance, the duty, and the obligation of casting a ballot in this election.

"We need to get back to the simple faith of our fathers who founded this Nation and handed it down to us in the hope that it could be a Nation that would grant to its people equal rights and equal opportunities.

"Let me urge upon everyone who is listening to me tonight to realize that we must not give way to despair or lose faith in this realize that we must not give way to despair or lose faith in this great democracy of ours.

"There is no room in this land of ours for communism; there is no room for a philosophy that would tear down our churches and wreck our schools; there is no room for a doctrine of despair; there is no room for a theory that would wipe the name of God from out the sky!"

This is where I stood 10 years ago; this is where I stood 2 years ago; and this is where I stand now.

In 1918 many of the farmers and laborers and business men of Minnesota rightly felt that we should oppose profiteering during the World War and felt it was the duty and right of the farmers to meet and discuss political issues. During that time you people well know that some men in the excess of zeal and misguided by sentiment headed mobs which denied many people the right to peaceably assemble and denied them the right of free speech.

My fight in 1918 was a fight against mob law, and I would make that fight tomorrow under similar circumstances. There never was, or should be, any room for mob law in Minnesota, and it makes no difference whether it is a mob of bankers, a mob of business men, a mob of farmers, or a mob of laborers.

No man who has the future of America at heart should support the Farmer-Labor platform.

It is destructive of American institutions and a betraval of American ideals.

We should not blazon over this Nation, to the detriment of the name of our fair State, the fact that we are ready to place our destinies into the hands of a political oligarchy, or to allow any political party to take over the business, the factories, the insurance companies, and the fortunes of the people of Minnesota for political purposes.

For these reasons I must now oppose the Farmer-Labor communistic platform.

That platform is written in a few plain, simple words that are easily understood and the attempt that is now being made to interpret it and to mislead the people as to its actual interpretation and meanings is not politically frank.

Only recently a so-called "committee of 21" assumed to interpret this platform and to fool the people of Minnesota by telling them that the platform does not mean what it says.

WHO ARE THIS "COMMITTEE OF TWENTY-ONE"?-BY WHAT AUTHORITY DO THEY ACT?

Are they the "invisible government" of the Farmer-Labor Party who now claim the right to repudiate the action taken by 1,200 delegates in convention assembled?

Is the Farmer-Labor Party controlled by these 21 men and are the wishes of 1,200 delegates from all over this State to be set aside by a supercommittee?

The attempt to avoid the plain meaning and intent of this platform should not mislead the voters.

You voters are entitled to know whether a man running for

You voters are entitled to know whether a man running for public office is for such a platform or whether he is against it.

I am against that platform because it means communism and nothing else. You should be infinitely more against it because of the attempt now being made to mislead the voters by telling them that this convention did not mean what it said. The action taken by this committee is not democracy, it is autocracy, and I am against autocracy. I am against arbitrary power and I am against any predatory political machine, no matter whether it is manned by office seekers or controlled by privileged interests.

The recent Farmer-Labor platform demands, among other things, that immediate steps must be taken by the people to abolish capitalism.

abolish capitalism.

It further demands a system whereby all natural resources, machinery of production, transportation, and communication shall be owned by the Government.

The effort is being made by the supporters of this platform to sell you on the idea that capitalism, in and of itself, must be abolished.

Capitalism means nothing more nor less than this: That a man or woman shall have the result, and shall be entitled to retain the profit earned from labor or the property which that man or woman has secured. Under this system gross injustices have occurred, and now prevail, but I tell you that we should not kill the patient in order to cure him.

the patient in order to cure him.

Capitalism, with all its faults, is infinitely better than the socalled "cooperative commonwealth", which is nothing more or less than a camouflage for the word "communism."

The attempt is being made to fool the people of this State by telling them that a cooperative organization is similar to a cooperative commonwealth.

Under the laws of this State cooperatives have a right to hold property; to buy and sell goods; to make a profit as a result of their efforts and their work, and this is right and proper. I have always fought for liberal laws in behalf of the cooperative organizations in Minnesota.

My friends, this is entirely different than a cooperative com-

A cooperative commonwealth means this, and only this, that the Government as a State shall own all the property and that individuals or organizations of individuals shall not have the right to own property.

The purpose and intent of creating a so-called "cooperative commonwealth" is to bring about the abolition of all private property.

One of the first acts of Russian communism was to abolish all cooperative organizations.

The Russian system is a cooperative commonwealth, and let me read to you from The A B C of communism what two of the prominent Russian Communists state is the basis for the "cooperative commonwealth."

And, mark you, the words "communism" and "cooperative commonwealth" are used at all times interchangeably by these disciples of a darker day.

The language used in this book is strikingly similar to the language used in the recent Farmer-Labor platform.

Listen to this language

"The basis of Communist society must be the social ownership of the means of production and exchange. Machinery, locomotives, steamships, factory buildings, warehouses, grain elevators, mines, telegraphs and telephones, the land, sheep, horses, and cattle, must all be at the disposal of society. All these means of production must be under the control of society as a whole, and not as at present under the control of individual capitalists or capitalist combines."

In a recent book analyzing and evaluation the

In a recent book analyzing and explaining the Communist con-stitution and the Russian system we find the following language,

"Private ownership of land is abolished; all land is declared "national property." * * * Forests, mines, and livestock are also proclaimed 'public property.' Factories, shops, banks, railways, and other means of production and transportation are likewise to become the property of the Soviet Republic.

"With equal definiteness the Soviet constitution proceeded to disqualify from proting and holding office amount of the soviet."

"With equal definiteness the Soviet constitution proceeded to disqualify from voting and holding office among others, (1) persons employing hired labor for the sake of profit; (2) persons living on an income not derived from their own labor; (3) private business men and trade and commercial agents; (4) monks and clergymen of all religious denominations."

No wonder they tell you that the word "communism" scares the people the people.

It has a right to scare you. It has a right to make you stop and realize where we are drifting.

In Russia, under the communistic system, the Government or the State takes over mines, factories, banks, railways, and other means of production and transportation.

means of production and transportation.

In Minnesota the Farmer-Labor platform declares for a system where all the natural resources, machinery of production, transportation, and communication shall be owned by the Government.

This same Farmer-Labor platform, under its industrial program, demands, I quote, "Ownership of all mines, water power, transportation, communication, banks, packing plants, factories, and all making attributes."

and all public utilities."

All I ask of the voters of Minnesota, of the farmers who want to own their farms, of the laboring men who want to keep their homes, is to set side by side the demands of Russian communism and the demands of the Farmer-Labor platform.

The same mind if not the same hand wrote both of these programs.

It is an utter impossibility to take over all industry and pay for it by any form of taxation. It if is to be taken over, it must be seized and confiscated without regard to the rights of the owners. It cannot be acquired otherwise, and this means just what was done in Soviet Russia.

What was done in Soviet Russia.

If this proposed program is put into effect in Minnesota, if a super-State shall take over our factories, all packing plants, all railroads, all bus lines, it means that organized labor and the railroad men of this State will lose every advantage and every right they have obtained through these long years of organization right they have obtained through these long years of organization and effort. Under such a system of government, the labor unions will cease to exist. What will become of their right to bargain for either working conditions or wages? All of this will be benignly provided for them under the dictatorship of the proletariat!

The history of autocracy in recent years in Russia and in Italy has spelled the doom of individual liberty and has taken away from organized labor the chance to obtain its rights.

Some of the proponents of this program rightly say that there are hungry people in this land and people in need, and we know it is the truth, to the shame of Minnesota and this Nation, but what you must not forget is that in Russia, the cradle of communism, there also are hungry people who are cold; in Italy, with its dictatorship, there are also unemployed; in Germany, with its dictatorship, there are also hungry men and hungry women walking the streets; and the men and women of those countries would give anything in the world if they could come to these United States; and in every one of those countries the right of assemblage, the right of a free press have been taken away from the people. This is what would happen in Minnesota and in this Nation under a political dictatorship and an industrial autocracy, and this is why free men and free women will never stand for such a program.

Bear this fact in mind—that no government and no law can Bear this fact in mind—that no government and no law can make men honest, intelligent, thrifty, or ambitious. These qualities are implanted in human hearts and breasts by an infinite God. Human nature has not changed through all the centuries. Men and women are motivated by the same influences. Self-interest and the desire to advance can never be driven from the human heart and the human heart. human heart and the human breast.

Government exists and functions for the people and for the preservation of their rights, and people do not exist merely for Government.

If nothing more were needed to rouse the Christian people this State to action, if there were no other planks in this platform which spell the doom of individual liberty, let me call your attention to the fact that the plank on education is a direct challenge to every man and woman in this State.

This plank provides, among other things, "Textbooks to be published by the State and free to all students."

If the State has the right to publish the books, it, of course, has the right to say what kind of books will be published.

It can establish a State religion, or perhaps establish a phi-

It can establish a State religion, or perhaps establish a philosophy that will laugh at all religion.

Will this political oligarchy tell you fathers and mothers that you shall not have the right to educate and instruct your children in the religious faith which is so sacred to you?

The result of every effort that has gone on through the centuries to give us a free and untrammeled system of education should not be lost.

This platform means that a Communist or a Socialist, if they have the power, can put into the hands of your children every book which tends to tear down regard for our cherished institutions. It means that on matters of religion, morals, and social welfare that a super-state shall determine what books shall be printed and given to our children.

Russia is the only country in the world which is a cooperative commonwealth.

Russia is the only country in the world which denies the right of franchise and the right to hold office to clergymen of all denominations.

It was Liebnecht, the German Socialist, who said: "It is our duty as Socialists to root out the faith in God with all our might. Nor is anyone worthy of the name who does not consecrate himself to the spread of atheism."

It was Bebel who said: "Christianity and socialism stand toward each other as fire and water. Christianity is the enemy of liberty and civilization. It has kept mankind in slavery and converselor."

oppression.

was Bakunine, the Russian Communist, who said: "We declare ourselves atheists. We seek the abolition of all religion and the abolition of marriage."

It was Yaroslavsky, the Russian Communist, in 1929 who said:
"We are against God. We are against capital. We are for socialism. We are for a world union of toilers. We are for the Communist Internationale."

Do you want atheists and men who would drive religion and churches out of Minnesota to write the school books for your children?

I deny the right of any set of men, governed by any political party, to tell your children or my children what books shall be printed and used in the schools of Minnesota.

I maintain that we have the right to raise our children in the faith of our fathers, and we should be unwilling to surrender that right to any political party.

No father or mother who has at heart the welfare and interest of his boys or his girls can or will stand for such a platform.

I appeal especially to the mothers and wives of Minnesota. In your hand is the destiny of this State and Nation; into your keeping is given the future education, both morally and mentally, of your boys and girls.

It has not been easy for me to break with political and personal friends with whom I have associated for many years. Whatever they may say of me, or about me, cannot change the issues facing you people. These issues rise higher than the hopes and ambitions of any man. These issues are more important than the political success of any individual, or any political machine

In making the campaign that I am making for the United States Senate, I have done so at the request of hundreds of Republicans who have frequently disagreed with me in years past and whom I have differed with and criticised in past campaigns. But they are opposed to a communistic philosophy, and on that issue, which is the biggest issue facing you voters, I am in accord with them. with them.

The support that has been tendered me also comes from the rank and file of the Republicans and Progressives who are willing to forget past differences and to fight shoulder to shoulder against the effort that is now being made to Russianize this State.

In the 30 years that I have campaigned in Minnesota I have spent my own money and my own time fighting for economic and political principles in which I believe. I have never been for sale, and never will be for sale.

I am not now and never will be the candidate or the representative of big business or of privileged interests.

If what I am fighting for appeals to you men and women of Minnesota, I want your help and support. If the ideals and principles which I am advocating in this campaign are the ideals, the principles, the hopes, and the aspirations of the men and women who believe in this democracy, and who will demand that it shall endure, and that communism shall not prevail, then give me your votes and your support.

I am but an incident in this contest, and whether I win or lose is not of supreme importance, but it is a matter of the highest importance to the voters of Minnesota whether this State shall become a communistic experimental station.

Shall we turn Minnesota over to a political machine dominated and controlled by Communists, and whose platform was written by Communists and by men who have no regard for our cherished

I need the help of men and women in the common walks of life; of you folks whom I have known in the 30 years I have fought political battles in Minnesota.

I want the people of this State who believe in the fight I am making to send in their names. I want you to come to head-quarters and get literature and deliver it from house to house in this campaign.

I am opposed to any philosophy which has, with ruthless power, destroyed freedom of religion, freedom of education, and deserated the most sacred ideals of Christian civilization.

I will be fighting for economic justice and economic equality after the primaries have closed whether I am nominated for United States Senator or not. You will find me going down the line fighting against this platform which is a betrayal of the laborer and the farmer; fighting against Russianizing Minnesota; fighting against a communistic philosophy which will destroy American institutions, wipe out American homes, and desecrate American ideals. American ideals American institutions, wipe out American homes, and desecrate American ideals.

My friends, three flags beckon us to follow under their banner. The first flag is the black flag of piracy and special privilege, which has helped to bring us into the condition we are now in, and that flag is controlled by selfish interests alone. That flag is carried in the hands of men who are controlled by greed, who demand special privilege, and who are willing to forget the high destiny of this Nation and the sacred obligation of citizenship.

The Republican Party of Minnesota must not march under the flag of the House of Morgan, or the flag of special privilege.

And there arises before me another flag, held in the hands of men who would forget their country. This is the red flag of Communism, a flag that is nurtured in the breast of despair; that is controlled by envy, prompted by greed, and nurtured by hatred. That flag would give us a philosophy that would tear down our churches and wreck our schools, and it would wipe the name of God from out the sky.

That flag would destroy the American home and wipe out the American fireside and take ambition and hope from out the human heart.

And there is another flag. Your flag and my flag—the Stars and human heart.

And there is another flag. Your flag and my flag—the Stars and Stripes, baptized in the blood of our patriots. A flag that followed Washington as he knelt with his frozen comrades at Valley Forge. This is the flag which waved over our boys from 1861 to 1865, when rebellion sought to destroy this country; this flag waved over the head of my old soldier father at Shiloh; this flag waved over the head of Grant at Vicksburg; this flag waved over the head of Sherman as he split the Confederacy in twain and saved this Republic. This is the flag which is waving over our heads today calling us to high endeavor and to civic duty when rebellion or greed or autocracy seeks to destroy this Republic and erect a dictatorship in our State. This is the flag which calls to us as citizens to lift our trembling hands and hold it aloft in these trying times.

From those who died at Bunker Hill and at Valley Forge; who gave their lives at Bull Run, at Shiloh, and at Vicksburg; who fell at Chateau Thierry, the Marne, and the Argonne there comes today a challenge to the patriotism and the manhood and womanhood of this Nation that we keep the faith, that we preserve this democracy, and that we hand it down to coming generations untouched by fraud, untarnished by greed.

IN FLANDERS' FIELDS By Col. John McCrae

In Flanders' fields the poppies blow
Between the crosses, row on row,
That mark our place, and in the sky
The larks, still bravely singing, fly—
Scarce heard amidst the guns below.
We are the dead! Short days ago
We lived, felt dawn, saw sunset glow,
Loved and were loved, and now we lie
In Flanders' fields.

Take up our quarrel with the foe!
To you from failing hands we throw
The torch; be yours to hold it high.
If ye break faith with us who die
We shall not sleep, though poppies grow
In Flanders' fields.

Men and women of Minnesota, in the trying hours of the World War one battle cry was raised and it was this: "They shall not pass!" And I can hear those boys who gave their lives in behalf of this democracy crying out to every man and woman in Minnesota: "Awaken to your duty as citizens, rise in defense of your institutions and your homes and send this message to those who would take away from you all liberty, all human rights, the message that was carried on the fields of France: 'You must not pass! You shall not pass for democracy and liberty must endure and You shall not pass, for democracy and liberty must endure and

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JUNE 14, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Clifford H. Jope, pastor of the Ninth Street Christian Church, Washington, D.C., offered the following prayer:

Divine Father, we thank Thee for the presence of Thy governing hand guiding the destinies and affairs of men. Thou hast blessed us along the way with free institutions, noble ideals, true patriots, pure religion, and holy purposes. Help us to trust Thy leadership when we cannot see the way.

Divine Father, we pray Thee for all who hold public office and power, in whose hands rests the life, welfare, and virtue of the people. Give our leaders the vision of the possible future of our country. Enlarge the scope of our brotherhood. Give us patience when we are misunderstood and our sincerity is doubted. Endue us with the spirit of humility and service. Hold us true to those principles which mean the largest measure of happiness and security for all people. Sweep from all human hearts the gloom of doubt, the blackness of envy, and the poison of hatred. Breathe Thy life into our people. Purge our cities, States, and Nation of the deep causes of corruption which make sin profitable and uprightness hard. Lord, touch us into life that every countenance may be like the morning and every life radiant as the sun. May Thy kingdom come and Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that in the closing days of a session there is always more or less disorder and confusion in the House. Personally, I am in favor of and want every man to get his local bills through, bills that are of a purely local character and do not specifically entail expenditures on the part of the Federal Treasury, but there has grown up of late the custom of bringing up general legislative bills under unanimous consent. I am not opposed to this in toto, but I do feel that if a Member wants to bring up a piece of legislation, for instance, amending some existing law, that the ranking minority member of the appropriate committee should be informed in advance of what he proposes to do. If we of the minority are informed in advance, we will try to cooperate in putting through everything that is necessary to go through in these closing days, but we shall have to object if general legislation is to be brought up without advising us in advance.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SNELL. I vield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Does the gentleman feel the same with regard to calling up a bill where there has been a unanimous report by the committee, where there is no objection on the part of minority members of the committee?

Mr. SNELL. I still maintain that we should be advised in advance so that a minority member of the committee may be present at the time the bill is brought up.

PROGRAM FOR THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein an address delivered by Governor Pearson, of the Virgin Islands.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include an article by Gov. Paul M. Pearson, of the Virgin Islands, which he wrote for the New York Times of Sunday, June 3, 1934.

The Virgin Islands are being translated from an abandoned hope to a land of promise through the interest and beneficent solicitude of President Roosevelt. We are all, therefore, looking to the Virgin Islands as a further illustration of what may be accomplished under his benign leadership which guides the destiny of our people.

Governor Pearson's article is timely and of far-reaching significance.

[From the New York Times, Sunday, June 3, 1934] LONG-RANGE PROGRAM FOR VIRGIN ISLANDS-THEIR GOVERNOR TELLS OF THE EFFORTS TO AID INDUSTRY AND MAKE LIFE BETTER

(The United States Government has embarked on a large-scale effort to bring prosperity to the Virgin Islands. The effort is here described by the Governor of the islands.)

By Paul M. Pearson, Governor of the Virgin Islands

When Herbert Hoover described the Virgin Islands as an "effective poorhouse", it must be admitted that from a material point of view he spoke the truth. Although the islands are wealthy beyond words in the beauty of their coral reefs, the exquisite beyond words in the beauty of their corai reels, the exquisite coloring of their tropic waters, and the charm and character of their people, their economic condition has been deplorable. But what Mr. Hoover failed to add was that this condition was due almost entirely to the neglect of the Government, which 17 years ago purchased the islands from Denmark and then promptly forgot them.

It is to give some measure of compensation for this neglect that resident Roosevelt has launched his rehabilitation program, including the revival of the rum industry which once made St. Croix famous from Bombay to Boston.

In charting this work we have been able to profit by the ex-In charting this work we have been able to profit by the experience of the Danes, who faced a somewhat similar situation at the turn of the last century. For years prior to that time the Virgin Islands had prospered. Forming one corner of a lucrative triangular trade, they bought Negroes from Africa and sent rum and sugar to New England, which in turn sent fish and manufactured goods back to Africa. But with the ending of slavery the port of St. Thomas, once the busiest entrepot in all the West Indies, sank into a coma from which the Danes attempted to revive it. revive it.

DANISH INVESTMENTS

Four leading banks in Copenhagen united in raising $1,000,000 for a new bank for the Virgin Islands. Danish capitalists were persuaded to invest another million in the Bethlehem sugar factory. The East Asiatic Co., another Danish firm, was prevalled upon to put another million in a dock company, while the Danish Government guaranteed bonds for the improvement of the harbor. A total of $4,000,000 of Danish capital was invested; all of it not only remains intact but has paid regular dividends to its investors

During this period once again the islands prospered.

Then came the war. Even before the United States entered it, the American Minister at Copenhagen, Maurice Francis Egan, made numerous overtures at the Danish Court for the purchase made numerous overtures at the Danish Court for the purchase of the Virgin Islands. This was not a new move; as far back as 1867 their purchase by the United States was discussed. Again in 1902 a treaty to this end was ratified by the United States Senate but was rejected by the Danish Parliament. Finally in 1916, with American entry into the war imminent, it was feared that Germany might seize the islands as a submarine base. And with a virtual ultimatum given to Denmark that she must sell either her Caribbean possessions or have them forcibly seized, the Virgin Islands became the property of the United States. The purchase price was $25,000,000.

TROUBLES OF LAST DECADE

After which we virtually forgot about their existence. During the next 14 years all of the carefully built-up economic system of the islands slowly disintegrated. Danish capital withdrew and no American capital came to take its place. American shipping lines were invited to call at the once thriving port of St. Thomas. The Shipping Board, although directed by Congress to provide adequate shipping service at reasonable cost, has done nothing. At present there is no American passenger service between the Virgin Islands and the continental United States.

The harbors remain as they were under Danish rule. The United States Government has spent no money on them, nor provided any way by which money could be obtained for the purpose.

onited States Government has spent no money on them, nor provided any way by which money could be obtained for the purpose. Private capital has been sought in vain for the languishing sugar industry. The once flourishing rum industry was killed by an unwelcome Prohibition Act.

Though the population (93-percent Negro) of the islands is only 22,000 and though the total area is only 132 square miles, we have in miniature most of the economic, educational, and social problems that number States in the Union.

lems that puzzle States in the Union.

INTEREST REVIVED

With the visit of President Hoover at the beginning of my administration 3 years ago, we suddenly woke up to the fact that one of the most beautiful of all American possessions had been most neglected. A long-time rehabilitation program was then formulated, and persistent efforts were made to obtain both private capital and funds from Congress, but it was not until the beginning of the new deal that this program could effectively get under wa

Since then we have been making genuine progress, owing, first, to the very real personal interest which President Roosevelt and Secretary Ickes have taken in the islands, and, second, to the fact that they have supplied the funds with which to transform our program into accomplishment.

That program is founded on the basic principle of helping the islands help themselves. Too often has Congress merely made up the deficit incurred by the colonial councils without a thought by which that annually recurring deficit might be wiped out. The Virgin Islands were merely given a dole.

In contrast, we have now worked out a partnership program, by which the Government of the United States and the people of the Virgin Islands cooperate in a long-range social and economic program, the profits of which are immediately resown in the islands. The social phase of the program calls for:

First. The homesteading of tenant and unemployed labor on small parcels of land which they are enabled to purchase from the small parcels of land which they are enabled to purchase from the Government over a period of years.

Second. The construction of two-room houses in order to relieve a tropical slum condition which parallels any existing in the most crowded cities of the United States.

Third. A system of old-age and unemployment compensation modeled somewhat along the lines of those discussed by President Processful!

Roosevelt.

Fourth. A supplementary educational system to provide both for adults and those in the pre-school age.

REVIVING INDUSTRIES

The second part of the program—the economic—envisages the manufacture of rum, the improvement of the bay-rum industry, the increase of the winter vegetable crop during the off season in the United States, the improvement of handicraft industries, and the furtherance of the tourist trade through the building of a new hotel.

It should be emphasized that all of these plans, except the one

It should be emphasized that all of these plans, except the one for reviving the rum industry, were in our program of 3 years ago; but they have been given important impetus by the termination of prohibition and the simultaneous decision of the Public Works Administration to allot funds for the construction of the hotel and the revival of the rum and other industries.

The capital allotted for the latter is $1,000,000—enough, we hope, to restore to the Pearls of the Caribbean some part of their former economic wealth. This money has been placed in the hands of the Virgin Islands Co., chartered by a special act of the Colonial Council of St. Thomas and St. John. The directors are Secretary Ickes; Oscar L. Chapman; Paul M. Pearson; Judge D. Hamilton Jackson, of St. Croix; and Lionel Roberts, of St. Thomas. To assist in carrying out the permanent rehabilitation program the President also has appointed an advisory council, which includes Miss Joanna C. Colford; Secretary Ickes; Dr. Mordecai Johnson, president of Howard University; George Foster Peabody; Alfred K. Stern; Charles W. Taussig; Henry A. Wallace; and Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

RUM AND SUGARCANE

The work of the Virgin Islands Co. will be not merely that of reviving the famous stills of St. Croix which for a dozen years have been covered with tropic vegetation but also cooperation with cane growers in the harvesting of their crops, the crushing of their cane, and the sale of the finished product. The company will attempt to preserve the quality of the rum which once made St. Croix famous. It will attempt to give the American public this quality of rum at a price below the present prices charged by the liquor interests in the United States. And, finally, it will cooperate with the people of the islands in the production of other crops.

THE THREE ISLANDS

It is our hope to divide the advantages of the program in such a way as to benefit the people of all three islands. Since the economic development of the three is not similar, this requires a diverse program. St. Croix, the largest island, is agricultural. Its chief industry has been and will continue to be sugar and rum, and here the Virgin Islands Co. will concentrate on the development of these two commodities. St. Thomas, famous as a shipping center, will receive the benefit of the new hotel ping center, will receive the benefit of the new hotel and tourist trade and harbor improvements. St. John, the smallest of the islands, is a picturesque jungle, the haven of fishermen, and inhabited by only 700 people, whose chief industry is charcoal burning and the growing of bay trees for bay rum. Both here and in St. Thomas the Virgin Islands Co. hopes to encourage the further development of the bay-rum industry.

The Virgin Islands Co. is incorporated under a unique charter. Its management is under obligation to make all the profits which legitimately can be made, but to use them for the benefit of the islands. The trustees hold the stock of the company in trust for the people. The charter provides that from the earned surplus the company may spend funds to further homesteading, housing, and other features of the social program.

and other features of the social program.

ATTITUDE OF ST. CROIX

It was only natural that a program as unique as this should be subject to some misunderstanding, and this we found to be the case in St. Croix. Here exists a social condition which is the direct heritage of slave days. The economic cleavage between the descendants of the landed aristocracy and the descendants of the descendants of the landed aristocracy and the descendants of the slaves is almost as great as it was during the days of bondage. Until recently 17 men owned 70 percent of the land of the entire island. In 1933 only 43 people in St. Croix paid income taxes. Sixty-five percent of those who die are burled as paupers, while 25 percent of the funds from the St. Croix municipality go to poor relief. The property qualification for suffrage in St. Croix is an annual income of only $60, or else ownership of property valued at $300, but despite this infinitesimal requirement only 400 men on the entire island can qualify to vote.

It was not surprising, therefore, that the members of the Colonial Council of St. Croix, who are elected by this small proportion of landowners and are themselves estate owners, should have looked askance at any such project.

The basic principle of the government of the Virgin Islands is that it does not seek to impose any part of its program which may be unwelcome. And despite the fact that the charter of the Virgin Islands Co. did not need to come before a legislative body but merely required registration with a court, the entire question was submitted to the Colonial Council of St. Croix for discussion and criticism. This brought out the fact that certain features of the program were unwelcome to the estate owners and that the legal phrasing created confusion among the people. After prolonged discussion, the charter was rejected.

Simultaneously the Colonial Council of St. Thomas and St. John approved the charter unanimously. As a result, the Virgin Islands Co. will operate from St. Thomas and carry on certain activities in St. Croix. It will enjoy no concessions. It pays taxes and is subject to every other regulation governing industry in the island.

HOMESTEADING EFFORTS

From a profit point of view, of course, the Virgin Islands Co. will carry the additional burden of financing a part of the homesteading program. This is considered all-important. In St. Croix the desire to own land amounts almost to a religious passion. Already we have distributed some 2,500 acres of land to about 500 peoready we have distributed some 2,500 acres of land to about 500 people, and in the near future we shall be able to distribute about 2,000 acres more. These homesteaders get loans with which to buy seeds and tools, and already the effect upon their character and the economic condition of the island is noticeable.

Coincident with the homesteading program we have begun the construction of fireproof cottages of two or more rooms. This we hope may eventually remedy one of the most deplorable conditions in the islands. In St. Croix there are 2,623 one-room houses, and 4.545 families. A recent survey showed that these one room.

in the islands. In St. Croix there are 2,623 one-room houses, and 4,545 families. A recent survey showed that these one-room houses sometimes sheltered as many as 12 people.

The percentage of marriages is low, and 65 percent of the children are illegitimate. One of our greatest problems is that of adolescent girls, many of whom, having no employment and being raised in crowded families, naturally gravitate to some man who will support them. Not being bound by matrimony, the commonlaw husband eventually moves on, leaving his children behind to be cared for as best they can be. be cared for as best they can be.

To help remedy this condition we propose to establish an industrial farm school for boys in St. Thomas; expand the vocational school in St. Croix, and establish girls' clubs on the cottage plan, where, under supervision, they may learn housekeeping, handi-craft, and other industrial occupations. In addition, it is also planned to open the Queen Louise Home for orphan girls, which was maintained under the Danes but closed with the beginning of American administration.

NEW PROJECTS AFOOT

How ready the great majority of the people are to enter into partnership with the new deal in improving their own welfare has been amply illustrated in recent months. Already a botanical garden, begun 2 years ago by Maurice Petit, a Virgin Islander, and supported by the leading citizens of St. Thomas, has become one of the show spots of the islands. On Protestant Cay, a 4-acre island in the harbor of Christiansted, St. Croix, a swimming beach has been established for the use of all the people.

The cultural background of the islands is such that the slightest encouragement brings forth heautiful evidences of self-expression.

encouragement brings forth beautiful evidences of self-expression. Charles H. Emanuel, of Diamond School, St. Croix, has rediscovered some of the Virgin Islands spirituals of former years, taught them to his children, and pleased the public with their sonorous beauty. At another St. Croix school, Melville A. Stevens, sonorous beauty. At another St. Croix school, Melville A. Stevens, formerly of Hampton Institute, has organized a glee club which also has increased the popularity of the old spirituals.

The native love of music, which finds outlet in the organization of scratchy bands, also has been guided to new achievements. Scratchy bands are so named because of the instruments—gourds upon which the musician scratches with a nail. Thanks to George Exertin Peabody and the New York Times which save of several servances. Foster Peabody and the New York Times, which gave generous response to our appeal, two high schools now have regular band instruments while 100 gift pianos have come to the islands.

RHYTHM BANDS

Bands have now been organized in every school. And where brass instruments are not available—the case in all but two—Mrs. Adele Galiber, a St. Thomas teacher, has led the way in forming rhythm bands. With drums made of cheese boxes and homeword seither mitters of school-depart celebrath triangles of ing rhythm bands. With drums made of cheese boxes and home-cured goat skins, guitars of scooped-out calabash, triangles of old horseshoes, tambourines fashioned from tin-can covers with pop bottles attached, castanets made of gourds with pebbles inside, and flutes of papaya stems cut with four holes and a piece of paper tied at the top—there is nothing to equal 20 or 30 Virgin Island school children playing in a rhythm band.

Thus, slowly, sometimes a little gropingly, we chart our course toward the new deal in the Virgin Islands. It may be changed many times as soundings and weather dictate. We have only just begun. Our need is for luxuries—what Robert Louis Stevenson calls the "superfluities", when he writes: "We don't live for the necessities of life. In reality, no one cares a damn for them. What we live for are the superfluities." We phrase it thus: "Civilization walks on a pair of shoes." Most Virgin Islanders wear shoes; so we have a start on an improved standard of living.

BANKRUPTCY AND RECEIVERSHIP PROCEEDINGS IN NEW YORK CITY |

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to an article which appeared in the New York Times this morning, headed "Shift on Receiver by Court Likely." I hope the correspondent of that paper, now in the press gallery, will pay attention. The article is in part as follows:

SHIFT ON RECEIVER BY COURT LIKELY-JUDGE KNOX WEIGHS MOVE TO STOP NAMING IRVING TRUST IN ALL CASES HERE—LAWYERS PUSHING FIGHT—BANKEUPTCY LAW CALLS FOR CARE IN APPOINTMENTS TO

The possibility that the Irving Trust Co. may not continue to be the standard receiver in bankruptcy cases was acknowledged yesterday by Federal Judge John C. Knox, senior jurist of the United States District Court, who has the task of formulating rules of the court under the bankruptcy law signed last week by President Roosevelt.

Judge Knox said that no new rules had been formulated by the court, but that he understood that the trust company was still appointed receiver.

Whether judges of the court will continue to make that appointment seemed to be problematical. The new law asserts: "The district court or any judge thereof shall in its or his discretion so apportion the appointment of receivers and trustees among persons, firms, or attorneys thereof within the district eligible thereto, as to prevent any person, firm, or corporation from having a monopoly of such appointments within such district."

Judge Knox said that he and his fellow jurists would have to consider the meaning of the words "monopoly" and "discretion" before saying just what rules of the court would be formulated.

A month or so ago we passed H.R. 8832, bill introduced by me to prevent the Irving Trust Co. from acting as a standing receiver. This bill destroyed the Irving Trust Co. as a monopoly in receivership proceedings for the United States courts in the southern district of New York. This bill found its way into the corporate reorganization bill as section III, which passed both Houses and was signed by the President.

The Irving Trust Co. can, therefore, no longer act as a standing receiver.

The New York Times article, particularly its heading and the implications of the subject matter, is utterly erroneous and incorrect, and gives a false impression to the public of New York. It is not a question of the "shift on receiver by the court" being "likely." The shift is imperative. The article further says, "Whether judges of the court will continue to make that appointment seemed to be problematical." There is nothing problematical about it. There is an absolute obligation on the part of the judges to discontinue the Irving Trust Co. as a standing receiver. It is not a matter of discretion or choice. The court can no longer appoint the Irving Trust Co. in all bankruptcy causes. That is the monopoly that the bill sought to and did destroy. If a judge disobeys the statute and continues to appoint the Irving Trust Co. in all cases, I reluctantly state that the judge does so in violation of the statute.

The Irving Trust Co. may be appointed in some cases, along with the Manufacturers Trust Co., or the National City Bank, or the Bankers Trust Co., or any other bank or trust company, together with lawyers and firms, but no one person or entity can be appointed in all the cases.

I hope the New York Times will indicate this clearly to its readers and that all the other New York papers will follow suit.

I drafted the report for the Judiciary Committee of the House concerning the activities of the Irving Trust Co. as monopoly receiver. The report is in part as follows:

The district judges of the southern district of New York some time ago adopted a rule setting up the Irving Trust Co., of the city of New York, as a standing receiver in all cases, and since that order said Irving Trust Co. has supplanted the legal profession in the administration of receiverships in bankruptcy.

A few years ago there had occurred some scandals in the city of New York concerning the appointment of receivers. The United States judges of the southern district of New York, however, were not without blame, since they had in some cases themselves appointed incompetent and dishonest officials. Of course, it must be stated that, considering the tremendous amount of work the judges must perform, to pass accurately in all cases upon the competency and honesty of their appointees is ofttimes difficult, if not impossible. Yet, as a result of the order of the judges setting up the Irving Trust Co. as a standing receiver, there has been set up a monopoly in the Irving Trust Co., with power to appoint attorneys for the receiver, the appraisers, custodians, auctioneers, etc. Referees are also instructed by the judges in notices to creditors, in as persuasive and forceful language as possible, to suggest voting the Irving Trust Co. as trustee. This is contrary to the spirit of the Bankruptcy Act, which provides for creditor control over bankrupt estates. In almost every instance where the Irving Trust Co. has been appointed receiver it has been elected trustee. stated that, considering the tremendous amount of work the elected trustee.

Conflict of interest has often arisen. One bankruptcy estate ten has claims against another estate. Since the trust company often has claims against another estate. Since the trust company is receiver or trustee in all cases, it has found itself making claims against itself. There are cases in the southern district of New York entitled "Irving Trust Co. as receiver against Irving Trust Co. as receiver."

In justification of their attitude in setting up the bank as In justification of their attitude in setting up the bank as standing receiver, some of the judges had explained that formerly they were importuned at their homes, upon the streets, and at public gatherings by those who sought to be appointed as receivers in bankruptcy cases. They claim they now have great peace of mind because they are no longer bothered with these insistent demands for appointments. It must be remembered, however, that the bankruptcy statute was not enacted for the convenience of judges or their peace of mind. Judges must be able to steel themselves against the improper importunities of friends. They must render themselves impervious to such demands and requests. must render themselves impervious to such demands and requests. If the judges complained of such political patronage in the appointment of receivers, it must be remembered that there has been set up another kind of patronage, namely, the Irving Trust Co. Doubtlessly the one who confers the most favors and brings the most business to the Irving Trust Co. will in the long run receive lucrative appointments. The appointment of lawyers may not be exclusively upon merit or efficiency. Certainly officials of the bank are just as human as the judges. They are subject to the same demands and importunities.

Furthermore, upon the suggestion of the judges of the southern district of New York, the Supreme Court adopted a rule permit-ting the Irving Trust Co. to deposit with itself bankrupt estate funds. This is most unusual. Nowhere else do we have a situa-tion where a receiver or trustee can keep his or its own funds in his or its possession.

A subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee investigating conditions concerning the Irving Trust Co. brought out the fact that last summer there was $19,000,000 that the Irving Trust Co. held on deposit in the form of bankrupt estate funds.

Senior Circuit Judge Martin T. Manton, of the Circuit Court of Appeals, embracing the southern district of New York, has this to say on the subject:

"All integrity, honesty, and understanding have not left the bar just because of the so-called "bankruptcy scandal." Lawyers give to bankruptcy cases their individual, personal attention—their humane consideration. They are efficient and competent, and I believe can handle the exigencies of bankruptcy situations more believe can handle the exigencies of bankruptcy situations more satisfactorily than a banking corporation."

The appointment of the Irving Trust Co. as a standing receiver was opposed by the New York State Bar Association, the Brooklyn Bar Association, the New York County Lawyers Bar Association, the Nassau County Bar Association, the Queens County Bar Association, the Richmond County Bar Association, the Bronx County Bar Association, and the Federal Bar Association of New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut. The Irving Trust Co. was receiver, for example, in the following cases: United Cigars, Lerner Dress, Owl Drug, Whelan Drug Stores, Wallack Bros. (haberdashery), Savoy Plaza Hotel, Hotel Pierre, McCrory Stores, etc. It has under its control all manner and kinds of business and industries, retail, wholesale, manufacturing. It runs railroads, restaurants, trolley lines, hotels, and supervises the operation of 60 match corporations in Denmark, Finland, Guatemala, Yugoslavia, Norway, the Philippine Islands, Poland, Turkey, Austria, Czechoslovakia, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, and Italy, and the United States. By the appointment of itself as ancillary receiver of many chain-store bankrupts it functions in scores of congressional districts.

In the beginning it set up its own collection agency, called the "Extente Collection Service" and in addition to its own fees as re-

In the beginning it set up its own collection agency, called the "Estates Collection Service", and in addition to its own fees as receiver said Irving Trust Co. charged collecting fees. It took court proceedings to preclude the Irving Trust Co. from indulging in this practice.

The Irving Trust Co. issued a report to its stockholders January 17, 1934. It contains certain information as to the profitable operation of its bankruptcy-receivership department. There is a statement in the report to the effect that $100,000 a year is estimated as its profit as the trustee of bankruptcy funds. If such profit had been made by an individual trustee and not the Irving profit had been made by an individual trustee and not the Irving Trust Co., it would belong to the creditors who share in the dividends. This is not the case, however, with the Irving Trust Co.

The Irving Trust Co. and its defenders, including numerous trade associations, maintain that creditors have received more dividends and are far better off under the old system of appointing individual attorneys and entities as receivers, able dispute as to this. There is consider

The Federal Bar Association of New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut, however, says as follows:

"A careful examination and analysis of one of the reports filed | by the Irving Trust Co. shows this bank to be of no practical advantage to the creditors over the administration by the creditors themselves under the bankruptcy law and no improvement for the public interest."

The representative of the Brooklyn Bar Association stated that his investigation demonstrated (1) that the Irving Trust Co. administration is not more economical, and (2) that the creditors are not receiving a larger percentage of the dividends by reason of the Irving Trust Co. acting as administrator.

The Irving Trust Co. has seen fit to appoint as its attorneys in previous receiverships a contario of forceits attorneys.

various receiverships a coterie of favorite attorneys. The fees received by these attorneys are staggering in amount. In the investigation conducted by the special committee of the Judiciary Committee at New York, it was disclosed that 4 law firms, out of 84 bankruptcy cases distributed among them, had received in fees 84 bankruptcy cases distributed among them, had received in fees a total, up to the time of the investigation in October 1933, of $1,043,584, and that there were numerous cases still pending in those offices for which no compensation had yet been paid. The stupendous fees paid to several of these law firms under the Irving Trust Co. arrangement is shocking. One firm, in particular, will have earned doubtlessly upward of three-quarters of a million dollars when the pending cases are concluded.

The continuing of the Irving Trust Co. as receiver will tend toward a monopoly that will give this corporation tyrannical control over the bar, because the amount of legal work it passes out is incalculable.

The New York State Legislature last year and the New York State Legislature recently passed what is known as the "McNaboe bill", which intended to prevent the Irving Trust Co. from exercising a virtual monopoly in receiverships. Although the measure did not mention that corporation by name, it provided that no corporation could act, directly or indirectly, as receiver or trustee in bankruptcy or as receiver in equity. The bill recently and the bill last year went through both houses of the legislature by wide margins. Governor Lehman last year and on March 24 of this year bill last year went through both houses of the legislature by wide margins. Governor Lehman last year and on March 24 of this year vetoed the bill, and said:

"The veto of this bill is not to be construed as an approval of the system existing in that district. The fact is, however, that the judges of the Federal court of the southern district, pursuant to the power vested in them, adopted the rule centering receiverships and trusteeships in bankruptcy in the hands of one corporation.

"If a change is desired, the judges of that court may make the change, or the change may be made by action of the Congress. It is not for this State to change by indirect means a rule made by a Federal court for the discharge of bankruptcy cases coming

"As I said in my veto message of last year, interference by the State would not only be an unwarranted intrusion into what is primarily a judicial function but it would carry that intrusion info Federal courts, which are in no sense subject to State legislative control, and into the field of bankruptcy, which by the Constitution of the United States is vested in the Federal Government."

We thus have an overwhelming expression of sentiment on the part of the New York State Legislature, representing the sentiment of the people of the State of New York, that it does not wish the continuance of the Irving Trust Co. as monopoly receiver in the Federal courts. The Governor of the State of New York says that it is not within the province of the State to act. It is the duty of Congress to act. Congress has acted.

MINERAL LANDS LEASING ACT OF 1920

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3723) to amend the Mineral Lands Leasing Act of 1920 with reference to oil- or gas-prospecting permits and leases.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to promote the

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain", approved February 25, 1920, as amended, is amended by adding the following new section:

"SEC. 40. (a) All prospecting permits and leases for oil or gas made or issued under the provisions of this act shall be subject to the condition that in case the permittee or lessee strikes water while drilling instead of oil or gas, the Secretary of the Interior may, when such water is of such quality and quantity as to be valuable and usable at a reasonable cost for agricultural, domestic, or other purposes, purchase the casing in the well at the reason or other purposes, purchase the casing in the well at the reasonable value thereof to be fixed under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary: Provided, That the land on which such well is situated shall be reserved as a water hole under section 10 of the act of December 29, 1916.

"(d) The Secretary may use so much of any funds available for the plugging of wells as he may find necessary to start the program provided for by this section, and thereafter he may use the proceeds from the sale or other disposition of such water as a revolving fund for the continuation of such program, and such proceeds are hereby appropriated for such purpose.

"(e) Nothing in this section shall be construed to restrict operations under any oil or gas lease or permit under any other provision of this act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WAR DEBTS AND PEACE DEBTS

Mr. KENNEDY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEDY of New York. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen: I think it is appropriate on this patriotic holiday, the one hundred and fifty-seventh anniversary of Flag Day, that I direct your attention to the correspondence now being exchanged between this Government and the debtor nations. This is a matter in which every patriotic citizen has a deep concern.

By your unanimous consent I am inserting in the Con-GRESSIONAL RECORD the following editorial, which appeared in the New York Sun on June 6. This editorial is entitled "Peace Debts" and presents a very clear and interesting story on the subject:

story on the subject:

In the British note announcing default of debt or debts, advances, and obligations the words "debt" or "debts", "advances", and "obligations" appear 18 times. In all but four instances they are preceded by the word "war." This is scarcely exact. A large part of the moneys due to the United States from their associates in the Great War are really peace debts contracted after the armistice. Where the note speaks of "war advances totaling $4,277,000,000", it would be better to be more definite. Great Britain got $3,696,000,000 in cash from us before the war ended and $531,000,000 in cash afterward. France borrowed $1,970,000,000 in cash from us during the war, and after the war borrowed $1,027,477,800 in cash and got $407,341,145 worth of supplies on credit. Italy got $1,031,000,000 before the armistice and $617,034,050 afterward. All told, the United States loaned $10,338,058,352, and of this amount $3,260,934,602, or nearly one-third, was loaned after the armistice. It cannot be said that these post-armistice notes were signed by governments in fear of annihilation. armistice notes were signed by governments in fear of annihilation.

It can be readily understood from the figures contained in this editorial that there is a substantial difference between the money loaned to foreign governments for war purposes and the amount which was loaned after the armistice had been signed. I believe that the post-armistice debt should be treated in a separate and distinct manner from the ordinary war debts.

The suggestions contained in the correspondence in connection with the payment of this debt furnish unmistakable evidence that our foreign debtors are unable to pay, or do not intend to pay, regardless of the language in which their defaults were couched. The fact still remains that our Government will find itself without payment on the due date. tomorrow, June 15.

I have consistently supported President Roosevelt in all his efforts to restore peace and prosperity to our country, and I intend to continue my support of his legislative program. However, I feel compelled at this time to express my emphatic disapproval of any plan that has for its object the cancelation of these debts. I do not know that it is the intention of the President to advocate any further extensions of time for payment on the part of our foreign debtors; but if the President is considering such a plan, I hope that he shall not be unmindful of my opposition. I will oppose in every possible way any plan which aims to delay or shall indefinitely postpone the payment of these war debts, and particularly that portion of the debt which was contracted after the signing of the armistice.

Ladies and gentlemen, may I suggest as an appropriate way of observing Flag Day, which we are now celebrating, that you devote some time to a study of the debts now due our Government from the various foreign governments so that you may join with me in my fight for prompt payment of the so-called "peace debts."

FRAZIER-LEMKE BILL

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, the days of the Seventy-third Congress are in the yellow leaf. We look back and see the panorama widen—we take stock of how much or how little we have accomplished. The one outstanding fact is that this Congress has failed to accomplish all that it might have accomplished for the benefit of the farmer in the great Corn Belt area.

Congress has made an effort. We have reduced acreage by law of Congress, and Nature by the law of drought has made a jest of our man-made law. We have destroyed millions of pounds of livestock to eliminate a surplus, and the god of rain has mocked us by destroying millions more. We still expect the farmer to take himself out of the hands of the money lenders by reducing his own production and at the same time consuming more of the things he must buy at increased costs. It cannot be done.

We have reduced the farmer's interest rate when he borrows from the Federal land bank. This is good. Congress should be commended for it. But Congress should be and will be condemned for not going further. Congress should be willing to go far enough to give the farmer at least an equal break with the railroads and the bankers.

In the past 24 months the railroads have received from the public as Government loans, refunds, and adjustments more than one and a quarter billion dollars. The farmer must pay his share of this burden, and most of the money found its ultimate goal in the vaults of the banker.

We have talked all this session of aiding the man with money, or who once had money, to recoup his losses. We have been constantly solicitous to see that the man—or woman—who had his investment in dollars did not suffer loss.

Mr. Speaker, money is the one thing that does not possess any inherent virtue. It produces nothing. It is a parasite that grows and grows from small beginnings to monstrous proportions without any effort whatever. It is without a soul and without a conscience, and does the will of whoever possesses it, without question. Its province is to destroy all other property that it may reign supreme. Interest is its servant that destroys the hopes and ambitions of man and takes from him the results of a lifetime of labor.

The farmer of this Nation is being reduced to a state of practical serfdom through the operation of this great destroyer, interest. It is time, if we expect the great agricultural population of the States of Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, and the other Corn Belt States to survive, that we become as solicitous for it as we have been for the bankers. It is time that we begin to realize that if everyone else is to retrench, then these collectors of interest must retrench. If the farmer is to take his loss, then the Shylocks who live through the toil of other men must also take their loss.

The Frazier-Lemke bill involves the principle that will do justice to these men and women who are now endeavoring to hold on to the property that they have acquired consisting of producing land, not merely money property. The Frazier bill may not be all that everyone desires. It may have some fault of detail. If so those details, after free discussion on the floor of the House, can be modified. But the principle in the bill is one of fairness and justice. The plan is profitable to the Government and profitable to the farmer. It allows the Government to control the issuance of money instead of the money lender. It does not cost the owner of this money property anything. He does not take any loss.

It merely prohibits him from having fed into his capricious maw these continuous and destroying interest payments. It ends the stamp of approval on the system that makes money all powerful and gives producing property and labor its just dues.

Mr. Speaker, months ago I was one of the two Members of Congress from Indiana who signed a petition along with 143 other Members to bring this legislation to a vote on the floor of the House. The filing of that petition was not a partisan political matter. The roll of signers shows an almost equal number of Democrats and Republicans. Among those signers appear the names of Members of prominence on both sides of the aisle. Likewise both Democrats and Republicans are found opposed to this legislation. Regardless of that petition and contrary to the intent of House rules, legislative action is still held in abeyance; and while it is held up, our farmers perish. Whether the majority of the Membership favors this legislation or not, at least so large a number of our citizens as the farm owners are entitled to their day in court. They only ask the right to be heard. The right can only be denied them at the peril of the destruction of free representation. I have no faith in my Republican colleagues who say this legislation is being held up by the Democrats. It was held up by the Republicans during 4 years of the Coolidge and Hoover administrations. They had the power then to correct this evil and did not. Instead, they nurtured these same money lenders and tightened their grip on these farms. During all that time they worshiped at the shrine of interest payments and glorified the property rights of money. The responsibility for the situation today is on their heads. The responsibility for curing the evil is on our hands.

These are the closing days of this Congress—only a little time is left for action.

The moving finger writes; and, having writ, Moves on; nor all your piety nor wit Shall lure it back to cancel half a line, Nor all your tears wash out a word of it.

If we are only given an opportunity to express ourselves on this legislation, then we need have no regrets. There will be no longing to turn back and rewrite the record.

SOME COMMENTS ON LEGISLATION OF THE PAST SESSION

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, as usual the work of the Ways and Means Committee has been extremely confining, perhaps more so during the past session than for several preceding sessions. Among the more important measures considered were the bill to adjust taxes on liquor, made necessary by the repeal of prohibition; the revenue bill; the bill giving the President authority to enter into reciprocal trade agreements with foreign nations and to adjust tariff duties to conform to such agreements; the bill increasing the ratio of silver to gold in the Nation's monetary reserves; and the bill authorizing the establishment of free trade zones in the ports of entry of the United States. In addition, some 15 or 20 other measures received the attention of the committee.

The foundation for the committee's work was laid at the close of the previous session by the passage of a House resolution setting up a subcommittee for conducting a preliminary study of the avoidance of taxes through loopholes in the law. The experts on the staff of the committee studied the problem during the summer of 1933, and the subcommittee commenced its work with daily sessions beginning the middle of October.

The main object of this work was to eliminate the possibilities for avoidance of taxes rather than to find new sources of revenue. This subcommittee has been again continued by another House resolution, adopted in the closing days of the present session. I wish, however, to say in advance of its labors that I and my associates of the minority of the committee will be very glad to continue the effort to plug loopholes, but I shall oppose, as I did this year, a general tax revision or any move to distinctly increase taxes, which in effect was the character of the Senate's amendments to the recent revenue bill.

The American people are very heavily taxed at the present time, and are entitled to reduced rather than increased taxes, particularly when the excess taxation cannot be justified on the ground of balancing the Budget, but can only be used for continued increases in governmental expenditures. We are reaching the limit of cur ability to pay debts, either by borrowing or taxing. The credit of the Nation cannot long survive continually increased borrowing, nor can the people long continue to be unduly assessed. The only remedy for this situation is a return to normalcy in governmental expenditures. Any suggestion of finding new sources of revenue will be vigorously resisted.

THE REVENUE BILL

The subcommittee appointed to make a study of tax avoidance, of which I was a member, made its report to the full Ways and Means Committee early in December 1933, in advance of the regular session of Congress. Hearings were held on the proposed changes, and after careful consideration by the committee some were rejected and others modified. If they had not been, I was prepared to submit a minority report opposing the bill.

Finally, on February 9, 1934, the new revenue bill was introduced in the House. In the form presented it would have raised some $258,000,000 in additional revenue, wholly by administrative changes in the existing law and without the imposition of any new taxes. In other words, it was simply a bill to prevent tax avoidance.

In his Budget message the President took cognizance of the work of the Ways and Means Committee, and stated that probably $150,000,000 would be realized by administrative changes, whereas when completed the bill raised $100,000,000 more than the President indicated.

The bill passed the House substantially as introduced, with only seven Members voting in opposition. It then went to the Senate, where it was referred to the Finance Committee. That committee held hearings on the House bill and reported it to the Senate with only two major changes, namely, a slight increase in the estate-tax rates and the reenactment of the capital-stock and excess-profits taxes, which had expired with the repeal of prohibition. As reported by the Finance Committee the bill would have raised some $330,000,000. In the main, it was still a bill to prevent tax avoidance, and not a bill looking for new sources of revenue.

When the bill reached the Senate floor the so-called "progressives" virtually ran away with the Finance Committee. When they had finished with it, the estimated revenue yield had been increased to $480,000,000, and instead of being a bill to prevent tax avoidance it had become a bill to increase taxes. One of the amendments added by the Senate would have imposed a superincome tax of 10 percent for the taxable year 1934, estimated to raise $55,000,000; another amendment increased the estate-tax rates to a maximum of 60 percent, adding about $90,000,000 to the general tax burden.

When the bill went to conference the Democratic House conferees yielded to the Senate on almost every important item, as is evident from the fact that the compromise measure is estimated to yield $417,000,000. The only major Senate amendment which was not accepted by the House conferees was the $55,000,000 superincome tax. This item was reported in disagreement by the conferees and was rejected by the House on a separate vote, to which action the Senate yielded.

These changes were so contrary to the general purpose of the bill that I opposed the adoption of the conference report and still object to the final enactment of the bill, which calls for such a large additional contribution from the people. Out of the more than $400,000,000 in additional taxes levied $150,000,000 in round numbers is from new sources.

Among the provisions of the new law, with which I am not in agreement, are the increased income-tax rates, the ventures.

confiscatory estate-tax rates, the abolition of consolidated returns, the continued exemption of dividends out of pre-March 1, 1913, earnings, and the publicity provisions.

Under the House bill, we gave substantial relief to the smaller taxpayer having income from salaries and wages and at the same time increased the tax somewhat on those having incomes from dividends and partially tax-exempt interest on Government obligations. The Senate, however, felt that the smaller taxpayers were not entitled to the relief which the House had given them and increased the tax in the lower and middle brackets. Thus the rates in the new bill are a compromise between the views of the two branches. Personally, I can see no justification for the increase over the House bill. In fact, there cannot possibly be any justification for increasing the taxes of persons with moderate incomes proportionately more than persons with the larger incomes.

In this connection-I may say that when the bill was before the Ways and Means Committee the schedule of surtax rates which was first worked out put a disproportionate increase on taxpayers in the lower brackets. I presented a new schedule which shifted the burden of the increase further up in the scale, and this new schedule was made the basis of the rates finally provided in the House bill. However, the rates of the new law have the same defect as those which I previously opposed.

The new law increases the maximum estate-tax rate from 45 percent to 60 percent, with proportionate increases in the other brackets. It would appear that the former maximum rate of 45 percent is as high as we can honestly go without virtual confiscation of estates. Even during the period of the World War the rates were never in excess of 25 percent. A very great hardship in the settlement of estates comes about by reason of the fact that the tax is assessed on the value of the property at the date of the owner's death and by the time the estate is distributed to the heirs it may have depreciated until there is little left after the tax is paid.

Under the new law, consolidated returns cannot be filed by affiliated corporations, except in the case of railroads. Such returns have previously been allowed on the theory that affiliated corporations were in reality but one enterprise, like the several departments of a large store. While it sounds favorable to corporations to permit consolidated returns, as a matter of fact more revenue would result to the Government by reason of the higher rate of tax that would be imposed. The merit of consolidated returns is borne out by the fact that the Treasury Department has always favored this method, irrespective of which party happened to be in power. In the Senate, an amendment was adopted abolishing consolidated returns altogether in spite of the recommendations of the Treasury Department and the Senate Finance Committee. In conference, a majority of the House conferees yielded in favor of the Senate action, except as to railroads. In this instance, the Democrats went against the advice of their own Secretary of the Treasury.

The House has several times included in revenue bills a provision removing the exemption in favor of dividends declared out of corporate earnings accrued prior to March 1, 1913, the effective date of the first income tax. The Senate has always eliminated the House provision, and the item has gone out of the bill in conference. There is absolutely no justification for the exemption, and the Supreme Court has upheld the power of Congress to tax such dividends. Therefore, I cannot agree with the majority of the House conferees who yielded to the Senate on this provision.

The publicity of income-tax returns feature of the new bill is also the result of a Senate amendment. While the provision is not as drastic as the original amendment, it is sufficiently broad to satisfy the curiosity of those who wish to inquire into the private affairs of other people. There is already ample authority for the proper agencies outside the Treasury Department to inspect income-tax returns, and no reason exists why the data contained in the returns should be thrown open to snoopers and blackmailers, or be made the basis of "sucker lists" for all sorts of wildcat ventures.

RECIPROCAL TARIFF BULL

Mr. Speaker, if there is one issue that is clearly drawn between the Republican and Democratic Parties, it is the question of giving the President dictatorial authority over the tariff, as is provided in his reciprocal tariff law. The Republicans have fought this unprecedented, unconstitutional delegation of power every inch of the way, from the time it was introduced until it was finally enacted. The responsibility for this measure is clearly upon the Democratic Party. The roll call in the House on the passage of the bill showed 99 Republicans voting against and only 2 in favor of the measure. The vote in the Senate was also along party lines. Thus the Republicans have lined up solidly in opposition to this Democratic proposal to reduce the tariff and allow the displacement of domestic products by increased foreign importations.

We Republicans believe it is self-evident that more imported goods means less goods produced in this country; that less goods produced in this country means less work; and that less work means more unemployment. Surely, with millions of men out of work, with the millions who are dependent on them crying for food, and with our farmers vainly seeking a market for their products, it will not help matters to increase our purchases abroad. The domestic market is the birthright of our own people, and the Republican Party is in favor of holding on to it.

Under the terms of the law the President is given the power to enter into reciprocal-trade agreements with other countries and to proclaim such reductions in existing duties as may be necessary to carry out these agreements. In other words, he is given both treaty-making and tariff-making powers. The agreements which the President may enter into will be binding upon this country without ratification by the Senate, and he may fix tariff duties to suit his fancy. The only limitation is that he may not change an existing duty by more than 50 percent. Beyond that, his discretion is complete.

In fixing duties, the President may completely disregard foreign and domestic cost differentials. This means the abandonment of the Republican principle of protection to agriculture, industry, and labor, which more than anything else has been responsible for the development of this country and the maintenance of the American standard of living and the American wage scale. Republican Members in both the House and Senate, of whom I was one, attempted to amend the bill so that no duties could be reduced below the amount necessary to offset any foreign advantage in cost of production, but these efforts were futile in the face of the large Democratic majorities in both branches. The Democrats even voted down amendments to prevent reductions in the agricultural rates. They apparently wanted to give the foreigner every advantage in the domestic market.

Perhaps the greatest objection to the measure is the fact that it places in the hands of the President, or those to whom he will undoubtedly have to delegate his authority, the absolute power of life and death over every domestic industry dependent upon tariff protection, whether agricultural or industrial. Certain domestic industries will have to be destroyed in order to get foreign concessions for some of our export products. The President has full power to name those industries, and his word will be final. Destruction will come, of course, through a reduction of the tariff, thereby permitting a flooding of the domestic market with cheap foreign goods with which our producers cannot compete. No domestic industry can be assured that it will be spared. The threat of a lost domestic market will hang like a sword of Damocles over every farm and every factory, and over those dependent upon the farm and factory for a livelihood.

While it is true that only certain domestic industries are to be destroyed, yet no one knows in advance what industries will be selected. Representatives of the administration, in testifying before the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee, refused to give any indication, although they were asked time after time. The most outspoken was the Secretary of Agriculture, who indicated that it was the "inefficient" industries who were marked for slaughter. He indirectly defined an inefficient industry as one which could not meet foreign competition without a tariff, and even went so far as to say that if foreign countries can produce goods cheaper than we can, we should buy them there, and not try to produce them at home. The Secretary also indicated that the so-called "inefficient" industries were small industries, which, of course, is the kind we have in New England.

As has been the case generally when a ready-prepared bill is sent up from the White House, it was difficult for the minority to secure time for the opponents of the bill to be heard. Notices were supposed to have been given the press on March 5 that the hearing would begin on March 8, 3 days later, but one representative of a large domestic industry testified that he just happened to be in Washington on other business and learned of the hearing after he arrived here. Another witness said practically the same thing. When the hearings began I asked for a week's postponement in order to give the country a chance to digest the proposal, and industry an opportunity to prepare its case. This suggestion was ridiculed by the majority members of the committee, although they should have realized that the administration had been preparing its side of the case for many months.

One witness, whom the minority wanted particularly to hear, was Mr. Samuel Crowther, a prominent economist and one of the leading writers on economic questions, but it was only after considerable wrangling that we were able to keep the hearing open long enough for him to come to Washington from his home in New Hampshire.

Our Democratic friends, in trying to find some excuse for voting for the reciprocal tariff bill, continually asked, "Cannot the President be trusted to use his powers wisely and in the interest of the whole country?" The answer is that while no one would question the good faith and high purpose of the President, he is not the one who is going to do the actual negotiation of the proposed trade agreements. His hands are fully occupied with other matters, and he will be obliged to rely upon some of the underlings in the State Department to handle the details. While have implicit confidence in the President's sincerity, I have not that same confidence in the ability of some of his inexperienced and impractical advisers who constitute the "brain trust." Their recommendations will unquestionably have great weight with the President, and it will be they who will select the industries to be snuffed out by reduced tariffs. It will be they who will decide which industries are "inefficient", and therefore, according to the advocates of the bill, ought to be sacrificed for the benefit of other industries seeking foreign markets. Worst of all, there will be no appeal to Congress, because Congress has surrendered its authority to deal with the situation.

As prepared by the White House, no provision was made in the bill for notice to the industries to be affected by foreign-trade agreements, or for hearing interested parties. When the bill was before the House I offered an amendment to require hearings to be held, but it was voted down by the Democratic majority. In the Senate, the opposition to this feature of the bill was so great that finally an amendment was offered in behalf of the administration requiring reasonable notice to be given of the intention to negotiate a trade agreement in order that any interested person might have the opportunity "to present his views to the President, or to such agency as the President may designate, under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe." This amounts to no more than an invitation to an industry to be "present at its own hanging", as one Member put it. There is no assurance that there will be any careful weighing of the evidence nor even an adequate opportunity for a full presentation of the facts.

Another unfortunate feature of the bill is the fact that the tariff concessions which this country obtains in foreign markets may be empty and wholly illusory. Foreign-tariff rates are generally known to be "padded" for bargaining purposes, and in any event we cannot compel foreign countries to take any of our goods no matter how much we buy from them.

This so-called "tariff reciprocity or bargaining", is supposed to be something in the nature of "Yankee horse-trading", but there is a fatal distinction. In a horse trade, both parties get a horse, but in tariff bargaining the deal may be wholly one-sided. For example, suppose the President would lower the tariff on Japanese textiles in return for a lowered rate on our cotton in the Japanese market. Japan can then flood the American market with her textiles and put our New England mills out of business. At the same time, Japan is not bound to take a single bale of American cotton. Japanese importers may find it more advantageous to buy cotton from India or Egypt, in spite of the reduced tariff against our cotton, and we will be left holding the bag. Thus, while each party to the trade agreement is supposed to get some benefit, it may in fact turn out to be an empty bargain for us.

The fact is that reciprocal-tariff agreements can do no more than provide the avenue by which the nationals of the respective countries may carry on trade under more favorable conditions. Once the avenues are created they may or may not be used and many of our exporters will be unable to take advantage of them in competition with other foreign producers. Unless we can undersell the rest of the world we cannot expect to ship our goods abroad. Thus these avenues of which I speak will likely become one-way streets into our rich domestic market, which is the richest in the world and the envy of all other nations.

Even if we could be assured that the President would be able to effect an equal exchange of goods, would it be "worth the candle"? How can this country obtain any net benefit by destroying one industry to benefit another? Suppose we are able to sell more cotton to Japan by taking more of her textiles. How is that going to help the domestic situation? Though it may help the cotton-growing States, it will bring ruin to the textile industry of New England and even of the South. Moreover, for every additional bale of cotton that is sold to Japan, there may be two or three less bales sold to manufacturers in this country. The manufactured cotton that comes into this country from Japan may not be of American origin, and Japan may put our textile mills out of operation and still not benefit our cotton producers. While I have used cotton and textiles in this illustration, the same situation would exist with respect to any other commodities which might be made the subject of international bargaining agreements.

It is my opinion we have nothing to gain from these proposed reciprocal agreements, and everything to lose. We cannot hope to get more than an equal exchange, and the probabilities are that we will come out on the short end of the bargain. To secure even an equal exchange may result in the destruction of the local industries of many sections of the country, and New England is likely to suffer more than any other. The small industries which are thus endangered are often the lifeblood of whole communities, and while the loss of a particular industry would not mean much to the country at large, and especially to the "brain truster" in the State Department who marked it for extinction, it would be a hard blow to those dependent upon it for support.

Is it fair that one industry in the United States should be wiped out in order that some other industry may expand its export trade? Is it right to destroy industries in one section to build up other industries in other sections? Is it just to give one man the power to take away the livelihood of one group of men that another group may be made more prosperous? To these questions the Republican Party answers an emphatic "No"; the Democratic Party, an equally emphatic "Yes."

There are those who will say that industry, agriculture, and labor have nothing to fear; that the President will not, to use his own words, disturb any "sound and important American interest." Yet the fact remains that unless we offer some concession to foreign countries no trade agreements will be entered into. If the President expects to unload our surplus of cotton and pork in foreign countries, he must give these countries equivalent opportunities in our market. We cannot expect to sell without buying, and there is nothing additional we can buy that is not already made in this country.

The President cannot expect to take coffee, tea, rubber, and other noncompetitive products in trade for our surpluses, because these products are already on our free list. He must necessarily deal in articles on the protected list, which foreign countries would like to supply us. Japan wants to sell us more textiles; Germany, more cutlery; England, more woolens; France, more wines; Argentina, more wheat; Canada, more dairy products; Czechoslovakia, more shoes; and so on down the line. The President cannot enter into negotiations with foreign countries and hope to trade our wheat for lace handkerchiefs, or our cotton for fancy leather bags. Some important domestic industry must of necessity be sacrificed in each bargaining agreement.

In his message to Congress recommending the enactment of the reciprocal tariff bill, the President pointed to the decline in our foreign trade and stated that "this has meant idle hands, still machines, ships tied to their docks, despairing farm households, and hungry industrial families." This is undoubtedly true so far as persons engaged in the export industries are concerned, but the decline in international trade is world-wide and has followed the decline in internal business. Our own foreign trade was constantly on the increase, both in imports and exports, up to the time of the stock-market crash in 1929, and it is not going to help matters now to further destroy the domestic market.

The President's advisers clearly have laid too much stress upon foreign trade and have overemphasized its relative importance. Even in 1929 we consumed, at home, 90 percent of what we produced, and our exports in that year, great as they were, only accounted for 5 percent of the national income. To say that our foreign trade is the basis of our domestic prosperity is to say that the tail wags the dog.

It frequently has been alleged that our present tariff duties are so high that foreign countries cannot trade with us, and that this has been a large factor in the decline of our foreign trade. The best answer to this allegation is that during the whole period of the decline of our foreign trade the ratio of dutiable imports to free imports has remained constant, two-thirds being duty free. In other words, the tariff has not been a factor in our reduced purchase of foreign commodities. We have bought less abroad because our purchasing power has been reduced and foreign countries have bought less from us because their purchasing power has been reduced.

Our Democratic friends continually criticize in general the tariff rates in the present Hawley-Smoot law, but I have yet to hear mentioned, whether among the people themselves or from Members of Congress, a single specific rate which is too high to prevent proper interchange of goods.

I have discussed thus far only the economic phases of the bill. There is also the constitutional phase. Under our system of government Congress alone has the power to impose tariff duties, and the Supreme Court has many times held that Congress cannot surrender its legislative powers to the Executive. Yet that is precisely what it does by the reciprocal tariff law.

The Democrats have tried to say that the President's power under this measure is no more than he has under the so-called "flexible tariff." That, however, is not the case. The Supreme Court upheld the flexible tariff law because there Congress merely laid down a principle which it directed the President to follow in maintaining tariff rates at a point which would always offset the difference in cost of production of domestic and foreign articles. Under the reciprocal tariff law no principle or rule is laid down for his guidance. He may completely disregard foreign and domestic cost differentials, and may fix duties without reference to any legislative formula. Therefore, when he changes a tariff rate under the reciprocal tariff law he is in fact legislating contrary to the Constitution.

When the flexible-tariff provisions were under discussion in connection with the 1922 and 1930 Tariff Acts the Democrats fought bitterly against what they termed a surrender of the taxing power to the Executive. The present Secretary of State, Mr. Hull, was then a Member of the House, and he referred to the flexible-tariff provisions as being "subversive of the plain functions of the Constitution" and an "unjustifiable arrogance of the taxing power and authority to the President." The present Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Mr. Doughton, said that it was—Too much power and authority to lodge in any man who has been, is now, or ever will be President of the United States.

Yet in the present Congress these same men have sponsored a measure which goes far beyond the flexible-tariff provisions in delegating authority to the President.

As a matter of fact, the reciprocal-tariff bill gives the President practically the same authority that the German dictator, Chancellor Hitler, has over the tariff in his country. It gives the President more power than Premier Mussolini has over the Italian tariff, since the Premier's decrees are subject to ratification by Parliament. Even in Soviet Russia there is no such thing as one-man tariff making. There tariffs can be changed only by action of the Central Executive Committee and the Council of the People's Commissars. Dictator Stalin has no authority in the matter.

Never did the Republican Party ask that the President be given power over the tariff other than to carry out the specific mandate of Congress, and never has it given a President discretionary authority in fixing duties. The reciprocal negotiations carried on by the Executive under the McKinley and Dingley tariff laws were limited to specified items on which Congress itself had fixed the retaliations to be imposed or the concessions to be offered. At no time in the whole history of the country, whether under a Republican or Democratic administration, has the President heretofore been given general authority in reciprocal negotiations without at the same time requiring him to submit for the approval of both the House and Senate any treaties or agreements arrived at. The recently enacted legislation, therefore, is without parallel or precedent.

It appears that the reciprocal tariff bill just about completes the Presidential program of gaining control over all governmental functions. With its passage the need for a Senate and a House of Representatives is practically gone. In order to give Congress some check on the President's authority under the bill, I offered a motion in the House, and a similar motion was offered in the Senate, to require all agreements entered into by him to be submitted to the House and Senate for ratification. With their overwhelming majorities in both branches, the Democrats easily voted these amendments down.

It is true that the President's powers are temporary, being limited to a period of 3 years, but unless there is a decided change in the membership of the House and the strict control of the overwhelming majority by the President, these powers could be extended from time to time or made permanent at his will.

In the coming elections the Democrats will have to justify their votes in giving the President this unconstitutional and dictatorial authority over the tariff and over all domestic industries dependent upon tariff protection. They will have to answer for giving him this power to say what our people shall produce at home and what they shall buy abroad. They will have to explain by what principles of fairness and justice one industry may be destroyed in order to benefit another. They will have to demonstrate by what economic laws the importation of foreign agricultural products can rid our farmers of their surpluses; how the importation of more industrial products can reopen our own factories, and how the displacement of American by foreign labor can reduce the army of the unemployed. This accounting to the people will be particularly true in New England, where everyone is brought to realize the benefits that have accrued from the Republican policy of reasonable protection to American industries.

The Republican Party awaits with expectancy the opportunity to meet the issues raised by this bill before the American people in November. Having adhered to our traditional position of preserving the home market for American industry, agriculture, and labor we are confident of the outcome.

THE SILVER PURCHASE ACT

The silver purchase bill was referred to the Ways and Means Committee for consideration only because of the provisions of the bill levying a 50-percent tax on speculative profits in silver trading. Ordinarily the committee does not have jurisdiction of coinage and currency bills, and our Members therefore are not familiar with the money problem. Hence we were not prepared to give the silver bill very careful consideration. It naturally would be supposed, under the circumstances, that information would be sought by the committee before attempting to sponsor a bill of this character. Such was not the case.

The silver bill was prepared at the White House and transmitted to Congress along with the President's message on the subject. It was introduced in the House on the following day. Without any general notice of hearings, as is customary, the committee was called into executive session 2 days later to consider the bill. At the meeting, from which the press were at first excluded but later allowed to be present, only the sponsors of the legislation were heard. A representative of the Treasury Department gave an explanation of the mechanics of the bill, but frankly stated that he was not competent to explain the reasons for the enactment of the legislation or its underlying purposes.

The only other witnesses were the Member who introduced the bill in the House and a Member from one of the silverproducing States. The Secretary of the Treasury was on the stand only a few minutes and did not enter into any general discussion of the bill.

The Republican members of the committee wanted to get some information on the other side of the question, but they were not successful. After first being denied the opportunity to invite an outstanding authority on money questions to testify, we were told at 4 o'clock one afternoon that he could be heard if he were present the next morning. The gentleman whom the minority desired to have testify was Dr. Edwin W. Kemmerer, of Princeton University, but he could not be reached in time to be present at the morning session. Thus the hearing was closed with only the proponents of the bill being heard.

In an executive session lasting only a few minutes, without any discussion of the principles involved in the bill, it was reported to the House by the Democratic majority. The Republican members filed a minority report on the bill, criticizing the procedure in committee, but we were unable to argue the merits or demerits of the legislation, as we had no information upon which to base a proper judgment.

The object of the bill is to increase the ratio of silver to gold in our monetary reserves to one-fourth, and to provide for the issuance of silver certificates against such silver. Why the present ratio should be increased no one was able to say, neither was there any explanation of the probable effects of the bill. It seemed clear, however, that there would be some benefit to the silver-producing States by raising the price of silver. Also, in view of the fact that the bill had the active support of the so-called "inflationists", it must be assumed that it is somewhat inflationary. Beyond that everything is rather hazy.

It is estimated that in order to bring the silver monetary reserve up to one-fourth the gold reserve, the Treasury will have to buy 1,312,000,000 ounces of silver. The production in this country is around 24,000,000 ounces per annum, while the holdings of free silver are estimated at from 150,000,000 to 250,000,000 ounces. This free silver is largely in the hands of speculators who have been buying up the metal in anticipation of just such legislation as this. They stand to make a very handsome profit in spite of the 50-percent tax on speculative transfers.

In discussing the possible effects of the bill I can do no better than quote from an article in the New York Sun of May 24, giving Dr. Kemmerer's view of the legislation. The article says in part:

"The administration's latest program of doing something more for silver is one more step down the inflation path, weakening confidence in the dollar and wasting millions of dollars in the purchase of useless, dead silver at a time when other nations are selling, not buying, and in a depression when there is a large Government deficit", declared Prof. Edwin Walter Kemmerer, Walker professor of international finance at Princeton and noted monetary authority, in an interview with a Sun reporter here today. Professor Kemmerer was on his way to speak on sound money in Indianapolis.

I can only add that the Democrats again have either ignored or failed to recall their 1932 platform promise of a "sound currency at all hazards."

ESTABLISHMENT OF FOREIGN-TRADE ZONES

In keeping with their effort to make it easier for foreign producers to market their goods in this country, the Democrats have finally secured the enactment of the bill providing for the establishment of free zones in the ports of entry of the United States into which foreign merchandise may be brought duty free, there to await transshipment to other countries or sale in the United States. This legislation has been before Congress since 1919, and during that time the Republicans have consistently prevented its enactment. At the present time, however, we are hopelessly outvoted.

While the regular customs duties must be paid when merchandise is removed from the free zones for sale within this country, this does not prevent the legislation from operating unfairly against domestic producers. Everyone understands that accessibility for quick delivery is an important consideration in the sale of goods, and by setting the foreign producer up in business at our very doorstep the bill removes the natural advantage that the American manufacturer or farmer now has in this regard. Thus a merchant in Boston, for example, may be able to buy a thousand yards of cloth more readily from the foreign trade zone than from a textile mill located only a few miles outside the city. As a result, the domestic producer loses the business.

By encouraging the dumping of cheap foreign goods upon the domestic market, the bill will work to the detriment of American producers and American workmen. At the same time, the opportunity for smuggling will be increased, and enormous expenditures will have to be made for the protection of the revenue. On the whole, the establishment of foreign trade zones is out of harmony with the Republican policy of protection and is a step in the direction of free trade.

Although the legislation is ostensibly proposed as an aid to the transshipment of foreign merchandise to other foreign ports, it will be used chiefly as a means of consigning immense quantities of foreign goods to the free zones to await sale in the United States. These zones will become a veritable world's fair, where goods from all nations may be stored for ready access into the domestic market in competition with the products of our own farms and factories. The Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, which heretofore have formed somewhat of a natural tariff barrier, are obliterated by this legislation.

The establishment of free trade zones is in complete accord with the administration's program to make the domestic market more accessible to foreign producers. In conjunction with the reciprocal tariff bill, the legislation will go far toward the encouragement of importations from abroad and the consequent destruction of American industry. To this program the Republican Party is unalterably opposed.

TAXATION OF COMMUNITY INCOMES

In connection with the committee's study of tax avoidance, it was brought to our attention that in the eight so-called "community property" States, the property laws are such that a husband and wife may divide the husband's income for tax purposes, each returning one-half, and thereby paying substantially less tax to the Federal Government than persons in the other 40 States having the same income. For example, in Massachusetts, a man with a $10,000 salary would pay $480 to the Federal Government, but if he lived in one of the community-property States he and his wife together would pay a total tax of only $300. This is because the rates of the surtax are graduated, and by splitting up the income it is brought into lower brackets.

The eight States where this advantage in tax accrues are Arizona, California, Idaho, Louisiana, Nevada, New Mexico, Texas, and Washington. Under the laws of these States, the wife is deemed to be the absolute owner of one-half the husband's income, and because the liability for the Federal income tax is based upon ownership the husband and wife each make separate returns.

Two methods of treating this obviously unfair situation were proposed. One was to require husbands and wives in all the States to file a single return, and the other was to base the liability for tax in the community-property States on dominion and control over the income rather than ownership. The first method was suggested by the Treasury Department, and the second by the committee's own experts. The Treasury's proposal would have applied to husbands and wives in all the States, even where the wife had separate property. The other method was applicable only to the community-property States.

The committee, by a very close vote, adopted the second proposal rather than penalize 40 States to reach 8. With the exception of one member, who was from a community-property State, the minority members voted solidly in favor of the proposal. However, after having been included in the regular revenue bill, some of the majority members switched their votes and it was eliminated.

I was so concerned about the matter that I introduced a separate bill to carry out the proposed change, so as to put all taxpayers on an equal footing, regardless of the State in which they lived. This bill was introduced on March 1, 1934, and I endeavored to have it considered by the committee as soon as possible. The chairman promised to hold hearings on the bill, but left it up to the committee to decide whether the hearings would be before the full committee or a subcommittee. As consideration before a subcommittee would tend to delay action, the majority members voted over the protest of the minority for that method of procedure.

On May 1, 1934, the subcommittee began hearings, and they were concluded 6 weeks later, on June 12, although only 9 half-day sessions were held during that time. With Congress then on the verge of adjourning, it was obviously too late to hope for action on the bill.

Other than on the basis of partisanship, I do not see how Democratic Members from the 40 States which do not have community property laws could vote to allow the present avoidance of taxes to continue. By reason of this avoidance taxpayers in these other 40 States, including Massachusetts, must pay from $18,000,000 to $28,000,000 more in Federal taxes just because taxpayers in the community-property States do not pay their fair share. These eight States are all in the South and West, and, with the sole exception of California, are solidly Democratic so far as representation in the House of Representatives is concerned. Were it not for the fact that their present tax advantage is acquiesced in by Democratic Members from other States anxious to keep these eight States in the Democratic column, they could easily be outvoted and the bill enacted into law.

The community-property States cannot deny the unfairness of the present set-up which gives them an advantage over the other States, but they contend that the proposed legislation is unconstitutional on the ground that it would be taxing the husband for the wife's property. Of course, the income is only made the wife's by State law, and the Supreme Court has never directly passed upon the legal questions involved. Surely the Court would not countenance a situation which discriminates in favor of 8 States as against 40.

It is, therefore, perfectly obvious that this temporary victory of the Democratic majority is extremely partisan and that the party demonstrates it is more interested in retention of party control than in fairness to the taxpayers of all the States.

PROCESSING TAXES

The processing taxes imposed by the Secretary of Agriculture under the authority of the Agricultural Adjustment Act have resulted in a great burden upon the American people, especially in the industrial States. It will be recalled that the President and the Democratic Congress have' consistently opposed the manufacturers' excise tax, even with foods and clothing exempted, yet they have fastened upon the people a very onerous tax of the same character, which falls on the very things which the manufacturers' tax would have exempted. While the sales tax would have been levied at a very low rate, say of 2 percent, on what might be described as nonessentials, the processing taxes run as high as 60 percent and affect the daily necessities of every household in the land. At the same time, they bear more heavily on the poor than on the rich.

Consider the ad valorem rates of some of the processing taxes: With corn at 55 cents per bushel the 5-cent tax is equal to a rate of 9 percent; with wheat at $1, the 30-cent tax is equal to 30 percent; with cotton at 12 cents, the 4.2cents tax is equal to 35 percent; and with hogs at $3.75 per hundredweight, the $2.25 tax is equal to 60 percent. These taxes are imposed on the first processing of the commodity with respect to which they are levied, and as the tax is added to the cost of each subsequent handling it is considerably magnified by the time the finished product reaches the consumer.

Not only are processing taxes imposed upon the so-called "basic farm commodities" but on competitive products as well. Thus, in order to offset the tax on cotton, a compensatory tax is imposed on paper products which compete with cotton, either directly or indirectly. This particular compensatory tax as well as the tax on cotton itself vitally affects two of New England's most important industries, namely, paper and textiles.

Among the compensatory taxes on paper products are the following: Multi-wall paper bags, 2.04 cents per pound; coated paper bags, 3.36 cents; open-mesh paper bags, 2.14 cents; and paper towels, 0.715 cent. I understand that the tax on paper bags is equivalent to 50 percent or more of the value of the paper that goes into them.

The tax on paper towels ultimately falls upon hospitals, schools, factories, and public institutions which use them in great quantities, and I am informed that in comparing the average number of uses of a cotton towel with a paper towel. the tax on the latter is 1,100 to 1,300 times greater per use.

So far as the effect of the cotton processing tax upon consumers' goods is concerned, it is difficult to say just how much of the increased cost is due to the tax and how much to the textile code. Last November the Department of Agriculture made an estimate of the proportion of the retail price of certain articles, which, in their opinion, was attributable to the cotton processing tax. These estimates were based wholly on the amount of cotton going into the articles, and do not allow for middlemen's profits on the tax, which to them is just another item of cost. Accepting the Department's figures as a minimum, they fix the tax on sheets at 7.6 cents; work shirts, 3.5 cents; overalls, 8.3 cents; and unbleached muslin, 1 cent per yard. Thus in the case of a sheet costing the housewife $1, the tax is not less than 15 percent of the cost, and probably much more; in the case of work shirts selling for 75 cents, it is not less than 41/2 percent; and in the case of overalls selling for $1.25, it is not less than 61/2 percent.

As evidencing the extent to which the processing taxes have worked to the disadvantage of the New England States, I wish to set forth the collections made in our section as against the amounts returned to our farmers in the form of rental and benefit payments. From July 1, 1933, to April 30, 1934, New England paid some $25,000,000 in processing taxes and received some $300,000 in benefit payments. This was a return of only 1.2 percent of the amount contributed.

The most startling figures are those relating to Massachusetts, which contributed $17,000,000 out of the $25,000,000 raised in the New England group and received only $96,000 in benefits. To put it another way, 991/2 percent of the processing taxes which Massachusetts has paid thus far have gone to farmers in other States. These figures prove very clearly that the agricultural program of the administration is highly discriminatory against New England in hand, it is extremely favorable to other sections of the country, especially the South. Texas, for example, contributed only $8,000,000 in processing taxes, but received $47,000,000 in benefits; Arkansas contributed $500,000, but received $10,-800,000; Oklahoma contributed $2,800,000, but received $16,400,000; and so on. Thus, the farm program amounts to nothing more than the taxation of one group of the people for the benefit of another group.

At this point I will include a table showing the collections and payments in the several New England States.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

Mr. Speaker, the Democratic Party, in their 1932 platform, made the following declaration:

We believe that a party platform is a covenant with the people to be faithfully kept by the party when intrusted with power, and that the people are entitled to know in plain words the terms of the contract to which they are asked to subscribe.

A similar view was taken by the Democratic Presidential candidate, Mr. Roosevelt, when he said:

A platform is a proposal and at the same time a promise binding on the party and its candidates.

Among the pledges in the Democratic platform were those promising a reduction in Federal expenditures: the elimination of extravagance; a balanced Budget; a sound currency; a fact-finding Tariff Commission free from Executive interference; and the strengthening of the antitrust laws.

Since the 4th day of March 1933 Federal expenditures have been enormously increased. The Nation is faced with the greatest peace-time deficit in history in spite of increased taxes. The currency has been inflated and our dollar debased. The President has sought and received from a subservient Congress autocratic powers over the tariff, and under the N.R.A. monopolistic practices have been allowed to grow up to the detriment of small businesses.

While the failure to keep its specific campaign promises is sufficient to condemn the Democratic Party, the subtlety with which it has forced upon the American people, in the guise of recovery legislation, a system of government foreign to our ideals and institutions is even more repugnant.

I submit that nowhere in the Democratic platform is there any intimation that when the party was intrusted with power constitutional government would be suspended. Nowhere do we find the suggestion that the President would become a virtual dictator over every phase of our economic life. Nowhere is it stated that this country was to undergo a "peaceful revolution", in which the whole concept of governmental powers was to be overhauled by a professional 'brain trust" not responsible to the people. Nowhere do we find the suggestion that individual freedom and initiative was to be superseded by governmental restraint and regimentation. Yet all these things have come to pass under the present Democratic administration.

With the assurance in the Democratic platform that the people were entitled to "know in plain words the term of the contract to which they are asked to subscribe", the electorate had no reason to think that the Democratic Party had not laid all its "cards" upon the table.

Lest I be accused of partisanship in making these references, I shall offer a brief quotation from an outstanding Democrat upon this very matter. On May 24 of this year Hon. Bainbridge Colby, who will be remembered as Secregeneral, and Massachusetts in particular. On the other tary of State under President Wilson, made the following Club in New York City:

Gradually it has dawned upon the country, and it is now quite plain, that recovery was only partially the aim of the administration. A great part of its interest has been in radical institutional overturn and the new modeling of the State. * * * The guaranties of the Constitution are dismissed lightly as if they were irrelevances in the present-day life of America.

Mr. Speaker, when the President took office on March 4, 1933, he had behind him the almost solid support of the American people. His legislative proposals were speedily enacted into law with a minimum of opposition. Bills were prepared by the White House and sent to Congress along with the President's recommendations for legislation. The country was in a desperate situation and was willing to try anything. In the hysteria of the moment little opportunity was afforded for mature consideration of the various measures. The full implications of their provisions were never understood. Every bill had ambiguous terms and hidden grants of power. In practically every instance Congress surrendered to the Executive some legislative function or granted to him some dictatorial authority.

Where did the President's program originate? We have seen that it was not inspired by the Democratic platform, and certainly Mr. Roosevelt did not sponsor it during his campaign for the Presidency. The only other possible conclusion then is that it is the work of the "brain trust."

In this connection Mr. David Lawrence asked some very timely questions in a recent issue of his publication, the United States News. Said he:

Did the American people in the 1932 election vote for Mr. Roosevelt or for a tricky group of lawyer "brain trusters"? Did the American people have the slightest inkling that the Cabinet would be relegated to a secondary position and that behind the scenes a group of new-fangled thinkers, with economic doctrines and experiments entitled to the lands and other environments. and experiments suited to other lands and other environs, would reign supreme in the making of a legislative program?

The answer, of course, is that the people thought they were voting for Roosevelt and recovery, not for the "brain trust" and revolution.

While practically all governmental powers have been concentrated in the Executive, he has necessarily delegated many of those powers to subordinates. It has therefore been said, and rightfully so, that we are actually being governed today by persons not elected to public office. General "Crackdown" Johnson is an outstanding example. Alphabetical bureaus and boards have sprung up like mushrooms, each to regulate some phase of our national life.

Taking cognizance of the charge that his administration has brought about what is, in effect, a revolution in government, the President says that nevertheless it is a "peaceful" revolution. Later, he said that he preferred to call it "evolution." But by whatever term it may be described, we are drifting inevitably toward collectivism in government and toward regimentation of industry and agriculture. While the administration's program has been put forward in the interest of relief and recovery, its deeper purpose apparently is to bring about what has been described by one of the "brain trusters" as a "planned economy."

It is well understood that the only constitutional justification for much of the recovery program is its emergency character. It is generally admitted that except for the emergency, it would not have a leg to stand on. Yet already we hear talk of making much of this legislation permanent. In fact, the ultimate realization of the "brain trust's" dream of a socialized state is entirely dependent upon this fond hope.

In view of the aim and purpose of those who are responsi-ble for the "Roosevelt revolution", it is well to bring out into the light what is really taking place in this country today. The farmer is told by a bureaucratic agency in Washington how much he can plant, and of what, and if he happens to be a cotton farmer and plants more than his allotment he must pay a confiscatory tax. The business man is told how to run his business, and if he sells for less than the price set by the authority of the Government, remarks in the course of an address before the Economic | he may be thrown in jail like the New Jersey tailor who pressed a pair of pants for 35 cents instead of 40 cents.

Again, lest I be accused of partisanship in referring to these conditions, let me quote a statement reported in the press to have been made by former Senator James A. Reed, of Missouri, a staunch Democrat, in announcing that he might seek to regain his seat in the Senate after several years in retirement. He said:

When I voluntarily left the Senate in 1923, no prospect would have tempted me to run again.

I don't know that I can make the grade this time, but someone has got to tell the people of these United States what is happening to them

The Bolsheviks at Washington have got us by the throat, and what they are attempting to do, in my judgment, doesn't include the few defensible things of the Moscow regime.

That is rather strong language, but it is the language of a Jeffersonian Democrat, uttered in criticism of his own party. Other leading Democrats who have been extremely critical of administration policies are Hon. Alfred E. Smith and Hon. John W. Davis, both of whom were candidates of their party for the Presidency; Hon. Owen D. Young; Senators Glass and Byrd, of Virginia; Senator Gore, of Oklahoma; Senator Bailey, of North Carolina; and Governor Ely, of Massachusetts. I could quote from each of these men but will refer only to a statement made by Senator Byrn, who said:

In the face of this assurance in the Democratic platform we see today a bureaucracy being rapidly built up here at Washington to control the daily activities of our people such as no one has ever before remotely suggested or anticipated. Step by step the bureau chiefs are establishing new power to regiment the American people in all their daily activities.

One of the Members of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Terrell], who has conducted practically a oneman opposition on the Democratic side to much of the recovery program, had this to say about his own party's policies:

If anybody can tell me where we are headed, I would be glad to have some comforting information, as I believe we are headed for the rocks.

I would rather return to Texas and live under our Lone Star flag as an independent republic than to become a stepchild of a soviet union, which we are fast approaching.

As I stated above, it is my firm conviction that these revolutionary policies are the work of the "brain trust", and not of President Roosevelt. I have every confidence in the honesty and sincerity of purpose of the President and his desire to lead this country out of the depression and back to a normal condition. I fear, however, that this will be difficult of accomplishment so long as the President is handicapped by an impractical and theoretical "brain trust", on the one hand, and, on the other, by a Congress in which the majority party is so large as to preclude fair and unbiased consideration of legislation. Evidence of this was furnished during the closing days of the recent session, when the House by a large majority adopted gag rules so drastic that no legislation could even be considered without the approval of the majority House leader. When legislators vote away their right to pass upon legislation they have ceased to represent the people who sent them to Congress, and they have also nullified for the time being the system of representative government which is the foundation of our country.

EXTRAVAGANCE

The present Democratic administration has embarked upon the most extravagant and reckless peace-time spending program this country has ever known. It is apparently attempting to squander the Nation back to prosperity. Disregarding their promise to reduce governmental expenditures and to eliminate extravagance, and with no thought of where the money is coming from, the Democrats have sponsored one measure after another calling for the appropriation, not of millions but of billions of dollars.

Consider the cost of the recovery program to date. According to a statement issued last November, 2 months before the second session of the Seventy-third Congress began, the National Industrial Conference Board estimated that the authorized Federal recovery expenditures up to that time, both direct and contingent, exceeded $15,000,000,000. ordinary running expenses of the Government. The direct which aggregated $5,000,000,000, included expenditures. $3,150,000,000 for public works, $1,100,000,000 in benefit payments to farmers, $500,000,000 for emergency relief, and $250,000,000 to finance the Civilian Conservation Corps. The contingent liabilities, aggregating more than $10,000,-000,000, included $2,485,000,000 for farm credits, $2,200,000,-000 for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, $50,000,000 for the Tennessee Valley Authority, $2,000,000,000 to guarantee bank deposits, and $3,400,000,000 for the Reconstruction Pinance Corporation.

During the present session of Congress, beginning last January, many more billions of dollars have been added to the tremendous total authorized at the previous session. To date the total possible cost of the administration's recovery program has grown to approximately $25,000,000,000, including both direct and contingent liabilities. The new authorizations include an additional $850,000,000 for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, $950,000,000 for civil works and unemployment relief, $1,825,000,000 for additional emergency relief, $40,000,000 for additional crop loans, $580,000,000 for naval construction, $1,200,000,000 for housing, $1,000,-000,000 for increasing the borrowing power of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, $580,000,000 for loans to industry, $550,000,000 for road construction, $525,000,000 for drought relief, $500,000,000 for public works, and $899,000,000 for emergency relief.

In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, the actual expenditures of the Federal Government were approximately $5,000,000,000. The Democratic Party, in its platform, called for a "drastic reduction in governmental expenditures" and the elimination of "extravagance", yet the President, in his first Budget message, sent to Congress estimates calling for the direct expenditure of more than $10,000,000,000 in the fiscal year 1934 and nearly $6,000,000,000 in the fiscal year 1935. The marked failure of the Democratic Party to carry out its pledge to reduce the cost of Government challenges the good faith of the party in making it. While it may be true that the money is being spent in relief and recovery work, yet the same condition existed in the country when the Democrats made their platform promise and criticized the more modest Republican expenditures.

In a speech made on July 2, 1932, after he had been nominated for the Presidency, the present Chief Executive said:

I accuse the present (Republican) administration of being the greatest spending administration in peace times in all history.

That statement may have been true at the time-I do not know-but at any rate it is not true today. The present administration has made the former Republican administration look like a piker, so far as spending money is concerned. In fact, at the rate the administration has been pouring out public funds by the billions of dollars, it would appear that the Democrats do not realize what it means to speak in billions. In an article published some months ago in the Saturday Evening Post, Mr. David Lawrence pointed out that if we had $1 for every minute from the birth of Christ to the end of 1933, we would have slightly over a billion by that time. To this observation I might add that the administration is now spending on an average more in a single month than it took to pay the cost of running the Government in the entire fiscal year 1916.

In view of the extent to which the Democratic Party is passing out relief funds, doles, and subsidies, it is no wonder that it is popular with a large part of the people. The Democrats should realize, however, that this popularity will continue only so long as the public credit holds out. Then will come the rude awakening, and with it the day of reckoning. The fiddler who has been playing the accompaniment to Happy Days are Here Again eventually must be paid. Even now thinking people all over the country are beginning to wonder where this spending program will end and how the Government is going to be able to meet all its obligations

Of course, I am not unmindful of the part which the distribution of public money can play upon the fortunes of the Emergency Relief program are estimated to number over

This figure, of course, does not take into consideration the | a political party. With such vast spending power in their hands, the Democrats can virtually insure the indefinite continuance of their party in office. Any incipient revolt among the people can be quickly subsided by a distribution of Federal funds through one of the alphabetical agencies.

During the 1932 campaign the Democrats went up and down the country criticizing Washington bureaucracy, yet they have created more bureaus than the Republicans ever dreamed of. Every day there is born in the mind of one of the members of the professional "brain trust" some new alphabetical antidote for ridding the country of the depres-

The list of new Federal agencies set up by the Democrats since March 4, 1933, is simply astounding. In the total of some 40 or 50 are included such well known organizations as the N.R.A., the A.A.A., the P.W.A., the C.W.A., the H.O.L.C., the F.C.A., the F.D.I.C., the F.E.R.A., the F.H.L.B.B., the F.S.R.C., and the T.V.A. At this point I shall insert in the RECORD a more detailed list, giving the names of the organizations for which the alphabetical designations stand. The enumeration is neither intended to be complete nor authentic, as there seems to be no official listing of these agencies.

In February 1933, just before the Democratic administration came into office, there were 563,000 persons employed in the executive branch of the Government. According to the latest figures, which are for April 1934, this total has been increased to 644,000, which means that the Democrats have added 81,000 persons to the Federal pay roll during the first 13 months of their administration of the Government. These totals do not include the employees of the legislative and judicial branches of the Government, nor the military forces of the United States.

Besides the 81,000 new civil employees, the administration has put on the Federal pay roll the 300,000 men in the Civilian Conservation Corps. An additional 1,300,000 men are being given employment through the funds expended in the Public Works program, and those receiving aid under 11,000,000. Thus we have the spectacle of more than 13,000,-000 people, exclusive of the Army and Navy and the legislative and judicial employees, who are directly receiving support from the Federal Government. This is a ratio of 1 out of every 10 of the population.

The administration has set up its relief agencies on a temporary basis, and it is only on this basis that their cost can be charged off on the national debt rather than being provided for out of current revenues. However, we have already had evidence that authority will be sought to make some of the agencies more or less permanent.

When the Civilian Conservation Corps was set up in the spring of 1933, the expectation was that by fall industry would be sufficiently recovered to absorb the men. Fall came and the President obtained funds out of the publicworks appropriation to continue the reforestation work until spring. Spring came and we have seen the C.C.C. continued again, and there is no telling when it will be dropped. Yet all the time the expenditures for this agency are coming out of emergency funds, which are charged off to the national debt.

The same situation exists in connection with the Public Works program. The $3,300,000,000 provided by Congress for this purpose in 1933 has been exhausted, and additional funds have been provided for its continuation. This, again, was supposed to be a temporary relief measure, but the end is not yet in sight. The whole project is largely a waste of public money, as a large percentage of the work being done is wholly unnecessary, and in normal times never would have been undertaken.

When the Public Works project failed to come up to expectations, the Civil Works project was initiated with a view to giving immediate employment to some 4,000,000 men. This venture was so expensive, and it became so involved in graft and corruption, that it was later abandoned. In its place we now have the F.E.R.A., or Federal Emergency Relief Administration. The original appropriation for the C.W.A. was $400,000,000, and later an additional $450,000,000 was provided. Referring to the C.W.A., one commentator on economic questions stated that its termination "marked the end of what is reasonably safe to say has been the most expensive, wasteful, and extravagant unemployment relief program ever indulged in by a government in modern

UNBALANCED BUDGET

Among other things which the Democratic Party promised in its platform but failed to live up to was a balanced Budget. During the 1932 Presidential campaign, Democratic orators were loud in their denunciation of the Republican administration for permitting a deficit in the Treasury, even though incurred in an endeavor to bring the country out of the depression. They termed the 1931 and 1932 Republican deficits of $900,000,000 and $2,800,000,000 as "staggering" and "stupendous."

I would ask our Democratic friends today what has become of their promise to balance receipts against expenditures. At the beginning of the present session of Congress, in January of this year, the President presented Budget estimates which called for expenditures in the fiscal year just closing of more than $7,000,000,000 over and above the estimated revenues. His estimates for the fiscal year 1935 showed an anticipated deficit of $2,000,000,000 additional, or a total for the 2 years of $9,000,000,000, all of which must be added to the national debt.

While it now appears that the deficit for 1934 will be smaller than at first estimated, it is only because the administration cannot spend the money as fast as Congress has appropriated it. The unexpended balances will be carried forward into the fiscal year 1935, thus increasing the contemplated deficit for that year and making certain that by July 1, 1935, the full $9,000,000,000 Democratic deficit will have been added to the national debt.

In this connection it may be interesting to review the President's attitude toward an unbalanced Budget. In his first campaign speech after his nomination for the Presidency he said:

When the depression began the administration, instead of reducing annual expenses to meet decreasing revenues, became sponsor for deficits which at the end of this fiscal year will have added $5,000,000,000 to the national debt.

Let us have the courage to stop borrowing to meet continued deficits. Stop the deficits.

In his economy message of March 10, 1933, just after he had been inducted into office, the President began with the doleful assertion that "for 3 long years the Federal Government has been on the road toward bankruptcy." Referring to the deficits of 1931, 1932, and 1933, and the contemplated deficit for 1934, which he then fixed at only $1,000,000,000,

Thus we shall have piled up an accumulated deficit of $5,000,000,000

With the utmost seriousness I point out to the Congress the profound effect of this fact upon our national economy. It has contributed to the recent collapse of our banking structure. It has accentuated the stagnation of the economic life of our people. It has added to the ranks of the unemployed. Our Government's house is not in order, and for many reasons no effective action has been taken to restore it to order.

Further on in his economy message he added:

Too often in recent history liberal governments have been wrecked on rocks of loose fiscal policy. We must avoid this

I am in complete agreement with these sentiments, but I would like to know why the administration has not seen fit to stand by them. What has happened since these statements were made to render Budget balancing no longer an "emergency" matter, no longer essential to the "unim-paired credit" of the United States, and no longer a necessity to our "basic security"? Why was it so imperative that the Government save $400,000,000 by reducing the salaries of its employees and benefits to war veterans when the administration contemplated unbalancing the Budget in other directions by some $10,000,000,000? Perhaps the answer is that a Democratic deficit is more holy than a Republican one, especially when it is several times as large.

THE PURLIC DERT

At the close of the World War the public debt of the United States stood at $26,600,000,0000. This figure was reached on August 31, 1919, and it was then the all-time peak. By 1930 successive Republican administrations had reduced it to approximately $16,000,000,000, or at the rate of about $1,000,000,000 per year. However, as a result of the depression which struck this country in the fall of 1929, and which brought increased financial responsibilities upon the Federal Government along with decreased revenues, this figure gradually rose until at the time the Democratic administration came into power on March 4, 1933, it stood at $20,900,000,000.

On June 15, 1934, after the first 15 months of the Democratic Party's administration of the affairs of the Government, the public debt was $27,000,000,000, an increase during that time of $6,100,000,000, and approximately $400,000,000 in excess of the World War peak.

I have previously pointed out that the Democratic Party was swept into power on a platform which called for a cessation of further borrowing to pay the expenses of the Government. Nevertheless, the Democrats have committed this country to a spending program which by July 1, 1935, will increase the public debt to $32,000,000,000, or more than $5,000,000,000 in excess of the World War peak. Thus, after condemning the Republicans for having a $5,000,000,000 deficit in 3 years, the Democrats have piled up a $11,000,-000,000 deficit in 2 years.

The Republican Party made an honest effort to balance the Budget in the fiscal year 1932, at which time Secretary of the Treasury Mellon came before the Ways and Means Committee and said:

The administration is determined, with your cooperation, to arrest this borrowing process on June 30 next.

The revenue bill of 1932 imposed more than a billion dollars in new and additional taxes, which was the amount estimated by the Treasury to be necessary to meet the Budget needs, both ordinary and emergency. Thus, the Republican administration attempted to put the Government on a sound financial basis, even though later events proved that the receipts from the revenue bill did not come up to expectations.

The Democratic administration has made no attempt thus far to balance receipts against expenditures. The revenue from liquor only takes the place of the taxes levied under the Industrial Recovery Act to finance the $3,300,000,000 Public Works program. The anticipated additional revenue under the Revenue Act of 1934 will come largely through closing loopholes in the present law. There has been no attempt made to raise sufficient taxes to meet the Democratic deficit, and, in fact, it would be almost impossible to do so.

The administration promises a balanced Budget in 1936, but many things can happen between now and then. Everyone realizes that the credit of the United States is not without limit. If it is going to be strained by continued borrowing for emergency purposes and alleged emergency purposes, this country may be plunged into an economic chaos even greater than that in which it now finds itself. When the Government's credit fails, all credit fails; and if the national debt is permitted to grow beyond all reasonable bounds, either repudiation will have to result or the Government will be forced to issue flat money.

In the meantime, if the country is to be saved from bank-ruptcy, provision must be made for paying the interest on the existing indebtedness and setting up a sinking fund for its retirement. The interest charge alone for the fiscal year 1935 is estimated at $824,000,000, which is more than it cost to run the entire Government a year before the World War. While the interest charges must be paid annually the sinking fund is optional, and during the past several years it had not been set up. If restored to the Budget in 1935, it would amount to $526,000,000 annually, making a total cost incident to the public debt of $1,350,000,000 per annum. This does not represent a very happy outlook for the taxpayer, since the regular functions of the Government require a minimum Budget of approximately $2,500,000,000, to which must be added all extraordinary expenditures.

MONETARY POLICY

The monetary policy of the administration has been directly contrary to the Democratic Party's campaign promises. Its platform calls for a "sound currency to be preserved at all hazards", and the President subscribed to that platform and amplified his views on the subject of money in several campaign utterances. He ridiculed Republican charges that if the Democratic Party were victorious at the polls the country would be taken off the gold standard and branded as a "libel on the credit of the United States", the statement made by President Hoover to the effect that the country was near to being forced off the gold standard in 1932.

What has been the administration's record with respect to the monetary question since coming into power? The country has been taken off the gold standard. Gold is no longer a circulating medium of exchange. It is unlawful to possess gold coin or gold certificates. The gold content of the dollar has been reduced until it is now worth but 59 cents. Contracts requiring payment in gold, including currency and other obligations of the United States, have been declared to be against public policy. The President has been empowered, under the Thomas amendment to the farm bill, to issue $3,000,000,000 in greenbacks, and under the silver-purchase bill the currency will be further depreciated by increasing the ratio of silver to gold in the monetary reserves.

Before the Democratic administration came into power, the Nation's currency was redeemable in gold upon demand. The new currency being issued bears only the promise to redeem in "any lawful money."

The administration has frankly stated that its monetary program is experimental, and it is, therefore, quite evident that the Democrats have no definite policy. The country does not know from one minute to the next what direction it is going to take, or for how long. In view of this uncertainty, any permanent business recovery is virtually impossible.

LOANS TO INDUSTRY

One measure that had the almost unanimous support of both Houses was the bill providing for direct Federal loans to industries. While as a matter of principle I am not in favor of putting the Federal Government in the banking business, I do feel that there are circumstances which warranted the enactment of this legislation.

One of the greatest impediments to recovery has been the contraction of credit. The banks of this country, in their effort to keep liquid, are either unwilling or unable to make commercial loans, and the result has been that many industries and businesses have been unable to borrow money to make purchases and to meet pay rolls. In spite of the many billions of dollars that have been spent in the various recovery measures, unemployment has not been substantially reduced, and unless industry can secure capital the unemployed cannot be put back to work.

Money spent for relief does not come back to the Treasury, and at the same time it does not cure the unemployment situation. The funds to be loaned under the industrial loans bill will come back to the Treasury, and by rehabilitating industry will give employment to labor and bring about a measure of real recovery.

Under our present banking regulations, commercial banks are without power to make long-term loans to industry, even were they so disposed. Short-term loans, in most cases, would be of little benefit. This bill extends the lending power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Federal Reserve banks so that they can make 5-year loans to industry. Thus it should be a real aid to recovery. In order that the smaller businesses, which are the backbone of industry, will be able to secure a fair share of the funds, the bill provides that no loan may be made in excess of $500,000.

VETERANS' LEGISLATION

Under the authority given him by the economy act the President reduced veterans' benefits by some $400,000,000. This saving was accomplished by rerating veterans with service-connected disabilities, by removing presumptive cases from the rolls, by removing dependents of veterans with presumptive service-connected disabilities, by restricting hospitalization, and so on.

On June 6, 1933, following a wave of criticism over the harshness of his action, the President was obliged to liberalize his regulations to some extent, restoring approximately $50,000,000 in benefits, principally to widows and dependents and to veterans with service-connected disabilities. Under the act of June 16, 1933, Congress itself restored some $46,000,000 additional, and on January 19, 1934, the President restored another $21,000,000.

The last legislation with respect to veterans' benefits was in connection with the independent offices appropriation bill, which carries the funds for the Veterans' Administration. It will be remembered that this measure was vetoed by the President because, as he said, it went some $228,000,000 beyond his recommendations in restoring compensation to veterans and in returning part of the Federal pay cut.

His figure of $228,000,000 was made up of $125,000,000 for partial restoration of the Federal pay cut and $103,000,000 for veterans' benefits. Actually the cost of the pay-cut restoration was $63,000,000, while the increased cost of veterans' benefits over the restorations made under the President's regulations issued the day of his veto message was but $21,250,000.

The President's veto message was sent to Congress on March 27, 1934. At the same time he issued certain new regulations restoring benefits to veterans in the amount of $61,750,000. This amount must necessarily be subtracted from the amount carried in the independent offices appropriation bill, which was $83,000,000. The net cost of overriding the veto, therefore, at least so far as veterans' benefits were concerned, was but $21,250,000.

In spite of the restorations made to date, there is still a saving in force of $250,000,000 under the economy act. If Congress had not eased some of the drastic regulations issued by the President under that act, I feel sure that in a short time the mounting dissatisfaction and unrest among the veterans would have resulted in wiping out the whole saving.

PROCESSING TAX ON COCONUT OIL

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, on May 28, 1934, President Roosevelt addressed a message to Congress on the subject of the processing tax on coconut oil. Reference is made in that message to the Philippine Independence Act and the revenue act, which imposed the 3-cent per pound tax on coconut oil from the Philippines.

I now quote from the message:

It is, of course, wholly clear that the intent of the Congress by this provision—

Referring to the Independence Act-was to exempt from import duty 448,000,000 pounds of coconut oil from the Philippines.

The President further states as one of his reasons for his request for reconsideration by Congress of the provision for the processing tax that—

It is a withdrawal of an offer made by the Congress of the United States to the people of the Philippine Islands.

And his request for reconsideration of that provision of the revenue act contains the following language:

In order that the subject may be studied further between now and next January, and in order that the spirit and intent of the Independence Act be more closely followed.

Now, I have made a study of the Independence Act in its relation to the revenue act, and I fail to find where in any respect the Congress has committed itself to the policy of permitting 448,000,000 pounds of coconut oil entry into the United States without the payment of the tax. If any commitments were made by individuals, they could have no effect upon Congress. Congress itself, I hope, still retains the right to make its own commitments.

There are four distinct steps required before the Independence Act can be made effective and the new government established. First, a constitutional convention approves a constitution and submits it to the President of the United States within 2 years; second, if the President certifies that the constitution conforms with the provisions of the act, it is submitted within 4 months to the people of the Philippines for ratification; third, after the approval the Governor General shall within 30 days provide for an election of officers; fourth, when an election shall have been held the results are certified to the President of the United States, who shall then issue a proclamation announcing the results of the election. All of these things are required before the new government is established.

What is the situation in the meantime during these months while the machinery of the Independence Act is in motion? Does the act say that in this interim the United States Congress can pass no laws changing the trade relations with the Philippines? Well, let us see what the act provides. Section 6 reads as follows:

After the date of the inauguration of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands trade relations between the United States and the Philippine Islands shall be as now provided by law—

Subject to certain exceptions, among which is the one which exempts the 200,000 long tons of coconut oil. Note the language reads that after the date of the inauguration of the Philippine government, and not before. In other words, in the interim we have the right to impose this processing tax on coconut oil.

I want to live up to any promises we have made in Congress to the Philippines; I want to do justice to them, but I want to do justice at the same time to the American farmer. This tax, in my humble opinion, should not be disturbed.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my States. I hope that Mr. Green, president of the American remarks in the Record and to include therein excerpts from Federation of Labor, will assure the authorities of this city the President's message and likewise a statement from the revenue act of this year.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the request was made yesterday or not, but I am informed the Record does not show it if it was made. I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their own remarks on the housing bill which we passed yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

PROTECTION OF GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the late edition of the Washington Times last night advised us that union carpenters in Washington went out on strike May 1, for $1.37½ per hour; also that they voted down two different proposals of compromise made by the contractors, one for $1.25 per hour for a 40-hour week, and the other for $1.25 for a 32-hour week. It also advised us that the strikers would hold out for $1.37½ per hour.

The Times also advised that because a man named William A. Gray, working on the roof of a church, refused to quit work when they ordered him to do so, some of the strikers held him, while others beat him, and his nose was broken.

We also learned from the Times that a carpenter named T. J. Jackson, who refused to quit work when ordered, was beaten up by the strikers; also that a fire occurring in the Remington-Rand building under construction was reported to have been of incendiary origin; also that six strikers attacked a carpenter engaged in putting up laths, and fled in automobiles when police were summoned. The Times reports that all of the carpenters who were beaten were union carpenters, and had their union cards in their pockets, but had failed to obey the general strike order.

This morning's Washington Herald carried about the same news items I have mentioned, but adds that contractors advertise that they will pay any carpenter who is willing to work $1.10 per hour and a 40-hour week. The Herald also reports that W. L. Hutcheson, president of the International Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, said he—will not order carpenters to work for less than $1.371/2 per hour,

And further that-if contractors put men to work on the Government projects in Washington on a nonunion basis, I will call a Nation-wide strike on their projects everywhere.

The Herald also tells us that on the union demand for $1.37½ per hour, the contractors offered a compromise of $1.25 per hour on a 40-hour week, but the unions refused, saying, "We are determined to have all or nothing."

Under the big headlines "Police Guard United States Projects in Strike", the Herald tells us that a cordon of police was thrown around all of the many fine Government buildings now under construction in Washington. There was an all-night guard around the fine $10,000,000 Supreme Court Building, to prevent it from being burnt or blown up. Police guarded the new $10,000,000 Post Office Department Building. They were around the new Department of Justice Building. They were thrown around the new Archives Building. It was necessary to have special police guards to protect the property of this Government from sabotage right here in our Nation's Capital.

I think this is a reflection upon the thousands of honest men who belong to labor unions everywhere in the United States. I hope that Mr. Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, will assure the authorities of this city the public buildings in order to protect them from being demolished by union laborers in the Nation's Capital. I have members of labor unions in my district who are Knight Templar Masons, who are high officers in churches, who stand for law and order, and who would not countenance any such lawlessness and sabotage, and this disgraceful situation in Washington does them grave injustice.

I have many fine union carpenters, and painters, and paper hangers, and brick masons, and other artisans in my district who would be glad to get $7 and $8 per day, and some of whom have been without steady jobs for months, yet in Washington, on the $100,000,000 building construction which this Government has been carrying on during the past few years, carpenters and painters have been getting $10 and $12 per day right along, with continuous employment.

The carpenters and painters in my district would be glad to work for the $1.25 per hour on a 40-hour-per-week basis, which has been offered by the contractors here in compromise, but which the carpenters here have refused to accept.

There must be no lawlessness here in Washington by strikers who have refused $1.25 per hour for steady employment. There must be no burning of Government property. There must be no sabotage of any kind. Law and order must prevail. The Metropolitan Police Department must understand that it has charge of the situation here, that it must prevent sabotage, that it must prevent lawless attacks upon citizens, that it must prevent sabotage, that it must protect the property here from injury of every kind, and that it is to be held responsible for the peace and order of this Capital, and must take all steps necessary to see to it that law and order prevails.

I think it is a ridiculous situation that in the Nation's Capital we must guard American citizens, and guard Government property to prevent strikers, who have refused $1.25 per hour, from demolishing public property that belongs to the Government, when 10,000,000 heads of families have no jobs at all. On behalf of the law-abiding citizens of America, I am registering my protest against such a situation.

CRIMINAL CODE OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 8912) to amend section 35 of the Criminal Code of the United States, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 5, strike out all after "whoever" down to and including "stockholder", in line 11.

Page 2, line 18, after "entry" insert: ", in any matter within the jurisdiction of any department or agency of the United States or of any corporation in which the United States of America is a stockholder.'

Page 3, line 2, strike out "or any branch or department thereof."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

OPERATION OF THE HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION IN THE STATE OF VIRGINIA

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that on yesterday the House, in passing the housing bill, made provision for an increased amount of money to be used for the purposes of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

There is a branch office of this Federal agency located in my district, at Harrisonburg, Va., which has been functioning in a most efficient and satisfactory manner; in fact, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has proved to be a distinct success in the State of Virginia, and its operations have not only been of great benefit to thousands of home owners but also to other thousands of Virginians in various that it is no longer necessary for them to put police around | walks of life. Remembering the disappointing failure of the Home Loan Board under the previous administration, there was a feeling of doubt and uncertainty and considerable skepticism all over the State last July when the Home Owners' Loan Corporation began its organization for operations under the new act. The general public were inclined to believe that this might prove to be another disappointing experiment without any real benefit to the distressed home owners. However, it was not long before the people saw that this experiment was going to be genuinely successful and tremendously helpful.

> An able lawyer of Richmond, Mr. John J. Wicker, Jr., was appointed State manager, and in less than 1 month had perfected a splendid State-wide organization.

> According to Government figures, approximately $14,000,-000,000 in urban home mortgages were held by banks, insurance companies, and building and loan associations throughout America at the time the Corporation began operations. Approximately $81,000,000 of these mortgages were located in Virginia. In proportion to the total volume of mortgage loans refinanced by the Corporation throughout America up to May 25, 1934, the Virginia branch of the Corporation should have completed the refinancing of approximately $5,000,000 of these mortgages. Instead of doing that, however, the Virginia branch, by May 25, 1934, had actually made over 3,500 loans in all parts of Virginia, aggregating in volume over $11,000,000. Consequently it will be seen that the Virginia branch has made more than double the volume of loans which could normally have been expected. This is a record of which the people of Virginia are justly proud.

> Bankers and real-estate mortgage loan authorities agree that the operations of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in Virginia have been of benefit to the general mortgage loan situation throughout the State. In addition to refinancing distressed home mortgages which could not be financed elsewhere, an important by-product to the Corporation's operations has been the liberalization of credit on the part of commercial mortgage lending agencies to other home owners.

> Counties, cities, and towns of Virginia have experienced very direct benefit in the matter of delinquent taxes which have been paid by the Corporation as an incident to its refinancing of old mortgages. As of May 25, 1934, the Corporation had paid to the counties, cities, and towns of Virginia over $400,000 in cash to settle delinquent taxes, and the majority of these taxes had been delinquent for years and probably would not otherwise ever have been paid.

> Furthermore, over $200,000 has been paid out in cash throughout the State for building materials and for labor, both skilled and unskilled, in connection with the making of necessary repairs to the homes which have been saved by the Corporation.

> All of these good results have been obtained at exceedingly low cost. In fact, the entire overhead cost connected with these loans in Virginia has amounted to less than 2 percent of the total volume of loans.

> While the material benefits that the people of Virginia have derived from the Corporation's operations have been substantial, we are also conscious of the benefits that have accrued in the improvement of the spirit and mental outlook of the distressed home owners of Virginia. In over 3,500 small homes throughout our State today the fear and despair that formerly held sway have been dispelled and a spirit of confidence and gratitude exists. This new spirit can be typified best by a quotation from a letter written by a widow whose home was saved a few months ago by the Corporation. She wrote, in part, as follows:

> My husband served with the Twenty-ninth Division in France. My husband served with the Twenty-ninth Division in France. After the war we saved all we could and began the purchase of a little home. We paid all we could in cash and received a deed, subject to a first mortgage and a second mortgage. By monthly payments, we succeeded in paying off the second mortgage, but just as we were hoping to make a dent in the first mortgage my husband died and left me facing the world with three small children and a mortgage hanging over my head. Then the depression came on, and the mortgage holder demanded a curtail, which I could not possibly meet. Just as everything seemed hopeless, and the future was dark indeed, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation came along and saved our home. With the work that I do, I am confident that I can pay off the new loan in the small monthly installments that are called for. Words cannot express monthly installments that are called for. Words cannot express my gratitude, and you cannot imagine the joy I have in a brand-new outlook in life, which I now face with confidence.

With a new and deeper significance, she can tell her three small children that their father used to sing Keep the Home Fires Burning.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I received a letter from a friend enclosing a clipping from a newspaper, which reads as follows:

Jeffersen T. Baker, a Dallas lawyer, recently changed his name through court action to George B. Terrell and then filed his name as a candidate for State treasurer.

The Terrell name has long appeared in Texas politics; George B. Terrell now serving as Congressman at large and was formerly State commissioner of agriculture; C. V. Terrell is a member of the State railroad commission; H. B. Terrell, a brother of Green B. Terrell, was State commission; H. B. Terrell, a brother of GEORGE B. TERRELL, was State comptroller of public accounts and was later followed by his son, Sam Houston Terrell, as comptroller;
A. W. Terrell was a noted figure in earlier days and was author of the Terrell election law. In filing his ex parte proceedings last week to have his name changed, Mr. Baker said that he wanted his name changed to Terrell for business reasons. The tition was granted by Judge T. A. Work of the sixty-eighth district court.

If they had gone a little further back in the history of the Terrell family they would have found that my grandfather, George W. Terrell, was attorney general of Tennessee and also of Texas, and that he was Minister to England, France, and Spain during the days of the Republic of Texas to try to get those countries to recognize Texas as an independent republic. My grandfather was at the Court of St. James when Queen Victoria had just ascended the throne, and he was compelled to conform to court customs and had to wear knee pants. He brought back this cream-colored, flowered, silk suit with knee pants, and I remember that suit very well. It was very attractive, and the people all over the country would assemble there to look at this suit of

In conclusion, I want to say that I should like to see if there is some way for the wise men of the east, including the great White Chief on the throne, to establish a code under the N.R.A. which would naturally supersede all State laws and protect the people against crooks in politics as well as in business so that we can stop these lawyers from practicing such legal legerdemain to purloin a man's name for the sake of politics. If we are to have more Terrells in politics, they should be created according to the divine plan and not made by court decree. [Laughter and applause.]

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. Under the special order for today, it is in order to call Senate bills on the Private Calendar and Senate bills on the Speaker's table where similar House bills are on the Private Calendar, the call to begin at no. 629.

CONCRETE ENGINEERING CO.

The Clerk called Private Calendar No. 629, the bill (S. 1540) for the relief of the Concrete Engineering Co.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a bill which has been previously objected to on two separate occasions and I am very sorry to say I shall feel compelled to again object. I may say there have been a number of bills on the Private Calendar similar to this one and I think it has been the practice on both sides of the House, among those of us who have been given the duty of scrutinizing these bills, to object to bills of this character, and I see no reason to make any exception in the case of this particular bill.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HOPE. Yes. Mr. BLACK. There have been some bills in an analogous situation to this that have been passed by the House during | ury of the United States $4,300. It had a total of 22 ship-this session. I have a list of them, but I do not have it with me now.

I have always thought that under ordinary circumstances these bills should properly go to the Ways and Means Committee, but the Ways and Means Committee has had so much of the big policy legislation and general legislation it just could not handle these small claims based on tax situations and our committee has had to handle them. We have studied them very carefully and have not given approval to any one of them unless we thought it was absolutely justified. and I was rather hopeful the gentleman would not take a position against this bill simply because it is in a class with other bills, when similar bills have been passed. I can assure the gentleman that other bills bearing on taxes have passed the House. This is just a burden on our committee and we do not like it any more than the gentleman does. They should not come to us, but we have had to take on the work, that is all.

Mr. HOPE. I may say to the gentleman that bills of this character may have passed the House during this session, as the gentleman says-and undoubtedly they have passed, if he says so. However, I know I have objected to some bills of this same character and others have made a similar objection and, personally, I do not feel I could conscientiously withdraw the objection which I have made to the bill, as much as I should like to do so.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I will.

Mr. BLACK. I thought the gentleman objected to this bill because it fell within a class of cases, and that the gentleman has no objection to the bill on its own merits. I tried to point out that other bills of that character on the calendar had passed, and I thought it rather unfair to object to a bill, if it is objected to, on the ground that it is in a certain class.

Mr. HOPE. Perhaps I have not made myself clear. I do object to the bill on its merits. I also made a statement which I know is true, that many similar bills on the calendar have been objected to.

Mr. BLACK. That is true. Mr. HOPE. I think this is hardly the proper time to change the policy on the part of those who have been studying these bills.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The objectors to these bills do not claim that they are infallible. I think the real principle involved is that no one man should hold up all the bills because there has been an objection to his bill. Under those circumstances a Member could force any bill through the House.

Mr. BLACK. I agree with the gentleman that no Member should be able to force a bill through with the power of objection to pass bills. But if the gentleman feels that his bill has been objected to simply because it falls within a certain class and not on its merits, he has the right to resort to any parliamentary device to protect himself.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is this bill of sufficient dignity so that it could be passed under suspension of the rules, and thus obviate this difficulty?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. This bill is an attempt to get a refund on a certain number of carloads of cement. They made a claim for 17 carloads, and the attorney neglected to make the claim for 5 others. The statute of limitations has long

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman from Kansas reserve his objection and let the introducer of the bill make a state-

Mr. HOPE. I shall be glad to.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to inject myself into this matter, but I am requested to explain the bill, and will gladly do so.

A firm in my city of Houston, Tex., overpaid to the Treas-structed the Government warehouse agent, who is a certified Government official, to file a protest on the entire 22 ship-

The Concrete Engineering Co. that made the shipment made the payments under section 304 of the Tariff Act of 1922, as required, and instructed the warehouse agent to file a protest in 22 cases, on the ground that the tariff should be paid under section 312 of the Tariff Act of 1922. There is in the Senate report, and it is in the House report, an affidavit by the agent that he did file a protest on excessive charges in 17 instances out of 22 total instances.

In each instance the excess payment was refunded. By clerical error, within the 60-day period of time in which to file a protest the warehousing agent neglected, solely on account of a clerical error and through no fault of the Concrete Engineering Co. who had instructed him to file protest also of the five additional cases, to file within that period. The Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mills, in the year 1932, by a report sent to the Senate committee, and now printed in the House report of this committee, certifies that the Treasury of the United States erred in holding that these people should have paid under section 304, and that they were right in claiming that they should pay under section 312, and, therefore, that the Treasury has now an excess of $4,300 above what the Treasury should have. There is no question of the excess payment, there is no question of the effort of those who were required excessively to pay, to have it protested within the 60-day period of time. The Senate committee so found and unanimously reported. The Senate unanimously passed the bill. The House committee unanimously so reported. It is upon this calendar. There is no question involved whatever that it is right for these people to receive payment back of the sum of $4,300, which they were required to pay currently from the year 1926 to the year 1927 for deformed iron bars used in the making of concrete buildings. These claimants have acted in good faith. This is a just claim. The only reason that could possibly be advanced why this bill should not instantly pass this body is that within the 60-day period required by article 514 of the Tariff Act of 1922, no formal written protest was filed with the collector of the port, and with the lower Court of Customs Claims protesting the excess payment. That is explained by the fact that while those who made the payment instructed the only persons they could, to wit, their Government-certified warehousing agents, to make the protest, as they did in the other 17 instances wherein they made a protest, those agents neglected, through a clerical error, within the 60-day period of time to do it. This is an honest claim, and if the Private Calendar is a calendar for gentlemen to deal with at all, it ought to be paid. The Senate has passed it, and I hope that the House will not object to at least its consideration. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman think that even though he has a just claim and that it unjustly is objected to, he is doing the gentlemanly and fair thing to object arbitrarily to every bill that comes up regardless of its merits? That is the gentleman's repeated threat.

Mr. EAGLE. I will ask the gentleman to pardon me any reply to that inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I have taken into consideration everything that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Eagle] has said in connection with this claim. It came up in this way-over a dispute under which section of the tariff act duties were to be paid on these particular imports. Under the law an importer has a right to file a claim within 60 days and have it considered by the Customs Court which will decide under which section the duty should be paid. In this particular case there were 22 shipments and in 17 of them there was filed a claim within the prescribed statutory time and the matter came before the Customs Court and that court decided in favor of the claimant in the case, to the effect that the duty should ments. It paid the tariff upon 22 shipments. They in- | be paid at the lower rate. The other five claims could have been filed, but they were not filed through some error or neglect of the claimant. The statute is very specific in that regard. The claimant does not have any rights here except those that the statute gives him, and having failed to take advantage of the time within which the claims must be filed, he has no inherent rights here which he can come before the Congress of the United States and ask to have adjudicated. There are thousands of similar cases, where duties have been paid under the wrong law, perhaps, and thousands of cases where the parties did not know their rights, cases where the parties were not a large corporation with the benefit of the best legal talent in the country, as was the case here, and in none of those cases do those parties have or claim any right to a refund of duty.

There was no neglect or fault upon the part of the United States in this case. The sole fault was on the part of this company and its agents, and in view of the fact that we have objected to many more meritorious claims for refunds during this session and other sessions of Congress, in view of the further fact that there are no charges of any kind here that this neglect is due to the act of any agent or employee of the Government of the United States, I fail to see where the claim is one that is just and valid and one which should be passed by this Congress.

There may be many here who will disagree with me in that opinion, but that is the view I have reached after giving careful study to all the facts in the case.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. COX. The gentleman states that this condition is the result of no wrong committed by the Government. Was not the Government wrong in assessing a tax under the wrong provision of the act of 1922, and may I ask the gentleman the further question, Has the Treasury $4,300 of a citizen's money that it is not entitled to or would not have been entitled to if it had applied the right provision of the law?

Mr. HOPE. Answering the gentleman's first question, the Government of the United States and this company entered into a dispute. There was a question between them as to just which law applied. It was purely a question of law. There was no question of fact involved. Under the provision of law, if a party makes a claim within a certain period, 60 days in this case, he is entitled to have that question of law decided in the particular case in which he makes application for refund.

Mr. COX. But the same question was decided in other cases that are identical, where an adjustment was made. Now, does the gentleman contend that under the application of the proper provisions of the tariff act the Government is entitled to this $4,300? If it is not, then how in good conscience can the Government refuse to return it?

Mr. HOPE. There was no charge made here that that assessment was made in bad faith by the Government or that there was any wrongful intent on the part of the Government of the United States to collect excessive customs duty. There was simply a question of law involved. Mr. COX. No intent to commit a wrong, but the actual commission of a wrong in doing what the Government thought was the proper thing to do.

Mr. HOPE. Of course, if that is true, there are probably thousands and thousands of cases where a wrong rate of duty has been charged, for which citizens have no redress. There is no way that they can come in except by asking Congress to pass legislation, yet I do not believe the gentleman should contend that we should pass blanket legislation here today to do away with all the requirements that private claims must be filed within certain periods of time, and doing away with all statutes of limitation. That is what we are asked to do in one specific case today. If we are going to do it in one case, we ought to do it in all cases.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. But did the injustice to these claimants result in any way from any fault on the part of the Government? If so, I think the gentleman's claim would be in a different category than if he found himself in this predicament as the result of his own negligence.

Mr. HOPE. In this case it was the result of his own negligence, because if he had filed his claim as he filed the other 17 claims he would have had a refund.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am trying to effect a fair adjustment, if possible. I think if the Government, through its negligence, in any way caused these people to suffer this loss, they are to blame and the Government ought to make amends.

Mr. COX. Did not the Customs Court of Appeals hold that the wrong law was applied?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not know anything about the

Mr. COX. That is what the court holds.

Mr. EAGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield. Mr. EAGLE. It is perfectly certain that the Government did nothing wrong. It is perfectly certain that good faith has been observed, even here, this day. It is perfectly certain, however, that the instructions issued by the Treasury Department to the Internal Revenue Department were to assess this tax under section 304 of the Revenue Act of 1922. In perfect good faith they thought that was the section under which to assess it. In perfect good faith the Concrete Engineering Co. thought it should be assessed under section 312. In perfect good faith they instructed their Government-certified warehousing agent to protest this payment under section 304 and to insist upon its payment under section 312, currently, at the time of the payment, with reference to the entire 22 items. That agent on whom these claimants had to rely, performed his duty with reference to 17 of those 22 items, and the Treasury, in perfect good faith, promptly refunded the excess payment. But the Treasury had no legal authority to refund payment as to the other five, because within the 60-day period after the time provided by section 514 of the Revenue Act of 1922, no written protest was filed, although the claimant had instructed its filing, had known of the excess payment, had relied upon this very Government certified warehousing agent to make the filing, and that Government certified warehousing agent certifies that by virtue of a clerical error alone in his office, did he fail to file it. For that reason I respectfully submit to your consideration whether this claim is not entirely out of that proper category so ably and so conscientiously mentioned by the gentleman from Kansas, of those who, either ignorant of their rights to protect themselves in case of excess payment, failed to protest, or of those who, indifferent to it, failed to protest, because these people in every step did everything except that the Government agent they employed to do this, by clerical error, failed to do it. That is all I can say and all I care to say.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

Mr. HOPE. Will the gentleman withhold that a moment? I wish to ask the gentleman from Texas a question.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I will withhold it for the time being. Mr. HOPE. I understood the gentleman to say that a Government certifying agent failed to perform his duty in filing these claims within the proper time.

Mr. EAGLE. That is what I understand.

Mr. HOPE. Does the gentleman contend that this man, E. Ash, was an employee of the Government of the United States and that he was instructed to file these claims on behalf of this corporation?

Mr. EAGLE. I will answer the twofold question by this statement, that I am not for the moment familiar with just what the legal requirement or function of a certified warehousing agent is such as this man Ash was at the time, whether an employee of the Internal Revenue Department or whether a mere licensee authorized to file protests and perform such duties. Therefore, as to the first subdivision of the question, I cannot answer.

Mr. HOPE. Right there, does not the gentleman think that is an important question? If this man as an employee of the United States and acting in the capacity of his employment, agreed that he would accept these protests, or if he agreed to file them even though he had no authority, I think the gentleman would have a very much stronger case than otherwise.

Mr. EAGLE. Anxious as I am to see what I think should be done here, I would rather lose my case in court than to assure, without full knowledge, that he was acting on behalf of the Government while being such warehousing certified agent. I cannot, therefore, assure the gentleman of that legal distinction. I do not know and cannot answer.

Mr. HOPE. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in this report this party is referred to as the broker for the Concrete Engineering Co.

Mr. EAGLE. That is the trade title. They do not say in the report that a person is a certified warehousing agent, they say "the broker"; but his official title was certified warehousing agent authorized to appear for others before Government boards having to do with the collection of tariffs at ports.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And his action was accepted in the other 17 cases?

Mr. EAGLE. Yes; and accepted by the United States Customs Court to which they brought the 17 other refund claims, and accepted by the Court of Customs Appeals.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I think, from the gentleman's statement, that his strongest point is that officials all the way through acted in good faith.

Mr. EAGLE. In perfect good faith; and the other five cases would have been allowed had this broker, in the slang, or certified warehousing agent, in the language of the statute, not omitted clerically to present these other five instances.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And this action by the House is necessary to correct an honest mistake.

Mr. EAGLE. Absolutely.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the Government made an honest mistake.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over for the time being.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I object to that. I object to the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Would it be in order to move to suspend the rules and pass Senate bill 1540?

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SNELL. Will suspensions be in order during the consideration of Private Calendar bills?

The SPEAKER. They will not.

Mr. SNELL. The purpose of the inquiry was to know whether others interested in the bills to be called up under suspension should be here during the consideration of the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. There will be suspensions later this afternoon, but not during the call of the Private Calendar.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2139, for the relief of the Western Union Telegraph Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EAGLE. There is objection, Mr. Speaker. I think the Private Calendar is a failure when justice cannot be done, when one man can do what has been done in this case.

CONTAINERS OF DISTILLED SPIRITS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 370, to protect the revenue by regulation of the traffic in containers of distilled spirits.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Has the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Doughton] asked for suspension of the rules?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass House Joint Resolution 370, to protect the revenue by regulation of the traffic in containers of distilled spirits.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

House Joint Resolution 370

Resolved, etc., That whenever in his judgment such action is Resolved, etc., That whenever in his judgment such action is necessary to protect the revenue, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, by the regulations prescribed by him, and permits issued thereunder if required by him (1) to regulate the size, branding, marking, sale, resale, possession, use, and reuse, of containers (of a capacity of less than 5 wine-gallons) designed or intended for use for the sale at retail of distilled spirits (within the meaning of such term as it is used in title II of the Liquor Taxing Act of 1934) for other than industrial use, and (2) to require of persons manufacturing dealing in or using any such require, of persons manufacturing, dealing in, or using any such containers, the submission to such inspection, the keeping of such records, and the filing of such reports as may be deemed by him reasonably necessary in connection therewith. Whoever willfully violates the provisions of any regulation prescribed, or the terms or conditions of any permit issued, pursuant to the authorization contained in this joint resolution, and any officer, director, or agent of any corporation who knowingly participates in such violaagent of any corporation who knowingly participates in such violation, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $1,000 or be imprisoned for not more than 2 years, or both; and, notwithstanding any criminal conviction, the containers involved in such violation shall be forfeited to the United States, and may be seized and condemned by like proceedings as those provided by law for forfeitures, seizures, and condemnations for violations of the internal-revenue laws, and any such containers so seized and condemned shall be destroyed and not sold. Any requirements imposed under this joint resolution shall be in addition to any other requirements imposed by or pursuant to, existing law, and shall requirements imposed by, or pursuant to, existing law, and shall apply as well to persons not liable for tax under the internal-revenue laws as to persons so liable.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the resolu-

Mr. CELLER. I am opposed to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, this resolution was proposed and is urged by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Alcohol Control Administration; in other words, those in control of the enforcement of the law relating to the manufacture and sale of liquor. It is designed to give the Government closer surveillance and control over the manufacture and distribution of bottles and other containers in which distilled liquors are contained and distributed.

This resolution has the unanimous support of the Committee on Ways and Means, and was unanimously reported.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that two of the greatest evils that afflict this country are moonshining and bootlegging, and that nothing is more essential to the protection of society, law, and order than the suppression of the illicit liquor traffic. This bill is designed to accomplish that purpose. It has been found that the illicit manufacturers and purveyors of liquor, the moonshiner and bootlegger, resort to the device of using the same standard containers as used by legitimate distilleries. Those engaged in the illegitimate industry take advantage of these containers and they get the same containers or containers with the same brand and

The SPEAKER. It is evident we cannot proceed with | lettered in the same way as the manufacturers of the standard brands of legitimate liquor.

> The Alcohol Control Administration and the Treasury Department state that this legislation is absolutely necessary in the enforcement of the law and for the protection of the revenues of the Government. One of the prime reasons for the legislation is for the protection of the revenues of the Government, because every gallon of illicit or illegal liquor that is sold robs the Government of that much revenue. I cannot see why there should be any objection to this legislation

> Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Ten-

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I am sure the gentleman will recall that the situation that is sought to be met and remedied by this measure and certain other measures that have been recommended by the Treasury Department and the administration is a very bad one. This and other measures to which I have made reference are requested and urged by the Treasury Department and the administration to save what they estimate to be about $50,000,000 of revenue that is now being lost. Through the operation of this measure and other similar measures recommended by them the Treasury Department will save this enormous amount of

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman from Tennessee has made a correct statement, and I thank him for his very pertinent observation. May I say to the Members of the House that if we are not to give consideration to the suggestions, recommendations, and earnest requests of those who are in charge of the enforcement of the law and the protection of the revenues of the Government, then I do not know to whom we should look or can look for correct information.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, it is with great reluctance that I offer any kind of opposition to this resolution. I have great respect for the gentlemen on the Ways and Means Committee, including the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Doughton], the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Cooper], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cullen]. I assure you it is with a great deal of hesitation that I offer this opposition. It is with reluctance that I offer an objection to anything that the eminent Secretary of the Treasury recommends to this House, but I believe it is incumbent upon us in the pursuance of our oaths of office, regardless of the toes we may tread upon when necessary, to offer constructive criticism. It is our duty to object when we have a conscientious reason for objecting, and I hope that the gentlemen whose names I have mentioned will not deem my opposition personal. I make objection whole-heartedly and with all sincerity.

I do not believe that there is a scintilla of evidence anywhere that this resolution will accomplish the purposes which have been very briefly outlined by the esteemed Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Doughton]. It will be a vainglorious and abortive effort to protect the revenue and to do away with moonshining and bootlegging. It will have no such effect whatsoever. This resolution is highly drastic and should not be brought up at the very end of the session without an adequate explanation of its provisions.

As I understand it, there was no hearing before the Ways and Means Committee. Although I am not certain, I think it was the result of a communication received from the Secretary of the Treasury that he wanted this legislation. We should not slavishly, willy-nilly, ipso facto, abide by such wishes without fathoming and probing and going into carefully the propositions involved in the bill.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. Cullen], for whom I have the greatest regard, has simply repeated the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina that this bill will eliminate bootlegging, but nobody can tell me how it will do it or that it will do it successfully. We have bootlegging, we have moonshining, we have illicit manufacture, and we have illicit sale of alcoholic beverages. We have always had a degree of it and you must remember that repeal is only 6 months old. Let the industry attempt to govern itself without any undue interference. There is too much governmental interference. The industry, if let alone, will curb itself and free itself in time of some of its present evils. The liquor traffic changes daily. We do not know what permanent form it will take. Let more time elapse. Let adequate study be made and then legislate. It is too early for permanent legislation of this character.

Remember that the Democratic platform provided in no uncertain terms that this industry and the control and regulation thereof should be relegated back to the States. It should be a matter of State control. We have codes which give the Federal Government a modicum of control over the industry, but this is by consent of the industry—the consent of the distillers, rectifiers, wholesalers, retailers, and all those who deal in alcoholic beverages. Now they come forward with a bill replete with coercion and drastic penal provisions. Do you not know that the more burdens you place upon the legal trader the more comfort you give to the bootlegger? He does not have to satisfy the regulations. He is too slick. He avoids them. Merely passing laws will not catch the bootlegger. Enforcement will. But, as usual, there will not be enforcement.

There is a provision here which provides for permits. You may remember that under the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act there was provision made for the permissive use of alcoholic beverages and distilled spirits of all kinds for various purposes. Most of the evils, most of the graft, most of the chicanery and deceit and hypocrisy emanated from these permits. The inspectors who went into the highways and byways of the country, marauding, as it were, brigands, as it were, fliching from the permittees all manner and kind of filthy lucre in the form of grafts for special privileges and immunity from prosecution.

Now, are you going to have a recrudescence of that? That is what you provide here and you do it in a very unusual way. Why is it necessary to include a permit provision—a permit provision that covers all types of liquor dealers?

The Secretary of the Treasury is permitted by regulations to prescribe permits to regulate the size, branding, marking, sale, resale, possession, use, and reuse of containers designed for sale of distilled spirits at retail. This means that the Secretary of the Treasury could issue a permit for trading to every little tavern keeper, hotel keeper, or retailer. Why was the bill not devised so as to limit these permits to manufacturers and distillers and traders in these spurious bottles or the bottles that are used and reused for bootlegging? It would have been a simple matter to redraft this bill so that there would have been no need for the provision for the issuance of permits or the power to issue permits to all liquor dealers who are already possessed to what is known as the "occupational tax certificates." No man can trade in liquors, be he wholesaler or retailer, properietor of a beer garden or a tavern or a hotel, unless and until he obtains an occupational tax certificate. The Secretary of the Treasury would have the right of visitation upon the premises of the holders of these occupational tax certificates. His inspectors could easily determine by search whether or not these dealers were possessed of this spurious bottles or bottles which are banned. In other words, the statute is entirely too broad. That is the gravamen of my opposition. As the statute now reads, some poor little devil of a dealer might purchase a case of liquor from a wholesaler in perfect innocence. Subsequently, it is developed that the bottles are spurious or imitative of the original. An inspector could pounce down upon him under the terms of the bill, have him fined $1,000 or sent to jail for 2 years.

Drastic bills of this character never get us anywhere. I recall distinctly the vigorous opposition to the Jones-Stalker bill, often called the "5-and-10 bill", prescribing penalties from 5 to 10 years for liquor violations. This bill provided for the ridiculous branding of the violator as a felon. The bill was so drastic that it got nowhere. There were few convictions under it.

The F.A.C.A., namely, the "Federal Alcohol Control Administration", already has the power under codes to determine the proper use of bottles and to preclude and prevent improper use. It determines standard of fill. There are many statutes empowering the Department of Agriculture through its Pure Food and Drug Division, to prosecute for misbranding. This bill is aimed at misbranding. Why should not the Department of Agriculture under present statutes take the culprits by the nape of the neck and punish them? Furthermore, there are many civil remedies. Dealers and rectifiers can secure injunctions and prosecute for infringement of their packages. There is therefore no need for the bill—especially since it is so broad in delegation of power to the Secretary of the Treasury and so drastic.

I say to you that aside from the constitutionality of this provision-and it is unconstitutional and I shall give you the reasons therefor in a moment—you buy a pig in a poke. You legislate blindly here. You give carte blanche, you give the fullest authority, to the Secretary of the Treasury to make any kind of regulations he wishes. I would not mind if you stopped with regulations for the purpose of controlling the branding, the size, the marking, the sale and resale, possession and repossession, use and reuse of containers used and designed for distilled spirits. If you would stop there I would not object, but what do you do further? You provide that for any violation, be it consequential or inconsequential, be it important or unimportant, there is prescribed, not for a violation of law, not for a violation of statute, but for a violation of a regulation made by the executive branch of the Government, these extreme penalties: $1,000 or to imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both.

This is what I object to. That is very serious.

Reference has been made to my bill pending before the Ways and Means Committee to re-codify all liquor internal revenue laws. I am accused of encouraging more Federal control of liquor thereby. No; the gentleman has not read my bill, and I do not depart one iota from the proposition of leaving, as much as possible, this industry to the States, save when it comes to the matter of protection of the revenues or the matter of interstate commerce. The bill I introduced had an entirely different purpose. It was to bring up to date all the internal revenue statutes—statutes of a purely revenue character that go back to the Civil War days.

It was to recodify the old statutes, which go back to the time of the Civil War. Incidentally, we passed a portion of that bill last week with reference to distance between distilleries and rectifying plants. At the suggestion of the Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] took a part of my bill, had it referred to your committee and you passed it by unanimous consent. I happen to be acquainted with the subject matter. I have given it mature study; otherwise the House and the Committee on Ways and Means would not have accepted the bill without opposition. My credo is keep the Government out of the liquor business, especially in the beginning. Here you are putting the Government into it and placing in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury this enormous power. If you will amend the bill and define definitely what you mean by a violation, so that the country can know what the violation is, I have no objection. But here you give the Secretary the right to make any kind of a regulation he sees fit, and the violation of a mere regulation carries a penalty of 2 years in jail and a thousand dollars fine or both. The citizenry cannot know what the regulation is to be. Yet you provide severe penalties for a violation of a regulation to be issued in the future.

As to the constitutionality of this bill, I have my grave doubts. It is certainly a delegation of legislative powers to an administrative officer. There is no limitation upon the delegation of the powers. Presumably, to protect the revenue, the Secretary of the Treasury can do the regulating concerning these containers. We are not told how he is to regulate. There is no limitation upon his authority. He can regulate any way he sees fit. There is no standard or criterion by which he should act. There is no rule or guide for | him to follow

I should gladly insert cases from the Federal courts to support my contention if I had time. This bill came up suddenly, without warning. I am therefore compelled to give a "horseback" opinion. If time would permit I could muster up a host of decisions to show the unconstitutionality of this statute.

You can pass all the statutes of this type and you will never get rid of the bootleggers, but if you have the proper enforcement, if you have sufficient experienced officers, properly trained, conscientious in the performance of their duty, you might succeed. But where will you get these men? Also you will need thousands and thousands of them.

But there is another question that I must address myself The statutes will not destroy the bootlegger. might help the manufacturer of bottles. It plays into their hands. The bill probably is the result of the bottle-makers'

Let me read you a report from the interdepartmental committee, composed of very eminent gentlemen. I understand it was presided over by a representative of the Secretary of the Treasury, who took the position that I take.

These were the men composing the interdepartmental committee:

Edward G. Lowry, special assistant to the Secretary, Treasury Department; J. M. Doran, Commissioner of Industrial Alcohol, Treasury Department; D. Spencer Bliss, head of the Sales Tax Division, Miscellaneous Tax Unit, Bureau of Internal Revenue, Treasury Department; J. D. Nevius, general counsel, Customs, Treasury Department; Herbert Feis, economic adviser of the State Department; John C. Wilen, counselor of embassy; Harry L. Lourie, chief economic analyst, Tariff Commission; South Trimble, Jr., Solicitor of the Department of Commerce; Willard L. Thorp, Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department, Department of Commerce, Department, Department of Commerce, Department of Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce; W. A. Tarver, chief counsel Division of Investigation, Department of Justice (unit of prohibition); Harris E. Willingham, chief beverages section, Agricultural Adjustment Administration, Department of Agriculture.

Here is what they say:

The assurance by tax adjustment and other means of an adequate supply of inexpensive legal alcoholic beverages which will be able to drive out the illegal competing production by price competition.

The attempts to control this illegal industry solely by policing the production and sale of illegal alcoholic beverages have not been wholly satisfactory. The enforcement problems of the prohibition period will still remain in those States which continue to be dry after the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. It is believed that the price of legal liquor to the ultimate consumer in the post-prohibition period will be one of the important factors in determining the success or failure of the general effort to eliminate the illegal industry. This competitive factor, of course, will only operate in those States which permit the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages. of alcoholic beverages.

Moreover, the prices which will determine the issue will be the prices of the basic alcoholic beverages already referred to in this report. Unless the price of the more expensive domestic and imported spirits and wines is made unreasonably high by excessive taxation it is not believed that trade in illegal imitations or smuggling of the genuine product will be substantial.

The comparative prices at which legal and illegal basic alcoholic beverages can be supplied to legal and illegal retail dealers would indicate that the legal industry will be able to carry a substantial tax burden and still meet the competition of the illegal industry if it is willing to forego excessive profits (chart no. 11). Price if it is willing to forego excessive profits (chart no. 11). Price estimates in this chart for legal alcoholic beverages were obtained from available statistics of the Tariff Commission; price estimates for the illegal alcoholic beverages are based on estimates made for the Rockefeller report.

Chart No. 11.—Estimated comparative cost to retail dealers of legal and illegal alcoholic liquors in bottles

	Price to retailer per gallon	Price to local boot- legger per gallon	Price to organized illegal trade per gallon
Beer	$0.56	$0. 64	$0.72
	1.00	1, 20	2.20

Chart no. 11 divides the prices of illegal liquor to the retailer into two categories; that is, prices to the local bootlegger and prices to the organized illegal industry. Prices to the local bootlegger are not considered of primary social significance on the ground that the small illegal liquor peddler does not carry with him the evils of organized crime. In any event, if the estimates here used

are reasonably accurate, there would appear to be little possibility that the legitimate industry can compete on a straight price basis with his activities.

For the purposes of this report, therefore, the prices of illegal liquor which will be considered will be the prices to the organized illegal industry. It will be noted that these prices are materially higher than prices to the local bootlegger. The explanation would appear to be that the former price represents large-scale operations requiring a large overhead for protection, organized violence, etc.

In measuring the competition between the legal and the illegal liquor industries other factors beside competitive prices must be considered. (a) The illegal industry must make a substantially higher gross and net profit on its sales than the legal industry. If it does not, it will not be profitable to run the risks involved. (b) As between legal and illegal products of substantially similar price the buying public will have greater confidence in and will prefer to buy the legal product.

It seems reasonable to suppose that a more drastic price competition by the legal industry will be necessary in the earlier post-prohibition period while the illegal industry is still organized and well financed. It would probably require considerably higher prices to revive a defeated illegal industry than it would to keep a well-entrenched one in business. This price competition could be facilitated by keeping the tax burden on legal alcoholic beverages comparatively low in the earlier post-prohibition period in order to permit the legal industry to offer more severe competition to its illegal competitor. When that competitor has been driven from business the tax burden could be gradually increased. Investigators for the Rockefeller report estimate that it will require 3 years of such competition to break the organization of the legal industry, which must be persuaded to resist the desire to demand high prices and large profits in the post-repeal market.

To have the assur

industry as a whole shall accept a reasonable margin of profit and not take advantage of the prospective keen demand by exacting high prices from the ultimate consumer. There is reason to believe that the producers of the various types of alcoholic beverages will be able to control in large measure the prices charged by wholesalers and retailers and thus to control the price of alcoholic wholesalers and retailers and thus to control the price of alcoholic beverages to the ultimate consumer.

Representatives of the legal industry have indicated that the legal industry, particularly the producers of distilled spirits, intend to use this power to maintain price levels which will eliminate an important and unscrupulous competitor. On the other hand it is not altogether unlikely that keen popular demand, limited supply, and the temptation of sudden profits will cause unreasonably high prices in the initial post-repeal market. Any such period of price dislocation, however, would probably be comparatively short. Competition fostered by potential production capacity and a reasonably liberal import policy should shortly correct any temporary evils which may occur.

In other words there are certain factors that must be considered. This bill disregards these factors. You can only rid the country of bootlegging and illicit traffic by: First, lower tariffs; second, lower excise taxes, and third, a plentiful supply of wholesome whisky at reasonable prices. There is a duty, therefore, in addition to our duty of decreasing tariffs and taxes of manufacturers and distillers. to give us wholesome liquor at fair prices. I believe the reputable distillers are doing their best in this regard. There are, however, some disreputable ones that are profiteering and are not cooperating with the Government, therefore, in its endeavor to stamp out the illicit-liquor industry. There is a great temptation to make huge profits, particularly in the beginning. This causes high prices against which the bootlegger can easily compete.

In other words, this is an economic proposition. You can pass all the statutes you want. If the price that the bootlegger sells his ware for is a price cheaper than the price offered by the legitimate trader, the people will buy from the bootlegger. That is the situation in New York; it is the situation in every town. It is an economic proposition.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Would it not be a great help if at this time we would suspend some of the tariff being charged?

Mr. CELLER. I am coming to that. The interdepartmental committee recommended and said that you could not bring about the result that the Ways and Means Committee seeks to achieve except by this method, namely, to reduce the tariff and to reduce the revenue and to hold the distillers in line and have them sell at reasonable prices.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman's remarks should be confined to the bill under discussion.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, this bill pertains to liquor, | and I do not think the mere fact that the gentleman is talking about another way of preventing some of the evils that the bill seeks to correct is out of order.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The bill comes up under suspension, and it does not permit of amendment.

Mr. CELLER. I am not offering any amendment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Under suspension there are no rules of the House that a man must speak to the bill. That of itself destroys the gentleman's point of order.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman wants to conduct a filibuster, well and good.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York will proceed in order.

Mr. CELLER. I assure the gentleman from Kentucky that I do not desire to conduct any filibuster, and am not. I shall probably conclude my remarks in a very short time. If we can be assured by those who manufacture liquor that they will give us a cheap and yet wholesome whisky, we will go a great way toward wiping out bootlegging. Many distillers are doing all they can to help, but there has been some profiteering on the part of some manufacturers. My position is exactly that taken by all these experts called the "interdepartmental committee." I say experts advisedly, because they are experts from the State Department, from the Department of Justice, from the Department of Commerce, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I have a good deal of sympathy with the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Celler] about the setting up of penalties and making actual statutes out of regulations issued by the Department officials. I think it is the wrong method of procedure, but we are facing a situation here that has developed since prohibition was repealed. The situation is this: The recommendations that are coming to Congress at the present time, are the results of the experience that the Department is having in their efforts to overcome bootlegging. I do not believe in this rapid legislation or finalday legislation. Nevertheless the situation is so apparent that as a result of the experience that is being had in the Treasury and in the Internal Revenue Bureau, the officials have asked for certain drastic rights and this bill contains one of them. It is the permission of the Department to control the containers in which legal liquor can be dispensed. That is a perfectly fair and right effort. They are trying to prevent bootlegging. I have no doubt the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] is as much interested in it as is the Department, but the Department is acting from their experience, whereas the gentleman from New York has offered certain criticisms based on his knowledge of law. I would rather, for the time being, try to accomplish something toward overcoming the evils of bootlegging, by regulation, if necessary, based upon statute to be carried out by the department having the administration of the law.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. I notice, for example, this gives the Secretary of the Treasury the right to regulate the sale and resale. That would mean he would have the right to control prices.

Mr. TREADWAY. All this has to do with the container; not the article itself; not the contents of the bottle.

Mr. CELLER. For example, I would not object to this bill if it only covered those who sell bottles, but this covers everybody who deals in bottles, regardless of what is in the bottles.

Mr. TREADWAY. That might be true, but the intent is to reach the container in which the illicit beverage is contained. Now, the experience of the Department shows that bottles are resold. For instance, I understand there is a brand of pretty good liquor known as "Old Taylor." An empty bottle with the name "Old Taylor" blown in it could very well be refilled by a bootlegger and disposed of to my friend from New York [Mr. CELLER] or others. This is an effort to overcome that situation. Therefore, I think the gentleman ought to go along with us and agree that, for the time being at least, some kind of regulatory power must be given the Treasury Department in order to overcome that situation. There is no end of bottles marked, as the gentleman knows-not from practical experience, perhaps, but the gentleman can go down the street anywhere today and see in windows names blown into bottles, so-called "trade marks." I think the Department ought to have some power by which it can prevent that bottle, when emptied by the rightful purchaser—not the gentleman from New York. of course, but there are certain gentlemen who would help empty it, I have no doubt-whoever he might be, say Mr. "X" or John Doe-I think the Department ought to have authority to prevent bootleg liquor being put back into that bottle and sold to us innocent patrons, especially when that name is blown in the bottle. That is exactly what we are accomplishing by this bill.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREAD-

Mr. HOEPPEL. Is it not possible for us to eliminate or at least reduce the number of bootleggers by lowering the tax on liquor?

Mr. TREADWAY. I agree; yes.

Mr. HOEPPEL. And also see that our distillers make as good whisky as does the bootlegger.

Mr. TREADWAY. Now, the tax question is another problem that we must face some day, and that is the answer to the question which the gentleman from New York raised about the departmental committee. The departmental committee brought in its recommendation as to tax and tariff rates before prohibition became effective. I am confident from information I have that there will be an effort on the part of the Administration to reduce taxes on liquor in order to aid in this method of beating the bootlegger. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. I agree that the situation to which the gentleman adverted, with reference to the Old Taylor, should be covered, but why do you go so far as to require permits to be issued to every dealer, whether he limits his sale and dealings to containers or actually sells liquor; in other words, this bill is broadly drawn and would allow an elaborate permit system to cover all liquor dealers to be developed?

Mr. TREADWAY. The explanation of that is that the experience of the Treasury Department requires this very harsh enforcement.

Mr. CELLER. Does the gentleman think it is necessary to go as far as that?

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, I think so; yes.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. MAY. When the bill was under consideration I offered an amendment reducing the tax from $2 to $1.

Mr. TREADWAY. Undoubtedly the Department some day will come to the gentleman's viewpoint on that question, or at least partially.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to the word "reuse", the first word in line 8. The purpose of the bill is to have that read "re-use." In this instance there is a question with the Public Printer or some clerk in his office as to the use of the hyphen. The hyphen is a proper mark to use in the English language, and I insist that that word be spelled in the bill which we pass today in the form in which it was intended to be, and that the Public Printer act under authority of Congress rather than Congress acting | under the authority of the Public Printer. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I think if the Members of the House understand the practical implication of the present bill, it will dispel any doubt in their minds about the need for a bill of this kind. If you go to a liquor store in Washington, D.C., I venture to say that 18 out of 20 never quite know when they are getting a pint of liquor. There are many bottles on the market that have 13, 14, and 15 ounces instead of 16 ounces. Under the provisions of this bill, whereby the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue rules and regulations to take care of the size, marking, and branding of bottles, the consumer is going to be guaranteed that when he asks for a pint of liquor he will get it.

Now, with respect to the bootlegging phase of this bill, you may be interested to know that in some of the large hotels empty bottles constitute a real concession for which these maitres d'hotel pay. When a convention comes to a hotel they will leave perhaps a carload of bottles. Many of them have the brands blown into the glass. You can go to a bottle dealer and get as much as 20 cents for a used bottle which has the wire and all the other frippery intact.

He can get 20 cents for one of these bottles; why? Because if it is a standard brand with the brand blown in the bottle, the bootlegger is willing to pay 20 cents for the genuine container. He will put in it the stuff that he makes, stick a fake stamp over the top, and sell it nine times out of ten even to many reputable dealers who cannot discern the difference. So it will be seen that from the practical standpoint this bill, first of all, seeks to stop the deception and the fleecing of the public. Secondly, it is going to stop these bottles finding their way into the hands of dealers who will turn them over to bootleggers to fill with a doubtful kind of whisky, to be sold to the consumer ostensibly as good liquor with the brand name of a reputable distiller blown in the bottle.

Let me tell you just how aggravated this condition is. About 2 months ago over 3 tons of labels were confiscated up in Long Island. There were labels for Old Crow, Old Taylor, Canadian Club, Four Roses, labels for every brand imaginable; and some of the experts in the employ of the distilleries state that these labels were so carefully executed that even their own label men could scarcely tell the difference between the counterfeit label and the real thing. How easy it is, then, having a bottle with a popular brand name blown in the glass, to stick on a fake label, put a strip stamp over the top, and sell bootleg liquor, which to all intents and purposes is sold as liquor from a legitimate distillery.

This is not only a good bill, it is a splendid bill, and it goes right to the very heart of an aggravated moonshining, bootlegging trouble at the present time. Unless this authority is conferred upon the Treasury you are going to continue to have the misbranding with expertly prepared fake labels, the use of legal bottles that are taken from hotels or wherever people who have drained the contents leave them, bottles sold to the bootleggers in order to carry out this wide-spread deception of the public.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield. Mr. CELLER. I agree with the gentleman that the evil should be scotched; but this bill gives the Secretary of the Treasury power to issue permits to every tavern keeper, to every hotel keeper, to every retailer throughout the length and breadth of this land.

Now, about the liquor-tax certificate, the Secretary of the Treasury now has the right of visitation and the power to enforce compliance. Why impose this additional burden on the Treasury structure?

to only about 240,000,000 gallons. The evil is so wide-spread that we have got to use drastic means to stop it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I hope the gentleman is not trying to convince the House that the so-called "bootleg liquor" is inferior in quality to the awful stuff being put out by the Whisky Trust.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is not the question at issue at all.

Mr. Speaker, I refuse to yield if the gentleman intends to go into a dissertation on the quality of whisky, because that is an extrinsic matter entirely.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield. Mr. MAY. As I understand this legislation, it is the product of an actual, practical application of the law as it exists; that experience shows it requires some correction.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The pending bill supplements and implements existing law and is going to mean millions of dollars in revenue to the Treasury.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. BOYLAN. Is it not a fact that under the provisions of the bill the Government becomes the big policeman for the manufacturers of the standard brands?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No; I will not concede that to be the

Mr. BOYLAN. The gentleman had already conceded it by the evidence he has adduced.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will, however, go so far as to say that during the present time until the novelty of legal liquor has passed away, and until we can contend with unauthorized bootleg liquor, some policing efforts are going to become more or less necessary; but this does not mean that it is going to be a permanent imposition on the people of the country.

Mr. BOYLAN. Then, does not the gentleman think in all justice and fairness that the manufacturers of these standard brands should pay for the policing that is to be done by the Government?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That also is a rather extrinsic matter, which does not enter into this discussion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MEAD). The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SUBSTANCES USED IN THE MANUFACTURE OF DISTILLED SPIRITS

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 373, to protect the revenue by requiring information concerning the disposition of substances used in the manufacture of distilled spirits.

This resolution, Mr. Speaker, is directly in line with the resolution we have just passed. It is recommended by the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the House joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That every person disposing of any substance of the character used in the manufacture of distilled spirits shall, when required by the Commissioner, render a correct return in such form and manner as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may by rules and regulations prescribe, showing the names and addresses of the persons to whom such disposition was made, with such details, as to the quantity so disposed of or other information which the Commissioner may require as to each such disposition, as will enable the the Treasury structure?

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is absolutely necessary, for on the basis of seizures and forfeitures over the last 6 months, it is estimated that 270,000,000 gallons of illicit whisky is being manufactured annually, yet permits for legal liquor amount of any such rules or regulations, and any officer, director, or agent of any such person who knowingly participates in such violation, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $500 or be imshall upon conviction be fined not more than $500 or be imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both. As used in this joint resolution (a) the term "distilled spirits" has the same meaning as that in which it is used in title II of the Liquor Taxing Act of 1934; (b) the term "person" includes individuals, corporations, partnerships, associations, trusts, and other incorporated and unincorporated organizations; (c) "Commissioner" means the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and (d) the term "substance of the character used in the manufacture of distilled spirits" includes but not by way of limitation molasses, and corn, cane and cludes, but not by way of limitation, molasses, and corn, cane, and malt sugar.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 18, after the word "molasses", strike out "and corn, ane" and insert in lieu thereof "corn sugar, cane sugar."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to insert some exhibits I desire

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 852) to amend section 24 of the Trading with the Enemy Act, as amended, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as

Re it enacted, etc. That section 24 (b) of the Trading with the Be it enacted, etc., That section 24 (b) of the Trading with the Enemy Act, as amended by the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, approved March 10, 1928, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Notwithstanding the expiration of any period of limitation provided by law, credit or refund of any income, war-profits, or excess-profits tax erroneously or illegally assessed or collected may be made or allowed if claim therefor was filed with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue by the Alien Property Custodian on or before February 15, 1933."

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, may I say that the bill S. 852 is identical with H.R. 4798, which has a unanimous report from the Committee on Ways and Means. I have informed the ranking minority member on our committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]. and likewise the gentlemen who were on the subcommittee, that we would bring this matter up at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain excerpts from the committee report on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. May I say further that this bill is requested by the Alien Property Custodian and the Secretary of the Treasury, and I may say by every Alien Property Custodian and every Secretary of the Treasury in office since the erroneous and illegal assessments and collection of taxes-since they became known to the departments. The excerpts from the committee report on H.R. 4798 are set forth, viz:

set forth, viz:

The bill as amended merely extends the period of limitations with respect to claims filed with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue by the Alien Property Custodian on or before February 15. 1933, for refund or credit of income, war-profits, or excess-profits taxes erroneously or illegally assessed or collected by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue out of property seized by the Alien Property Custodian. It limits the extension to some 52 claims which the Alien Property Custodian has heretofore considered to be just and for which refund has been sought by him. It may be stated briefly that these claims are based on the erroneous determination of ownership of seized property by the Alien Property Custodian; that is, property that stood in the name of other than the actual owners. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, after seizure by the Alien Property Custodian, examined the records of the Alien Property Custodian and took his determination of ownership as a basis of determining the taxpayer and the taxes were accordingly computed, levy made upon the Custodian and paid. In the case of German, Austrian, and Hungarian nationals the actual ownership of the property was not known by the Alien Property Custodian or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue until the statutes of limitations for filing claims for refund had expired as a full accounting of the property of these nationals was not authorized until March 10,

Commissioner of Internal Revenue in computing taxes determined that certain taxpayers who were partnerships were corporations in the purview of the revenue acts, and that certain corporations, due to their title on the records of the Alien Property Custodian, were partnerships, and in some cases partnerships which were dissolved prior to seizure were determined by the Commissioner, from the records as they then stood, as corporations.

In some cases taxes were assessed against persons whom it sub-sequently developed were not the owners of the property, whereas sequently developed were not the owners of the property, whereas the actual owners of the property proved that there was no profit or income growing out of the transactions (particularly liquidations) taking place prior and subsequent to seizure, where the Custodian either liquidated or shared in the proceeds of liqui-

The actual taxpayer and the persons whose money was used to pay erroneous taxes could only secure a day in court by the indulgence of the Custodian as in the cases of Germans, Austrians, and Hungarians; they were not entitled to an accounting until the passage of the settlement of the War Claims Act of March 10, missioner of Internal Revenue would, undoubtedly, have collected the correct taxes, or, at least, he would have levied taxes against the proper taxpayers even though the taxes were computed improperly.

improperly.

In other words, the object of this bill is to permit the correction of errors made by the Alien Property Custodian and Commissioner of Internal Revenue which have done great injustices to parties who had no right, whatsoever, to defend themselves during the time the property was in the trusteeship of the United States Government through the Alien Property Custodian United States Government through the Alien Property Custodian and it seems reasonable to ask the Congress to permit the two Government departments to right acts done by them, premised on erroneous knowledge. To empower the correction of these errors will be giving a right and proper account of the trusteeship of the United States with respect to enemy property, which cannot be done without authority of the Congress.

It will be shown by the following letters from the Alien Property Custodian and the Secretary of the Treasury that there is no question as to the merit of the claims and the duty of the Government to correct its admitted errors:

On that date Senator Sutherland as Allen situation which this amendment seeks to relieve has not changed since March 1, 1932. On that date Senator Sutherland, as Alien Property Custodian, wrote you that 48 taxpayers were involved and that the total amount of refund claimed was $370,215.21. Senator Sutherland's letter appears on page 3 of Report No. 2109 to accompany H.R. 6017, submitted by Mr. Vinson of Kentucky, from the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed on February 24, 1933.

Nothing has since occurred to alter the views of this office and we, therefore, recommend this amendment to the favorable consideration of your committee.

letter of Senator Sutherland, former Alien Property Custodian, referred to in the above letter, is as follows:

ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN, Washington, March 1, 1932.

Hon. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON, Chairman Subcommittee on Administrative Provisions.

Washington, D.C.

Washington, D.C.

My Dear Congressman: In reply to your letter of February 27, 1932, in reference to Mr. Celler's bill, H.B. 6017, you are advised that this office has filed claims on behalf of 48 taxpayers whose property was seized under the provisions of the Trading with the Enemy Act. These claims cover 77 taxable years, and the amount of refund claimed is $370,215.21. This amount will be greatly reduced by applying against this sum credits for actual taxes due by the rightful taxpayers; in fact, taxes in excess of $100,000 will be asserted against them, and unpaid taxes for subsequent years, if any, will be offset against the amount refunded.

These taxes were paid by my predecessors in office and were premised on the then record ownership and best obtainable knowledge and were computed by representatives of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, premised on review of the records of this office.

This legislation is desirable in order that this office may return seized property in compliance with the provisions of the Trading with the Enemy Act, as amended by the Settlement of War Claims Act, and without denying the owners of the seized property any privileges which they would have enjoyed in the matter of erroneously collected taxes had the property not been seized and held in the trusteeship of the Alien Property Custodian during the taxable years for which the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has rejected claims for refund on the ground that the statute of limitations has run against the Alien Property Custodian.

In most cases the representatives of the persons out of whose funds the taxes were paid had no knowledge of the acts of this office until the property was returned under the provisions of the Trading with the Enemy Act, as amended. All claims were filed immediately upon receipt of notice of actual conditions by this office.

Ever the information of your committee we attach bereto conies.

filed immediately upon receipt of notice of actual conditions by this office.

For the information of your committee, we attach hereto copies of communications from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue giving his reason for rejecting claims for refund. From these communications it will be noted in many cases that there were no such taxpayers under the revenue laws and that the property in many cases belonged to others than the persons or corporations taxed, and this information came to the Custodian's office after payment of the taxes assessed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Respectfully.

Respectfully,

HOWARD SUTHERLAND, Alien Property Custodian.

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY, Washington, May 14, 1934.

Hon. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON,

Washington, May 14, 1934.

Hon. Robert L. Doughton,

Chairman Committee on Ways and Means,

House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. Chairman: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of April 19, 1934, transmitting a copy of the bill (H.R. 4798) to amend section 24 of the Trading with the Enemy Act, as amended, and requesting a report thereon.

The bill would amend the Trading with the Enemy Act so as to authorize the making or allowance of a credit or refund of any internal-revenue tax erroneously or illegally assessed or collected if claim was filed with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue by the Alien Property Custodian on or before February 15, 1933.

This Department has no objection to offer to the enactment of the bill, provided the amendment be limited to the "credit or refund of any income, war-profits, or excess-profits tax erroneously or illegally assessed or collected" and not be allowed to extend to the "credit or refund of any internal-revenue tax erroneously or illegally assessed or collected." Strong equities exist for extending the period of limitations for filing claim for credit or refund in the case of income and profits taxes, since the taxpayer whose property was seized by the Alien Property Custodian had no way of knowing that income or profits taxes had been paid by the Alien Property Custodian and had no opoprtunity of protecting his rights against the running of the statute of limitations. This is not true, however, as to internal-revenue taxes generally, and for that reason it is believed that there should be no statutory extension of the period of limitation except in the case of income and profits taxes.

Respectfully,

H. Morgenthau, Jr., Respectfully.

H. Morgenthau, Jr., Secretary of the Treasury.

It is apparent from the testimony of the representatives of the Treasury Department and of the Alien Property Custodian, that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue took his determination of ownership and the nature of the owners, whether personal, partnership, or corporation, from the records of the Alien Property Custodian. The taxes were paid without the knowledge of the alien, and without possibility for him to know the amount of such tax assessment or payment. In each case the period of limitation, namely, 4 years from the payment of the tax, had run before the Alien Property Custodian or the owner of the property knew that there had been an erroneous or illegal payment of such tax. Immediately upon being properly advised, in each instance, the Alien Property Custodian filed application for credit or refund. In each instance, the application was rejected because it was filed after the expiration of the 4-year period from the payment of the tax. So, in brief, we have the illegal collection of taxes out of property seized and beyond control of its owner, and when the error of the Alien Property Custodian is discovered, the right to his day in court on behalf of the owners of the seized property is barred by technical plea of the statute of limitations.

It is the conclusion of your committee that as a matter of good

It is the conclusion of your committee that as a matter of good faith and simple honesty, the bar of the statute of limitations should be raised for the limited number of claimants in order should be raised for the limited number of claimants in order that they may have their day in court. It may be said that Germany did not assess or collect any taxes whatsoever upon the property owned by American nationals and seized by it. It should be stated that while the amount of the claims here involved totals $370,215.21, this amount will be reduced by more than $100,000 on account of taxes legally due from the rightful owners of the seized property. Failure of the claimants to prove the merits of the claims they have made will further materially reduce the amount to be credited or refunded. Further additional taxes due for later years will be assessed against these claimants and the amount thereof will be used to reduce any refunds finally made. This legislation permits a just and honest adjudication of the limited number of claims involved.

The committee amendment limits the refunds and credits to income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes. No interest will be paid or allowed with respect to such refunds and credits for under the provisions of subsection (e) of the same section no interest is allowed in the ordinary case and these claims would have no superior privilege.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INVESTIGATION OF OPERATION AND EFFECT OF INTERNAL-REVENUE

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 418, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 418

Resolved, That for the purpose of obtaining information necessary as a basis for legislation the Committee on Ways and Means, as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized to further conduct an investigation (1) of the operation and effect of the internal-revenue laws of the United States and the existing rules and regulations for the administration thereof, with a view to determining methods of improving and simplifying, and of preventing evasion and avoidance of such laws, and (2) of possible new sources of revenue.

The committee shall report to the House at the earliest practicable date the results of its investigation, including such recom-ticable date the results of its investigation, including such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable.

For such purposes the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places, in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman, and may be served by any person designated by him.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PHILIPPINE CURRENCY RESERVES

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 400 and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. RANSLEY. We have a number of gentlemen on this side who desire to speak on this matter.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman desire the usual 30 minutes? I hope he may be able to get along with 20.

Mr. RANSLEY. It is possible that we may be able to do that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and fortysix Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion by Mr. BANKHEAD, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with a very brief explanation that I shall attempt to make with reference to the provisions of this rule, may I make an appeal, particularly to the Democratic Members of this House, to remain in the Chamber, if it is possible to do so, until we dispose of the legislation that we have on the program this afternoon. I think I am justified in reiterating the sentiment I expressed a few days ago, that the more assiduous we are in attendance upon meetings of the House the sooner is the prospect of our getting through with the program and adjourning this session of Congress.

This is a very simple resolution. It provides for a consideration of the Senate bill 3530, which passed the Senate vesterday. The Senate bill is identical in terms with the bill which was reported out of the House Committee on Insular Affairs with an amendment. It will be recalled that this bill was under consideration here in the House a few days ago under suspension of the rules, but unfortunately it lacked a very few votes of receiving the required twothirds. I think probably only some 15 votes were lacking in order to give it the required two-thirds majority. So that on the record vote upon the merits of this bill on that occasion it received at the hands of the House approval by something like a majority of 100 votes.

This is a bill of considerable importance evidently in the eyes of the administration and those who are acting with the administration with reference to the fiscal affairs of the Philippine Islands. I think at this time it may be proper for me to read a very brief statement and to direct attention particularly to gentlemen on this side of the Chamber to the following letter from the President of the United States with reference to this proposal. It is addressed to Mr. Doughton, Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and is dated May 7, 1934.

> THE WHITE HOUSE Washington, May 7, 1934.

Hon. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON,

Hon. Robert L. Doughton,

Chairman Committee on Ways and Means,

House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. Doughton: With the approval of the United States, the government of the Philippine Islands has for many years maintained in banks in this country the major portion of the currency reserves of its monetary system, and has always considered these deposits the equivalent of a gold reserve.

The effect of my proclamation of January 31, 1934, was not only to reduce, in terms of gold, the value of these currency reserves, but indirectly to devalue, in terms of gold, the entire currency circulation of the Philippine Islands. The United States enjoyed an increase in the value of its currency reserves corresponding to the decrease in the value of the dollar.

As the Philippine currency is interlocked with the United States gold dollar under laws enacted by the United States Congress, it would be equitable to reestablish the Philippine currency reserves on deposit in the United States at their former gold value as of January 31, 1934.

I am advised that H.R. 9459, now under consideration before your committee, is designed to accomplish this purpose. I recommend its enactment. Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there? Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman allow me to proceed for just a moment, and then I shall be pleased to yield.

In addition to this direct request from the Executive, if you will read the majority report of the committee that reported this bill, you will find it is endorsed very strongly by the Secretary of the Treasury, it is endorsed by the Secretary of War, it is endorsed by the Governor General of the Philippines, and it is endorsed by the Director of the Budget.

Please let there be no confusion with reference to the operation of this bill. As I understand it, this is a transaction not between individuals in the Philippine Islands and individuals in this country, but is a direct transaction, and very largely, I understand, a bookkeeping transaction, between the government of the Philippine Islands as such and the Government of the United States as such; and I have been further advised that from the standpoint of equity the Government of the United States and the Treasury of the United States will not lose any money by virtue of this transaction.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BEEDY. As a member of the committee, I am in entire accord with what the gentleman is saying; and since he has referred to the equities of the situation, I thought perhaps I might be of help if I made this statement. Just before the Executive order of January 31, 1934, devaluing the dollar there had been several requests from officials in the islands that we set aside a sum of gold for them equaling the value of their deposits then in this country as a basis for their circulating medium. We put them off and assured them there was nothing to worry about. Therefore, we had in our gold a sum in excess of what we otherwise would have had; and when we computed our profit, we therefore took an additional profit of $23,000,000 on the gold which they asked us to set aside and earmark for them, and held that profit for ourselves. This bill simply asks that we now give them that profit which they would have had if we had honored their request as they were then entitled to have it honored.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am very much indebted to the gentleman from Maine for his very clear statement of the merits of the bill.

I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. The statement of the gentleman from Maine has, perhaps, answered the question I was going to propound to the gentleman from Alabama. I voted against the bill when it came up 2 or 3 days ago under suspension, upon the idea that it meant we were going to pay out of the Treasury of the United States the sum of approximately $23,000,000, irrespective of the devaluation of the gold dollar. I am not committed on the proposition further than that it looks a little inconsistent to vote one way under suspension and another way on a rule-

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say for the comfort of my friend from Kentucky-

Mr. MAY. Just a moment. Let me make this further statement. I believe in doing equity as between the Philippines and the United States; and if we are not going to subject the Treasury to any additional loss in order to do this, and if it is just an effort to make good what we have undone by the devaluation of the gold dollar, then I would be inclined to vote for it; and I should like to be informed on that point.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the gentleman I am not prepared by sufficient knowledge of the details of the bill to undertake an explanation along that line. It will be presented by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDuffiel and others who are familiar with the terms when we come to a discussion of the merits of this bill. We are only now considering whether or not we shall give the House the right to consider this bill under this rule.

As I started to say to the gentleman from Kentucky with reference to his possible discomfiture about being placed in an inconsistent position, that has very frequently occurred to me and to many other Members of the House. I have had the unfortunate experience on many occasions of voting improvidently upon bills about which I had erroneous information, but when I obtained real information as to the merits of the measure I had no difficulty in changing my mind and in changing my vote.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield just there?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. MAY. I vote for nearly all rules on the idea that the Membership of the House is entitled to vote on the measures on their merits.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman will vote for the rule, that is all I am interested in just at this time.

Mr. MAY. I almost always vote for rules on the theory I have just stated, but I think a vote for a rule does not preclude a Member from voting either way on the merits of the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Undoubtedly that is a safe position.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield for a question, because I want to expedite this matter as much as possible.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact if we pass this bill that to the amount of money that the Filipinos now have on deposit with us there will be added an additional credit of $23,000,000, approximately?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would rather some member of the committee answered that question.

Mr. BLANTON. That will be done; in other words, they will have $23,000,000 more than they have now, or we will be giving them $23,000,000 which comes from our taxpayers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am going to remit the merits of this case to the argument of its proponents when we go into the Committee of the Whole, if this rule is adopted.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me? Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire some time on the rule?

Mr. DUNN. I was going to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] a question, if he will yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman from Texas does not have the floor, I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. Speaking of the amount of money the Filipinos are going to get from the United States, is it not a very insignificant sum compared with what the United States has got out of the Philippine Islands?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I imagine there is a great deal in that statement, but I do not know what the facts are in reference to it.

Mr. Speaker, this is all I want to say on the rule. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Brown], who opposed this resolution before, has requested me to yield him 5 minutes. I understand he is in favor of the adoption of the rule.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I may say to the gentleman that I shall have to decline that 5 minutes, because I have decided to vote against the rule, also.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well. Then, Mr. Speaker, I shall ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Ransley] to use some time.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Brown].

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the other day in the consideration of this bill the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDuffiel took occasion to single me out for an attack, which I consider in the nature of a personal attack, in a manner which he had not indulged in toward any other Member of the House.

Heretofore, when other Members have voted against the avowed wishes of the President, when they have voted against the President's program, the gentleman from Alabama did not make a personal attack upon them because they took that side.

The other day, as will be seen on page 11085 of the RECORD, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDuffie] said:

I regret the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Brown] is today joining the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFadden], who can see no good apparently in any suggestion that might come from any President, whether he be a Democrat or a Republican.

I submit that that statement was eminently unfair, and I do not know of any occasion when a Democratic Member has ever been singled out to link him as trying to embarrass a Democratic President. I have voted for everything in the President's program.

Now, I think the House deserves to know why the gentleman from Alabama made that remark. I am going to have opposition from a sitting Member in my district. I would not have brought the matter up had not the gentleman made that statement, which has gone into the Record and which will be read down in my district. I told the gentleman from Alabama the other afternoon that that speech was made for the sole purpose of allowing my opponent to read it down there in the election campaign, and the gentleman from Alabama did not even disclaim an intention of putting these remarks in the Record for that purpose.

I do not think the matter of personalities or politics ought to be brought into the consideration of a measure like this. I argued the measured for 2 brief minutes. I mentioned nobody's name. I used some arguments as to why I thought the measure ought not to be adopted, and I shall give those arguments again today. When I walked into our committee room the other day and they said to us that the President wanted this measure, I was immediately willing to vote for the bill. The only thing that caused me to change my course was the fact that I asked a witness over there one question too many. I asked him where the Philippine government got this money and his answer was, from a bond issue floated in the United States. The testimony disclosed that the Philippine government now owes to the people of America $75,000,000. The testimony also disclosed that when they pay that money off, they will pay it with a depreciated dollar, and will make a profit of $30,000,000, and when we add to that this $23,000,000 gift, it makes a total of $53,000,000, and that leaves $22,000,000 that this loan of $75,000,000 of the American people's money will cost the people of the Philippine Islands. I submit to you as a Representative of the taxpayers of Kentucky and of this Nation that I could not sit idly by and watch that thing skid on through.

There is something else that I wish you would read in the hearings. The gentleman from Maine, Mr. Beedy, following the question asked by me, asked the General who was representing the Philippine attitude on this question, "Did you tell the President when you got that letter that they borrowed the money from the American people?" and the General's answer was, "We did not discuss that question." Sure, they have a letter from the President.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me, inasmuch as he has mentioned my name?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. BEEDY. The gentleman does not think for a moment that his President and mine is so ignorant that he does not know that the $75,000,000 of bonds were sold in this country, does he?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I say it is not a question of the ignorance of the President of the United States, but I merely quote this to show that the War Department at the time of getting this letter did not discuss the question of the debt of the Philippines to the people of the United States. I did not know that they borrowed it from the people of the United States and the gentleman did not know it, or he would not have asked that question.

House knew it.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I submit that you cannot find a half dozen men on the floor of this House who knew that the people of the Philippines borrowed that money from the people of this country and that they still owe it. [Applause 1

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I have only 8 minutes, but I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAY. I suppose the gentleman will agree that the President of the United States cannot look into every detail and be advised as he has to be. He has to take the word of many people about matters.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I say to you that one of the duties of a Member of this House is to save the President of the United States from some of the things that some of these departments may get him into by getting letters from him. [Applause.] I consider this morning that I am playing the part of a friend of the United States when I exercise my right as a representative here to oppose one of these measures which happens to be brought before the House, and I resent any attempt of any Member to link me with any movement to embarrass the Democratic President of this country, whose program I have supported from beginning to end. [Applause.] This is a matter that is solely up to your sober judgment. If the question cannot be considered upon its merits, if its merits will not convince you that it ought to be voted for, then you ought not to be persuaded by a letter from the President or by a letter from the Secretary of War or by a letter from the Director of the Budget or by a letter from anyone else. It is your duty to vote here on the merits of this bill. When you do that, you will be representing truly the people who sent you here. [Applause.]

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Kentucky and I engaged in a controversy on one occasion, I take this occasion to say to the Members of the House that I consider the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Brown] one of the most vigorous and attentive and able Members of the House. We have disagreed some on questions of policy, but I think he is one of the ablest Representatives from the State of Kentucky

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I appreciate the gentleman's statement.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I should like to know if the money that the Philippine government has here in the United States was kept here as a sinking fund to retire the bonds?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. It was not kept as a sinking fund to retire the bonds. The record will show that they kept this money in the Philippine Islands up until 1919; that is, in their banks over there. Also, their banks dissipated their funds, and it was after that that they started keeping the funds in the United States, it is true, with the encouragement of the War Department, but for the safety of their own funds.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFadden].

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, this bill was defeated on the floor of the House the other day when it was brought in under suspension of the rules, and now again we find a special rule issued for the purpose of forcing the legislation through the House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. McFADDEN. I am sorry but I cannot at this point. The bill proposes:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed, when the funds therefor are made available, to establish on the books of the Treasury a credit in favor of the Treasury of the Philippine Islands for $23,862,750.78, being an amount equal to the increase in value (resulting from the reduction of the weight)

Mr. BEEDY. Oh, yes; I knew it and everybody in this of the gold dollar) of the gold equivalent at the opening of business on January 31, 1934, of the balances maintained at that time in banks in the continental United States by the government of the Philippine Islands.

> I call the attention of the House to the fact that this was a book credit. Money was deposited and held then and is now in certain banks in this country and was not and is not now in the United States Treasury. There was no gold shipped here from the Philippines to establish that credit. As the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Brown] has so well said, the proceeds of money were derived from the loans from borrowing in the United States and from interest paid by the banks upon those funds. Under the act entered into March 2, 1903, which established the ratio of the Philippine money to the United States money, it was on the basis of $2 for $1.

> I have just received information from the Bureau of Insular Affairs that that same ratio is maintained since we have revalued the dollar. There are $\mathbb{P}2$ now for 1 of the new American dollars; our new dollar is no longer redeemable in gold. What is the net result of this bill, if it is passed? On the books of whatever banks in which these funds are held, or in the Treasury of the United States, as deposits, the book balance due the Philippine government upon their deposits is increased by $23,862,000. ask you whether that will not permit the purchase of #2 for every present American dollar, just as it did before? The net result is, if this bill is passed, we are making an outright gift to the Philippines, simply because the Philippines were trying to force the United States for the last 2 or 3 years to earmark some of their balances in gold coin for some purpose or other and because, until the value of the dollar was changed in the United States, we had refused to do that. And this puts no obligation upon us to give them gold now or to give their bank account a credit of $23,000,000. Let me show you how far they went in that connection to force us to give them these millions. I quote from the majority report on this bill. On June 29 the Governor General of the Philippine Islands officially requested-and bear in mind what he says-representing the demand of the Philippines:

> There will be, however, no necessity for withdrawing the above mentioned deposits from the present depository banks at this time, if it is possible to obtain Government assurance that conversion into gold of the standard existing, as above outlined, may be made at a later date.

> There was a threat on the part of the Philippines to withdraw those deposits from the United States if the Treasury did not agree to this scheme of making them a present of $23,000,000, money now in our Treasury which belongs to the taxpayers of the United States and to the people of the United States.

> There is no more basis for this present than there would be to pay to any foreign country who had money on deposit in the United States when our dollar was changed, and there were many such cases.

> I was surprised that our officials would be inveigled into the embarrassing position which has resulted in presenting this particular measure to the Congress for ratification at this time. They had no right to enter into any such agreement as they have entered into, as indicated by this bill.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. If the Treasury is authorized under this bill to set up a credit on the books of the Philippine treasury of $23.750,000, is there any way to get that credit off except by paying it in taxes or money recovered?

Mr. McFADDEN. No; there is not now. If the Filipinos want to do this, they can buy $46,000,000 with that money, which is today's rate of exchange value, which will discharge $46,000,000 worth of bills or other obligations in the Philippine Islands, whereas with $23,000,000 of their own money today they could only discharge $23,000,000 worth of bills or other obligations. It just doubles their capacity to settle bills in their own country, and, of course, if they use this $23,000,000 to pay their debts or bonds in this country | it will pay $23,000,000 worth of debts or bonds.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Are the Philippine bonds that were sold in the United States payable in gold?

Mr. McFADDEN. They are.

Mr. SNELL. What is the situation if they should pay any of them at the present time?

Mr. McFADDEN. The situation would be that if the Philippines were to pay off all of their bonds today, amounting to $75,000,000, they would do it with $40,000,000 under the new devalued dollar.

Mr. SNELL. And what would be the situation if we pass this bill giving them $23,000,000, if we should go back on the gold basis in the next 8 or 10 years? What would be the situation then?

Mr. McFADDEN. It would still be a present to the Philippines.

Mr. SNELL. There would be no way of getting it back? Mr. McFADDEN. There would be no way whatever of getting it back. It is a closed issue.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. It is asserted that this is just a book transaction. Is it not a fact that, if we pass this bill, it means taking $23,000,000 of tax money and crediting it to the Filipino people?

Mr. McFADDEN. It is just nothing else than, if your bank account stands at $10,000,000 today, and which I hope it does, and this additional deposit is made to it by the United States Treasury, tomorrow your balance will be $33,000,000; and you could check against it just as the Philippines could do.

Mr. BLANTON. And we would have to tax the American people for that $23,000,000 to pay it?

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman is quite right in that respect. This $23,000,000 gift comes out of the United States Treasury.

Here is another angle that I want to call attention to. We have a concrete example at this time of the amount of money that is due Panama, a situation quite similar to that of the Philippine Islands, $450,000 annual payment, payable in gold of the old standard, which the Panaman Government has refused to accept in the new dollar and is demanding payment in gold on the old basis. That matter is now in the courts. There are other cases where obligations, not only represented by our own money but represented in the form of our bonds and other contracts that are payable in gold of the old standard, are held in continental European countries. They are deliberating now as to whether or not they are going to demand payment of those obligations on the old gold basis. They are watching these legal attempts that are being made. We do not now know what may be the ultimate decision in regard to these outstanding contracts.

There is another case in the St. Louis courts in connection with one of the southwestern railroads where their bonds are maturing and this same question is raised. Some of those bonds are held abroad and they are likewise payable in the old gold standard. The bondholders are demanding that those bonds shall be paid at the old gold rate. These matters will be affected by a decision like this. This may be a very dangerous precedent. It is preposterous to think of making this gift of money to the Philippine government.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. If the power to reduce the gold content of the dollar is again exercised, as it can be, then they will be back here again, will they not?

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman is quite right. If the gold content is again reduced in accord with the power now in the hands of the President, of course, another present would be in order. It establishes a precedent, a dangerous precedent. Anyone in the United States engaged in the administration of this experimental change in gold and its values and relationships in exchanges and transactions with all the countries of the world should know that to establish this precedent is a dangerous thing to do.

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. FIESINGER. Has the gentleman any information as to how the price level in the Philippine Islands has been affected?

Mr. McFADDEN. No; I am sorry to say I have not.

Mr. FIESINGER. The theory is that it has depreciated their currencies and raised their price level. What are the facts with reference to that?

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman is a student of this subject and I presume he is correct. I am sorry that my time has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if this were a part of our President's economic program for the recovery of this country, I would go along with him unhesitatingly. If the President said he needed this bill passed as a part of his recovery program, I would shut my eyes and vote for it and for anything of that kind that he told us he needed. But this is not that kind of a measure.

Under the Constitution of the United States you and I are made custodians of the Treasury of the people, not the President. There is not a dollar that can be taken out of the people's Treasury except by your vote and mine; the President cannot take it out. The Constitution has fixed it this way, and our constituents back home are relying upon us to protect their Treasury; so you cannot unload your responsibility to the people by saying that the President has recommended it.

What about the United States gold bonds that the people of the United States hold? Is there any effort here to make good their losses by reason of the devaluation of gold? Every American holder of a United States gold bond has to stand up to the lick log and take his medicine. He must bear his loss. Are you going to do this for the Filipinos and not do it for the American citizens in your district and

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will yield me some more time, I will answer every question he asks me.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I will yield the gentleman more minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. How much? Mr. McDUFFIE. I will yield when we take up the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I want it on the rule. It is this rule that makes this bill in order. I am sorry; I cannot yield. There is no man here who thinks more of my friend from Alabama [Mr. McDuffie] than I do, and he knows it. I have followed him in many fights, but I am not following him in this one.

Now, this is a question we Members of Congress must determine for ourselves. It is unthinkable, of course, because he would not do it, but suppose the President were to recommend to us that we cancel all the foreign debts.

Mr. KELLER. He would not do it.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course, he would not do it. But for the purposes of argument, suppose he were to do it; would the gentleman go along with him? Why, no. Would not the gentleman from Alabama think for himself on that proposition? I would. That is one matter about which I am unalterably determined, the noncancelation of any foreign debt.

Now, my friend the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bank-HEAD] said that it lacked the other day just a few votes of passing. A change of 34 votes would have given a majority against it. I want to tell you something: If you pass this bill, it is going to cost your taxpayers and mine back at home $23,000,000 in spot cash. That is what it will cost. If this bill is passed, you will have to add to the deposits of the Filipinos the sum of $23,000,000 more than they have now, and tomorrow they could withdraw it all from the United States. If tomorrow they did withdraw it from the United States, you would have to tax the American people to raise this gift of $23,000,000 you are giving them. This is inescapable; it is a fact that proponents cannot deny.

If every man here who voted against this measure the other day will vote against it today and if we can get 34 Members to change their votes and come with us, we will defeat this bill. That is all we need; if all of you who voted against it the other day will vote against it today and if we can get 34 of the Members who went along with the suspension the other day, we will beat this bill, and we will save for the taxpayers, who are already overburdened, this $23,000,000. Are you not in favor of it, Fred? Are you not in favor of it, Doctor? Why, of course you are. You could not go back to Illinois and Iowa and face those people in their want if you voted to take $23,000,000 of their tax money and give it as a Christmas present to the Filipinos.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly, to my good friend from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman, being a very able and experienced lawyer, knows the danger of establishing precedents. I wish the gentleman would discuss this bill from that

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, all of us know the bad precedent it would establish. If you are going to give this $23,000,000 to the Filipinos, and if you are square and honest, ultimately you will have to make it good to every government and corporation and individual who suffered a loss by reason of the devaluation of our gold.

(Here the gavel fell.)

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. My friend, the gentleman from Maine, is usually such an able legislator and a man usually of such splendid judgment that I am surprised he has gone off now. [Laughter.] I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, as I recollect, the gentleman said he was unalterably opposed to the cancelation of any foreign debts.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; certainly, I am; is not the gentleman?

Mr. BEEDY. Did you vote for the devaluation of the gold dollar?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly, I did. I went along with the President as it was a part of his economic policy, and a part of his recovery program. [Applause.]

On every part of his economic program for recovery, I have gone along with the President.

Mr. BEEDY. Exactly; and by that action the gentleman voted to cut the foreign debts by 40 cents on every dollar.

Mr. BLANTON. No; that is a mistaken idea entirely. And some day, we are going to make them pay.

Mr. BEEDY. I want to say—

Mr. BLANTON. I decline to yield further. I have only a few minutes, and the gentleman from Maine is in control of some time, and can use his own time.

Mr. Speaker, I still have an abiding faith that great Great Britain, regardless of the times that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Britten] has twisted the lion's tail, will pay her debt to us some day in full. I have an abiding faith that some of these days the inherent honesty in the British breast will rise up and require her Parliament to pay every dollar that Great Britain owes us, and this, in spite of the Bolsheviks over there who are now in control of her legislative body.

Mr. FIESINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio. Mr. FIESINGER. When those dollars were placed in the banks by the Philippine government, gold was worth $20.67 an ounce. Gold is now worth $35 an ounce, and the United States Government must maintain that price?

Mr. BLANTON. I will answer that in a moment.

Mr. FIESINGER. There is no loss of gold because we have increased the price.

Mr. BLANTON. May I tell the gentleman another thing. The Filipinos got this money by selling their bonds here. They can always find a ready market among the Americans for their bonds. Those bonds are outstanding at the present time, and when they pay them they will pay with the depreciated dollar. They will get at least a net profit of $30.000.000 by the transaction. You gentlemen overlook that feature.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. May I say to the gentleman that I like to throw my flowers while the man is living. I consider the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. May] one of the ablest men on this floor and I do not believe that the sophistry of the Chairman of the Rules Committee is going to lead him astray on this issue. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. As Democrats, I think it is our position to see that the President is not led into a mistake by admitting that the devaluation of the gold dollar was wrong.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. MAY. If we are asked to do equity as between the United States Treasury and the Philippine treasury, we will be asked to do equity between the bondholders that hold gold bonds in this country and the Government.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. The remains of one of the greatest Presidents of this Nation is now lying here in the Washington Cathedral because of the disloyalty of his friends. Do not let that happen to the present President of the United States. There are men daily besieging him down there in the White House, when he has serious problems of state confronting him, asking him to do this, that, and the other thing, for instance, to pay out $12,000,000 more to Minnesota on a debt that has already been paid. They are just simply overcoming him with these many insistent importunities. I want to say that it takes men with backbone in this House to stand up and protect the President from some of his own friends, and to protect the Treasury and the taxpayers of this Nation from such assaults for money. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Thompson].

Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this bill is very simple, if you consider only the facts involved in it, but we have gone far afield and are considering personalities and everything else except facts.

May I make just one observation. The gentleman who has just preceded me said that he believed in the Government paying its obligations. Yet he stands up here and tells us not to pay the obligation that this Government owes to the dependent Philippine government. The two statements are somewhat out of balance somewhere.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. If we owe the Philippines in money the difference that is supposed to be represented by the bill, if we pass the bill is it not an admission that the President's gold-devaluation proposition was dishonest and deprived everybody of the same amount of money?

Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. No: for the reason that this is the only case where there is an interlocking currency system involved.

The gentleman who spoke against the rule a few minutes ago called to mind the fact that the Philippine peso is still on a parity with the American 50-cent piece-two for one with the American dollar. That is true until the time comes when we issue more currency against the appreciated gold which we now have in our Treasury, and we expect and the world expects the Philippine peso to keep pace with us. They are then no longer in possession of the full amount of gold reserve which they should have to keep their system in balance with ours; therefore their currency system becomes out of balance with ours.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Does the gentleman believe that the Filipinos have lost anything through the devaluation policy? Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. Not until that time comes, except on the world market. On the world market they will, as soon as the world realizes that the full amount of gold is no longer back of their currency. As a matter of fact, this is already taking place; the peso is not worth 50 cents on the world market today.

Mr. O'MALLEY. When will that be? They have not sustained any loss now?

Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. That is going on now.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Yet we are going to give them $23,000,-000 to make up this so-called "loss."

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GREEN. Is it not a matter of the Federal Government upholding its integrity with the Philippine people? Is this bill not a matter of the Federal Government upholding its integrity with the Filipino people?

Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. Yes; absolutely.

In the act of 1903 passed by this Congress their monetary system was forced to be in balance with ours. All through history we have kept it in balance, and it now has come to a time when the President of the United States has asked you to pass this bill in order to keep faith with the Philippine people.

I do not subscribe to the assertion that the President of the United States does not know what he is talking about. If he did not know what he was talking about, certainly the Secretary of the Treasury would have set him straight. If he did not see the point, certainly the Secretary of War would have seen it; and if all of them missed the point, certainly the Director of the Budget would have seen the point and would have stopped the negotiations then going on and so informed the President.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The Filipinos, as I have tried to get across here, have suffered no loss yet upon our gold devaluation policy. The passage of this bill would supply them with a $23,000,000 credit for the possibility of a future loss if we inflate. Does the gentleman think we are going to inflate the currency against the gold we gained by devaluation and does the gentleman think we ought to establish a precedent of appropriating $23,000,000 for a future loss of the Filipino

Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. I think when this Government has agreed to maintain an equity between our monetary system and the Philippine monetary system, we should, whenever we are called upon by the administration which dictates the policies of the Government, establish that equity.

Mr. O'MALLEY. But they have not lost anything.

Mrs. McCarthy. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. I yield to the gentlewoman from Kansas.

Mrs. McCARTHY. If we pass this bill now and the President should put a higher price on an ounce of gold, which he has the authority to do under the act passed by this Congress, and he places that price of gold at, say, $41, which is the limit, instead of the present value of $35, then will the gentleman come in here with another bill and ask us to make another appropriation for the benefit of the Philippine Islands?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Texas 1 additional minute.

Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. Yes; I may say to you now and if I am here at the time I shall say to you then, when this Government owes an honest obligation I shall expect the Government to pay it, just as I expect the other governments to pay us ultimately.

Mrs. McCARTHY. Then we may have a series of bills involving this kind of legislation.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BRITTEN. Does the gentleman agree with previous speakers that if this bill is passed we will be granting to the Filipinos a preference which we have refused to give to the American people themselves?

Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. Certainly not. There is absolutely no comparison between the Philippine government and the individuals in America. This is a matter between governments and not between individuals.

Mr. BRITTEN. But does not the gentleman believe the American Government has a responsibility to pay its gold bonds held by American citizens at this new value, just as you are aiming to make the Filipino a preferred creditor?

Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. I shall answer the gentleman in the later discussion on the bill itself.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask your attention for just a moment. I want the House to bear in mind that this discussion we have had so far relates to the proposition of whether or not you will adopt the resolution now pending, which is to give the House an opportunity to pass upon the merits of this measure.

There have been injected into this debate, upon the consideration of the rule, some matters that really do not tend to throw any real light upon the merits of the controversy. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] made reference to the fact that he hoped the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. May] would not be misled by any of the sophistry in which I indulged in presenting this resolution. [Laughter.] Well, I do not know what the gentleman's definition of sophistry is. I did not undertake to make any arguments that would subject me, as I understand it, to that criticism. I merely undertook to present to the House the reasons for the proposal of this rule. I merely attempted to set out that here is an administration measure endorsed by every executive of the Democratic administration that is interested in a proper administration of its fiscal and international affairs, and I merely urged the Members of this House to adopt this resolution, which is an open rule, in order to give the Membership an opportunity to hear the bill discussed upon its merits and then to register their votes.

I am somewhat surprised at my friend who has charged me with sophistry in connection with this matter upon the very peculiar argument he has made here.

Mr. BLANTON rose.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In just a moment; let us follow this matter a moment.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to show the gentleman what the sophistry was.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman cannot throw any more light on it than he did in his previous statement, I do not think he will help us very much. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I want to make some comments on the gentleman's attitude with reference to the measure and with reference to the administration.

The gentleman admitted here a few moments ago that on the great question of devaluation of gold and other fiscal policies of the Government of the United States, when they were sent up here he just closed his eyes and voted blindly to follow the President of the United States. Well, we are all glad to see that type of loyalty to the President of the United States. [Laughter.] It is very refreshing to us, and it is very stimulating and inspiring to those of us who attempt to assume, very largely, a similar attitude with reference to the President's recommendations, but I want to say to the gentleman from Texas and to those, particularly, on this side who have spoken upon this question, that, in my opinion, you do no credit to the President of the United States when you take your place here upon the floor of this House and say that on a question of this grave importance, affecting what the President of the United States conceives to be the doing of a matter of equity to our dependent wards in the Pacific Ocean-and the Philippine Islands were our wards at that time—to say that the President of the United States, recognizing the dignity and the responsibility of undertaking to settle this distressing claim or counterclaim between the Philippines and the United States, was so overreached by those who were making recommendations to him, that he had so many other matters of tremendous domestic and international importance to consider, that a mere trifling detail involving our relations with the Philippine Islands that he did not know what he was talking about when he sent this solemn message to the Congress of the United States urging the adoption of this resolution.

[Applause.]

Is this the attitude the gentleman from Texas is willing to assume before the people of this country—that our President, a man who is charged with the solemn responsibility of making recommendations to the Congress of the United States on a matter of this tremendous importance, was asleep at the switch and he did not have enough consciousness of the importance and dignity of this matter to give it any consideration but simply stenciled and stamped some suggestions his subordinates had made to him? I say to the gentleman from Texas he does no credit to his President and to the President of all the people when he makes an insinuating suggestion of that sort with reference to the President of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Texas if he will not engage in sophistry. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman take the position that Presidents—all of our Presidents—have been so big that they could not be persuaded by their friends?

Mr. BANKHEAD. By what friends does the gentleman think the President was persuaded here?

Mr. BLANTON. Friends like Carroll Beedy, of Maine [laughter], who has been to the Philippines and has strong Philippine friendships over there. Friends like our distinguished Chairman of the Rules Committee [Mr. Bankhead], who has persuaded me many times. I have followed him lots of times when at the moment I thought maybe his judgment was better than mine.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, I hope the gentleman, even by a death-bed repentance, will pursue that same sort of attitude with reference to this matter. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Sometimes I found out afterward I should not have followed him. [Laughter.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Chairman of the Rules Committee claims no infallibility. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that I do not for a moment propose to suggest that my poor qualities of mind are equal to his in reaching fair and just and righteous conclusions on these propositions. The Committee on Rules was presented with a request coming from the legislative committee charged with the responsibility of considering and reporting this measure, and we merely brought out a rule, as we were requested to do, in order to give this House an opportunity to consider the merits of a suggestion made calmly and deliberately by the President of the United States and all of his subordinates.

That is all I am assuming to do. I am not passing judgment on the merits of this proposition. You gentlemen are entitled to full discussion. I want some of the misstatements that have been made cleared up. I am sure they will be when the bill comes up for consideration. As far as I know, the gentlemen on the committee have no personal interest in this matter. This was a proposition, as I have suggested, sent to them by the Democratic administration for a favorable report, and submitted to the calm judgment of this House. I, for one, do not believe that Franklin D. Roosevelt, in consideration of a matter of this great dignity and importance, involving, as it does, the doing of a large thing in equity for a dependent people, would have sent this to Congress with his earnest endorsement and recommendation for the passage of this bill, unless he knew what he was doing. I hope gentlemen on my side of the aisle will vote for the rule and give us an opportunity to consider the bill on its merits.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment to the rule was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Blanton and Mr. Martin of Massachusetts) there were 98 ayes and 65 noes.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that there is no quorum present, and I object to the vote on that ground.

The SPEAKER. The call is automatic. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 208, nays 134, answered "present" 1, not voting 86, as follows:

EXTENDING TIME FOR AMERICAN CLAIMANTS UNDER SETTLEMENT OF WAR CLAIMS ACT OF 1928

Mr. DOUGHTON, Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, filed a conference report on House Joint Resolution 325, extending for 2 years the time within which American claimants may make application for payment under the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928 of awards of the Mixed Claims Commission and the Tripartite Claims Commission, and extending until March 10, 1936, the time within which Hungarian claimants may make application for payment under the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928 of awards of the War Claims Arbiter.

PHILIPPINE CURRENCY RESERVES

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3530) relating to Philippine currency reserve on deposit in the United States.

PATENTS TO LANDS IN NEW MEXICO

Mr. CHAVEZ. Will the gentleman yield to me first? Mr. McDUFFIE. I will.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 5369) providing for the issuance of patents upon certain conditions to lands and accretion thereto determined to be within the State of New Mexico in accordance with the decree of the Supreme Court of the United States entered April 9, 1928, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 2, after "lands", insert: "Upon payment therefor by such persons to the United States at the rate of $1.25 an acre."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

PHILIPPINE CURRENCY RESERVES

Mr. McDUFFIE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. BLACK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]. Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Brown] made a very convincing argument this morning. At first blush I was very much convinced that he was right and that we should oppose the passage of this legislation. After investigating the matter further, however, I was thoroughly convinced that as a matter of good faith this legislation should be enacted into law. As I understand it, the Philippine government had a reserve for their currency in the United States and that reserve amounted to $95,000,000. That was not an individual deposit and should not be considered in the same light as an individual deposit. It was a reserve for the backing of the currency of the Philippine people, just as it is the desire of the German Government to have as much gold as possible behind its currency, just as it is the desire of the French Government and of the Government of Great Britain and of every government—they all want gold behind their currencies. Therefore, the Philippine people wanted gold in the Treasury of the United States as a backing for the currency of the Philippine government, and in this country they had $95,000,000 the equivalent of gold.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Not now.

Mr. McFADDEN. For a correction.

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; for a correction.

Mr. McFADDEN. I call the attention of the gentleman to the letter of May 4 of the War Department in which it says that this money is deposited in the banks of the United States and not in the Public Treasury.

Mr. PATMAN. But the Government of the United States is acting in the same capacity as a guardian acts for his ward, and it is the duty of the guardian to exercise the highest degree of care in making investments in handling the property of the ward. Therefore, the United States Government, as guardian of the Philippine people, had $95,000,000 in gold or the equivalent of gold. That gold was theoretically, so far as the Government of the United States was concerned, in the Treasury of the United States. In 1923 our great Government said to the Philippine government, "Why let that gold or the equivalent of gold remain there? You have no control over it. We are not going to ask you and we do not ask you, but we will take that $95,000,000 in gold and use it for our own currency and our own banking system, expanding on it two and a half dollars to one, and ten dollars for every one of the expanded dollars, or twenty-two dollars to one, in order to expand the currency in this country; and instead of using that gold, instead of letting you keep that gold there, without your consent and without consulting you, as your guardian we are placing in your lockbox $95,000,000 in I O U's, and we will pay you interest upon that." That is what happened to the Philippine government's gold. We took it and gave IOU's. For years the Philippine government has said, "We want the gold behind our money", and every time our representative has said, "What difference does it make to you? Our dollar is exhangeable for gold, and we are going to let that stay there just as it is, in the form of I O U's."

Time goes on and the gold is revalued, and it is not worth as much as it was, and the Philippine government said, "We have that gold there; you were our guardian; you did not consult us; you took our gold; if you had left it there as it was, there would not be any difference between us at all, but you did not do it; you took it away from us, and we want you now to put us back in exactly the same position that we were in before you took our gold." They said, "We want gold behind our money"; and Mr. Roosevelt answers back and says, "Yes; we took your gold which you had in reserve for your currency; we put I O U's in that lockbox where gold was supposed to be; but we have agreed to pay you interest on your gold and on the I O U's, and that amounts to $15,000,000. The difference between us is $39,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1

Mr. BEEDY. I yield the gentleman 1 minute more.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Roosevelt said-

It would not be fair for us to give you $39,000,000 because you have been getting interest on those I O U's, and we will pay you the difference between the $39,000,000 and the $15,000,000, the accumulated interest-and that is what this bill is-to put in there the difference between that interest on the I O U's, and the real value of

There is another way to deal with this problem, and that is, instead of having money, just $23,000,000, or any sum, just deal with ounces of gold. The Philippine government was entitled to so many ounces of gold behind their currency, and if we were to bring a bill in here to deliver from the Treasury vaults over to the Philippine lockbox the same number of ounces of gold they had there in 1923 that they were entitled to have in 1931 and in 1933, the same thing would be done in a different way.

I consider that if we fail to pass this bill we will be breaking faith with the Philippine government. I do not care that you may show that they will get an advantage. Lots of people get an advantage. They could have bought certain stocks with the $95,000,000 that would have been worth ten times that much now. You can figure in several different ways in your imagination how people will profit, but the fact remains it is our duty as guardian of our wards to use the highest degree of care and diligence to take care of that ward's property, and if we take away from that ward's estate so many ounces of gold, let us put the same number of ounces of gold back where it belongs. [Applause.]

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago in the British Parliament a distinguished lord said that when men on the floor became excited they became boys, and during that moment of excitement or tensity they, of course, told the truth, and they very often divulged state secrets. A little while ago such a colloquy occurred on the floor of the House between the distinguished leaders, Mr. Blanton, of Texas, and Mr. Bankhead, of Alabama. It was agreed between them that the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle have been voting blindly for a lot of Presidential legislation, voting with their eyes closed, and the presumption was that they were going to vote with their eyes closed on this piece of costly legislation. It will cost the taxpayers of the country just $23,000,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman said that there was an agreement that we voted blindly. I made no such agreement. I voted with my eyes wide open.

Mr. BRITTEN. When one gentleman compliments another for something he has done I contend that is an agreement. At least, it is agreement in thought, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] stood there and complimented the gentleman from Texas for having voted blindly on Presidential request, and that he himself practically did the same thing. Others on that side of the aisle did the same thing. That is an agreement, is it not? You do not have to sign a contract to be in agreement. You are now expected to vote for this bill with your eyes closed, because if you open your eyes and open your minds you will not vote for it. It is a bad bill, and will make a Philippine bondholder a preferential creditor over an American who holds United States bonds.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BRITTEN. No; not now. Thank you.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead] then went further and he pointed his finger at that distinguished Texan [Mr. Blanton] and said, "Do you think our great President was asleep when he sent this message here? Does anyone think our great President is asleep when he sends messages to Congress?"

He evidently has had sleeping periods in the past. He certainly was asleep when he canceled the air-mail contracts, or somebody in the White House was. Somebody in the White House brought about a period of somnambulation or something like that when the air-mail contracts were canceled. Somebody in the White House was asleep when they started to rebuff that distinguished popular hero, Colonel Lindbergh. You will all agree to that. So let us not try to make ourselves believe that our distinguished President never sleeps. He does sleep. He cannot comprehend everything that is going on up here, particularly with a bunch like that on the other side of this aisle. [Laughter.] That is a physical impossibility. Even the entire White House must fall asleep once in a while. It was asleep when a movement was started to gag the press. That was their intention under the N.R.A. codes. They were going to gag the press, gag radio broadcasting. Give the people only such news as the Government thought they should have. A press censorship along the lines of the Russian system. I contend the White House was asleep at that time.

Very frequently I am reminded of that old story, which is probably a chestnut to most of you, about our dear old friend, Christopher Columbus. They said of him when he left Spain to come here that he did not know where he was going; that after he got here he did not know where he was, and when he got back he did not know where he had been. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROOKS. But he discovered America. Mr. BRITTEN. Yes. We learned that a hundred years

My contention is, Mr. Chairman, that the Democrats, with their 300 to 100 majority, should not pass legislation with their eyes closed, even though the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead], and the distinguished leader on your side. Mr. Blanton, of Texas, suggest that it is being done. That fact undoubtedly is responsible for much of the radical and costly legislation which has been enacted during the past

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Britten] has expired.

Mr. BRITTEN. I knew the Chair would do that. [Laughter.]

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER].

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to present a few facts as I see them. But before I do that I want to say that while I am not reaching over into Kentucky politics, and while I do not join in undervaluing my young friend from Kentucky [Mr. Brown], I am going to disagree with him completely and entirely on this bill. Nevertheless I am going to continue to recognize his unusual ability and service in this House. [Applause.]

The Filipinos had in the United States at the time we devalued the dollar, 2,800,000 ounces of gold that belonged to the Philippine people, and nobody else. That was worth at that time about $56,000,000. That was Philippine money and belonged to the Philippine people. When we devalued gold in the United States we also devalued the gold belonging to the Philippine people.

It therefore became a fact that the 2,800,000 ounces of Philippine gold became worth about $79,000,000. That is the long and short of the whole story.

If we should accept some of the contentions of some of the gentlemen who are against this bill, we would find ourselves in this peculiar position, that if a man owned $1,000 in Philippine bonds and also $1,000 in United States bonds, he would get 60 percent more for his Philippine bonds than he would for his American bonds, and that if this House fails to pass this law we would be repudiating our devaluation of gold. I just want to make that clear to you, because I only want to give you the facts. At the same time our people had in the United States Treasury 198,350,000 ounces of gold.

That had a value under the then gold content of the dollar of $4,100,000,000. We paid for that in the old regular money that is in existence today. We then proceeded to devaluate the gold dollar, and that gold stock became worth $6,900,000,000 in this same money that we paid for the gold. The American people got the profit of that transaction, which amounts to about $2,800,000,000. The American dollar and the Philippine dollar, therefore, in international trade, are exactly the same today.

One of two things is true; either the gold did not belong to the Philippines, or, if it did, they had exactly the same right to the increase in its value expressed in dollars that we have for the profit on our gold. I do not see how we can get away from that.

As a matter of public policy we nullified the gold clause in every contract into which it had been written, including our own Government bonds. As a result of that law the holders of the twenty-odd billion dollars of Government bonds could no longer demand payment in gold. Gold could not be had for gold certificates, which became simply legal tender, nonredeemable pure flat money as all our other money, all alike, became as a result of the same act. Nor was anyone wronged or injured. A pure flat dollar inside our own country is now our own and only dollar. It pays debts and buys what we want. This American currency is the basis of the Philippine peso. And, like ourselves, the only use they have or ever likely shall have for gold and silver is for purposes of exchange with foreign countries in paying out or receiving trade balances with the countries with which we trade. And since for many years we have sold more goods to other countries than we buy from them. we always take in more gold than we pay out. The same will now be true of silver under the new law. So that it makes no difference how much gold or silver we pile up in the Treasury it will affect our good commodity dollar only favorably. And to our Philippine ward, having received her part of the profit on the gold belonging to her in our Treasury, we have fulfilled our trust and sent the coming Philippine republic on her way rejoicing.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ELTSE].

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that if we reduce this whole matter to the terms of a contract, it will help us to understand it. It is my understanding of the situation, after having talked with the gentleman from Kentucky, that when the Philippine bank failed, destroying the reserves behind the Philippine currency, the Philippine government sold their bonds to American investors and acquired the money with which to rebuild their reserves. In so doing the Philippine government contracted to pay the investors of the United States in the then value of the American dollar. In the interim the United States Government devalued its gold dollar under the act of June 5 last year. This action of ours permits the Philippine government to pay off their bonds in the United States in the depreciated dollar, thereby deriving a benefit to the extent of the devaluation of the gold dollar. In face of this, however, they come here now and ask Congress to pass an act to give them another benefit by way of a credit of $23,000,000. So passing this bill will give them a credit of $23,000,000, and when they pay their bonds at maturity they will get an additional advantage or credit of some $30,000,000.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. I yield.

Mr. DIES. The point I would like to clear up is that the Philippine government will buy back these bonds on a depreciated currency.

Mr. ELTSE of California. That is my understanding. Mr. DIES. In other words, our dollar on the foreign exchanges has depreciated 40 percent.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Yes.

Mr. DIES. They can, therefore, acquire 40 percent more of our dollars with their products and pay off this debt with a dollar that has less purchasing power by 40 percent.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Exactly. I am glad the gentleman has made this contribution, because it very clearly expresses what I have in mind. It occurs to me that on a basis of pure contract they come here with poor grace to ask us to give them another credit of over $23,000,000 when they are going to derive a credit at the time they pay their bonds.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Frear].

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I have been a Member of the House for a good many years, but this is the first time I have been recognized as a Member from Minnesota, even by the distinguished gentleman from Maine, with whom I am agreeing on this occasion on the measure before us.

It seems to me to be not a question of what the President or Secretary of the Treasury or anyone else wants particularly, but to be in addition a question of equity and fairness that we are called upon to support. If you hold money and credits for an individual, and he demands it as his right and demands it again and again and again, and you refuse to pay him, you are not alone derelict in your duty but your obligation is undisputed. That is what the Federal Government did with the Philippines. All you need to do to verify this statement is to read the report of the committee which accompanies the bill. Time after time the Philippine government demanded their money back through their officials and Governor General, because they knew, as we all knew, the danger to their holdings when this Government went off the gold standard. They had placed their money with American trustees on the gold basis. They wanted their money back on the same basis. Read the report; the Treasury refused it; refused it repeatedly. What happened? Eventually, as feared by the islanders, we went off the gold standard within a few months after their demands. France earmarked her gold, and she got it back. Great Britain and other nations with gold credits here earmarked it and got it back. The Philippines, our ward, were unable to get their gold. Is not this true? They asked for it time after time, asked for it in every way they could, yet we would not give it to them.

Now, what happened? By the devaluation of the gold dollar we marked up on our books $2,811,000,000 simply because of the difference in the two valuations after the devaluation of our gold holdings in dollars. As the gentleman from Kentucky, whom we all admire, said, this $75,000,000 of Philippine bonds was sold in this country payable in gold. But they hold our Liberty bonds over there, payable in gold, and we expect to pay them with our dollars. That is a separate and different proposition.

By reason of our action in devaluing the gold dollar we have this $2,811,000,000 margin over the former values, but this takes into consideration the gold or exchange gold value | matter. They are a ward of this Government, kept there that they had and to which they were regularly entitled had we not refused their proper demands in 1933, and we should credit them with their proportionate share of the increased value of that $2.811.000,000. This must be done as a matter of fairness.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I vield.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Is not the situation this: That the Philippine government had a certain credit upon the books of the Treasury of the United States for a certain amount of dollars. We depreciated those dollars, and all we are asked to do now is to mark up on the books of the Treasury the credit to which they are entitled by the action of this Government in depreciating its dollar.

Mr. FREAR. Absolutely. There is a statement that is simpler and better than the one I have made. They are entitled to a portion of the credit which we have charged up to ourselves, their portion of the $2.811.000,000; they are entitled to $23,000,000 as provided in this bill. That is a simple statement of a simple proposition.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. The gentleman knows they did not have a penny in the Treasury of the United States. It was all in bank deposits in the banks of this country.

Mr. FREAR. Were they not entitled to the money? If you had money of a client under your control and you refused to pay it, you would be responsible to your client for the amount of money at the time they demanded it. Their deposits and credits should have been honored. The Filipinos demanded this money several times, and they have tried to get it back. The Treasury refused to give it to them, and the Congress has refused to give it to them. This $2,811,000,000 is their money as well as ours, so we should give them the $23,000,000, the credit to which they are

Mr. ELTSE of California. What kind of money will the Philippine government use to pay back and liquidate their obligations?

Mr. FREAR. The same kind we used. That has no relation to this refund at all. We have credited upon our books the sum of $2,811,000,000 to which we were not entitled, because $56,000,000 of that belongs to the Philippines apart from the $15,000,000 interest that has been paid them. The balance is $23,000,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman has been talking about the gold which the Filipinos have in the United States. Did they ever have any gold here? Is it not just a mere matter of credit?

Mr. FREAR. They had the same gold that we had. Only a fraction of the credits could be paid in actual gold, but it was a credit interchangeable in gold, and they asked us to return it to them and we refused to do it. Time after time they demanded, and we refused to return it. Then we marked up our gold $2,811,000,000, including the Philippine gold, and refuse to give them credit for their share of $23,000,000.

Mr. FOCHT. Did they ever have the physical gold in our vault?

Mr. FREAR. That makes no difference. They are entitled to the credit. France earmarked their gold, Great Britain earmarked their gold, and so did everyone else, and we paid it back. That is all there is to the matter in equitable treatment.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I yield to my colleague from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. I find myself differing with the distinguished gentleman. Would it not be just as fair to take care of the depositors of the various States in connection with the money that they had in the banks of this country?

Mr. FREAR. No; not at all, because in this case we are dealing with a foreign country. They had no voice in the without their consent. They had no voice in the matter. They demanded their money, just like a client of yours would demand his money if held or controlled by the principal. We have marked up a credit of $2.811.000.000, which includes their gold credit supposed to be on deposit with us. That is the reason they are entitled to that credit now.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, the House is entitled to the facts in connection with this matter. I am sure the gentleman from Wisconsin did not mean to misstate the facts. I think his statement is accurate in substance. The fact is, at the time we are talking about, the Philippine government did not have any gold here. They had a credit on the books of the banks of this country. We were then on the gold standard.

Mr. FREAR. That is, interchangeable in gold. It is the same thing.

Mr. BEEDY. They were entitled to gold if they wanted it, just as England and France were. Those countries had credits over here, and when they said they wanted to turn those credits into gold, we honored their requests. However, we were not the guardians of Great Britain and France. They could assert their rights; and, of course, we were obliged to comply with their requests, but to the Philippine government we refused compliance. In substance we said, "Do not worry about the situation. We will take care of it." We did not. Those are the facts. Now we should do the just thing and abide the consequences of our refusal.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Kansas [Mrs. McCarthy].

Mrs. McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, as the author of the minority report stated, this bill authorizes a bond issue of millions of dollars to be sold in this country. Eventually the amount appropriated under this bill will have to be paid by our own taxpayers.

While I voted for this measure the other day, the method of reimbursing the Filipinos was not disclosed in the bill or on the floor, and I am opposing it today because of the necessity for raising the money by selling Government bonds. I am opposing it for the further reason that we need greater inflation of the currency than we have yet had. In other words, there is too great a disparity between the price of hides paid to the farmer and the price that the farmer pays for a pair of shoes. There is too great a disparity between the price of wheat and the price of flour. Further inflation will increase the price of basic commodities and farm products. But if we inflate further we will have to make further appropriations to reimburse these Filipinos if we pass this bill and why should we do so? The Filipinos did not have their money in our Treasury. They had their funds in banks in this country because of unfortunate experiences with deposits in their own banks. They received interest on these deposits and they should not receive any preferential treatment, any more than anyone else who lost because of a change in monetary policy which was forced upon us in order to stabilize commodity prices and establish an honest dollar.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the Commissioner from the Philippine Islands [Mr. Guevara].

Mr. GUEVARA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the correspondence and cables between the Government of the United States and the Philippine Islands concerning the matter now under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the Resident Commissioner of the Philippine Islands?

There was no objection.

The matter is as follows:

MARCH 8, 1933.

His Excellency the Governor General,

My Dear Governor: In view of the banking situation in the United States, officials of the department of finance, including the insular treasurer and leaders of the legislature, feel that you should urge the Secretary of War to withdraw, at the earliest possible date, all funds belonging to the Philippine Government and now deposited in United States banks, convert them into gold coins, and deposit them in the United States Treasury, excepting such portion as may be necessary for the ordinary operation of the Philippine Government and its exchange operations through the gold-standard fund. This portion is estimated not to exceed $10,000,000, which may be deposited on demand deposit with the Chase National Bank, of New York City.

Section 1623 of the administrative code, as amended by act no. 3058, provides that "the gold-standard fund shall be held in the vaults of the insular treasury in Manila, or may in part be held in the form of deposits with such Federal Reserve banks or member banks of the Federal Reserve System in the United States as may be designated from time to time by the Governor General to be branches of the Philippine treasury for receiving such deposits." Under this section, it is evident that the purpose of the law is to have the gold-standard fund in such condition of safety and availability as to preclude any of this fund ever being out of reach of the insular government if and when needed. The law makes it perfectly plain also that no operation in reference to this fund should be undertaken which in any way may involve any loss to the Philippine government. Similar provisions are contained in section 1626 of the administrative code as regards the treasury-certificate fund. Such loss might conceivably occur should the United States go off the gold standard, in view of the condition in the contracts entered into between the Bureau of Insular Affairs and the depository banks in the United States to the effect that payment or our withdrawals is to be made in lawful money of the United States. Your attention is respectfully called to the correspondence of the insular treasurer and the Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs in his letter of January 31, 1933, informed you that for 2 years they have been entertaining doubts as to the legality of e Very respectfully, Confidential: Referring to Bureau of Insular Affairs letter of January 31, and also to the Treasury regulations received, the whole subject of the Philippine government deposits in the United States has been of deep concern to us and we have been giving it careful thought. I have discussed the matter with Vice Governor Holliday, the secretary of finance, the auditor, insular treasurer, the officers of Philippine National Bank, president of the senate, and the secretary of agriculture and commerce, etc. All are of the opinion that steps should be taken to remedy the condition that exists. Our government deposits in the United States are payable in lawful money, whereas our bonds, both principal and interest, are payable in gold. We believe it is bad government practice to have a condition exist where we are to be paid in one medium and are obligated to pay in another. On October 19, insular treasurer drew the attention of War Department to this, requesting that it be remedied, which request was disapproved by the then Secretary of War by endorsement dated December 8.

Peerican described the secretary of the set that although the secretary in provention of the secretary of the secretary at the set of the secretary in the secretary of the secretary in the secretary of the secretary in the secretary in the secretary of the secretary in the secretary of the secretary in the secretary in the secretary of the secretary in the secretary i was disapproved by the then Secretary of War by endorsement dated December 8.

Besides this, in your letter January 31, you state that although you do not consider them well founded, there are doubts that have been raised as to whether we have preferred claim on the collateral that secures our deposits. We do not concur in those views because we believe that under existing law, as well as under contracts executed by the banks, the Philippine deposits stand on an equal basis with the deposits of the United States Government.

Though, as stated above, we are of the opinion that our deposits are secured in equal fashion with those of the United States Government, in view of the doubts expressed in your letter January 31, I recommend that the administration sponsor before the Congress now in session legislation to clear up this matter once and for all. Of course, there is no question in anyone's mind that the United States will see that Philippine interests are fully protected.

Baguio.

Sir: Dispatches received here referring to the United States going off the gold standard state that a measure has been introduced in the United States Senate empowering the President of the United States to reduce the gold content of the dollar up to 50 percent. Should this measure be passed and the gold content of the dollar be reduced to 50 percent, the dollar will consist of 12.9 grains of gold, 0.9 fine, and this will exactly be the same as the gold content of the theoretical gold peso, as provided in section 1611 of the administrative code, which reads as follows:

"Unit of monetary value in Philippine Islands: The unit of value in the Philippine Island shall be the gold peso consisting of 12.9 grains of gold, 0.9 fine; 2 pesos gold shall be equal in weight, fineness, and value to the gold standard dollar of the United States."

It is evident that the intention of the Philippine Legislature

It is evident that the intention of the Philippine Legislature in this section was to make the gold peso equal in weight, fineness, and value to the half gold dollar, but inasmuch as the law is definite as to such weight and fineness, it would seem that the law must have to be amended in order to avoid confusion in case the gold dollar is changed in value by the President. This is so because if the gold content of the dollar is reduced to 50 percent, and no special provision is made as regards the gold peso by legislation, a situation may be created whereby the gold dollar once reduced to 50 percent of its present weight and fineness might be regarded as equal to the unit of value of the Philippine currency—the theoretical gold peso.

The proposed measure gives us also deep concern because of its intimate relation to our bonds sold in the United States, the principal and interest of which, according to the wording of the bond certificates, are "payable in gold coins of the United States of the present standard value", and because of the probable shrinkage in value that our gold deposits with the United States banks will suffer on account of the measure.

In view of the foregoing, it is requested that the following cablegram be dispatched to the Honorable the Secretary of War, Washington, D.C.:

Recommend proper arrangements be made to safeguard Philippine interests.

"'Holliday.'"

As a reply to the above-quoted portion of radiogram no. 254, I would respectfully propose that the following cablegram be sent:

"SECWAR (PARKER) Washington:

"Reference your no. 254 requesting concrete suggestions as to proper arrangements to protect Philippine interests as mentioned in last sentence of our message 147, we request that our gold-standard and Treasury-certificate funds be converted into gold coin of the standard existing at the time these deposits were made coin of the standard existing at the time these deposits were made with depository banks. This coin to be deposited United States Treasury or Federal Reserve banks and authority of the President secured to earmark it for our account by amending Executive order of April 5. There will be no necessity, however, for withdrawing above-mentioned deposits from present depository banks at this time if it is possible to obtain Government assurance that conversion into gold of standard existing as above outlined may be made at a later date. Note that foregoing does not refer to other funds of Philippine government. We also request that the Philippine government be granted the privilege to pay interest and principal of its bonds in United States legal-tender currency at the time of payment in the same manner as United States bonds. Kindly keep us informed of action taken.

As will be noted, this Department desires that certain Philippine government deposits with the United States banks—which were regarded as having been made in gold coin of the United States regarded as having been made in gold coin of the United States of the present standard value or in lawful United States currency, redeemable in gold coin of the United States—do not suffer any shrinkage on account of the devaluation of the gold dollar that the President may order under the authority granted him by Congress. Attention is respectfully invited to the fact that such deposits pertain to our gold-standard fund and Treasury-certificate fund, which are considered as trust funds backing our currency

With respect to the payment of interest and principal of our bonded indebtedness, it is believed that, if nothing is done to bonded indebtedness, it is believed that, if nothing is done to prevent it, the Philippine government may be compelled to pay "in gold coins of the United States of the present standard of value", while the United States is off the gold standard or when the gold dollar is devaluated by Presidential action—a contingency which, of course, would work considerable hardship on the Philippine government. Like the United States Government bonds, the certificates of our bonds sold in the United States stipulate that the principal and interest thereof are "payable in gold coins of the United States of the present standard of value." What we desire is simply that, in the interpretation of this clause, the Philippine Government be accorded the same treatment as the United States Government. Very respectfully,

V. SINGSON ENCARNACION.

His Excellency Frank Murphy,
Governor General of the Philippine Islands,
Manila, Philippine Islands.

Mr. GUEVARA. Mr. Chairman, I do not feel that I can add anything in support of the bill now under consideration, after the enlightening explanation of the Chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs, Mr. McDuffie, which he made the other day. However, may I say that it is quite surprising that this House should refer in this discussion to the $23,000,000, which after all belongs to the people of the Philippine Islands and not a single penny of which will be taken from the American taxpayers. I say this for the reason that I do not believe any man in this House will ever question the patriotism and the profound devotion of the Chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs, Mr. Mc-Duffie, to the best interest of the American people.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GUEVARA. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin. Mr. O'MALLEY. Suppose the situation had been reversed, and because of that the Filipino people owed us additional money; would the Filipinos have felt morally obligated to pay us?

Mr. GUEVARA. There is no question about that matter. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Brown].

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, although I have given out all the time to those against the bill, I yield the gentleman 2

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I am very grateful to the sponsors of the bill on both sides for yielding me these 2 minutes apiece.

We have heard a lot this afternoon about the Filipinos being wards of the United States. I submit to you that if you are handling the affairs of your ward, you are under no obligation to take from your own children something that belongs to them and put it into the estate of the ward. The only obligation that you could have incurred by law would be to make the Philippine government whole. If your revaluation has cost them a dime unjustly, it would be your duty to give it back, but there would be no duty upon you to take from your people something that justly belongs to them and credit it to your ward's account.

Let us see whether or not the gentleman, who on this side is yielding this time and who in a moment will speak in favor of this bill, thinks that the ward has suffered. In the hearings I asked this question:

They will pay the $75,000,000 bonds off with 60-cent dollars at our Treasury and that will leave them a profit of $30,000,000 on those bonds, or the difference between $45,000,000 and $75,000,000. On the other hand, by the devaluation they will lose $23,000,000Which this bill proposes to give them-

All told is not that a net profit to the Philippine Islands of $7.000,000 on what they owe us?

The answer of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] is. Unquestionably."

This answer will be found on page 38 of the printed hearings. There is a $7,000,000 gain, if you defeat this bill. They make $7,000,000 by the President's revaluation program.

I submit to the Members of the House there is not a one of us who wants to do any injustice to our wards; but what one of you, as a father of children, having custody of a ward, would take from your own children something which belonged to them and chalk it to the account of the wards. You would do simple justice. You would make his account whole, but you would not take something away from your own people and give it to him; and by the very answer of the gentleman from Maine and by simply putting common sense into this proposition, our sole duty to the Philippine government is to make them whole on this revaluation program; and I submit to you that since they owe our people $75,000,000 that they can pay at a saving of $30,000,000 by virtue of the revaluation, they already have made $7,000,-000 by this program, and we do not owe them one penny because of the revaluation of the gold dollar.

Now, the gentleman from Texas talked about their gold in this country. They never had an ounce of gold in this country. They had Federal Reserve notes that they sold these bonds for. They had other types of currency just like every one of you had and the rest of the citizens of this country.

When we come to our Government, especially on this side of the House, we use this revaluation program as a general welfare program. I was glad, and so were you, if you had a $20 gold certificate, to lose whatever fictional value it may have had in gold in the general public interest. You got the benefit of the increase in prices. You got the benefit of a broadened backing of our currency. The Philippine government got exactly the same thing.

Another thing I want to submit to you with respect to the Philippine currency is that they talk about our dealing with interlocking currencies.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Thompson].

Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin raised the question just a few moments ago about what would have happened had the value of the dollar gone the other way and had the Philippine government owed us money rather than we owing money to them.

Let me call your attention to the famous bond issue that you are asked to consider in this bill. The purpose of this bond issue was for the Philippine government to buy more gold with the proceeds and to replenish their reserves which had become depleted. This is the answer to what the Philippine people would do if they owed us money. They paid for gold, they thought they were buying gold, this Government regarded the funds the same as gold and it is so reflected in the correspondence between the two governments. When the time came, however, for their gold to be set aside, and when through 1932 and 1933 they repeatedly requested it, as has been pointed out to you and I need not repeat, this was refused and they could not have it.

There is just one other thing to which I want to draw your attention. The argument of the gentleman from Kentucky, and may I say I hold him in highest regard, and while his opinions and mine differ, they are honest opinions and we have no personal difference between us-the gentleman's argument is that because the money was used to buy gold and because the gold appreciated in value on borrowed money, we should not give them that profit. This is exactly similar to what happened to me. I borrowed money from a banker and I bought some stock, and when the stock went up and I went around to get it in order to sell it, he tried to make me divide up the profit. This is exactly what the gentleman is trying to do in this case. He is trying to make the Filipinos give us part-in fact, all-of the profit on their gold.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFadden].

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin relative to earmarking of the gold for foreign countries, I want to distinguish between gold earmarked for the Bank of France or the Bank of England, in New York, and gold deposited by the Government of France, or the Government of Great Britain, or any other government, or individuals. There was no earmarking of the gold here belonging to the Philippine government. Their money was all in banks here in the form of deposits. There was no reason why the United States Treasury should furnish gold to cover the bank account of any country. We were not holding one dollar of gold for the Philippine Islands. This bank account belonged to the Philippine government in the banks of the United States and was not in the Public Treasury, but was accumulated from the sale of bonds in this country, and the interest which had been accumulated on the account in these banks.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. TABER. It appears from the majority report that there were no real demands for this money until we went off the gold standard. On June 29, 1933, and June 27, 1934. Is there any reason why this item should be considered in any different way from the deposits of any other country?

Mr. McFADDEN. No; no reason. May I say the governments of the South American republics and the Central American republics had money on deposit in the banks of the United States; and we have not and do not intend to pay them 40 percent of deposits as a gift.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co., of Milwaukee, Wis., one of the best in the world, can come here from Mr. FREAR'S State and say, "Here is $75,000,000 in United States gold bonds, and by devaluation you made us lose $23,000,000; pay us back", and the gentle-man from Wisconsin [Mr. Frear] will say, "No; we will not pay the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co., of Milwaukee, Wis., its loss, but we will pay the Philippine Islands We will give them $23,000,000 and tax Americans to pay it. Is that the position of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. FREAR. No; it is not. Mr. BLANTON. But this bill does give the Filipinos $23,000,000 and it does not make good the losses of any Americans in Wisconsin.

Mr. McFADDEN. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this fact. Inasmuch as the Secretary of War has said that this fund here belonged to the Philippine government, being reserve to the Philippine monetary system, has been in the form of United States currency, and accrued interest deposited in banks in continental United States. That statement is correct, is it not? I am quoting from your report, page 2:

Mr. McDUFFIE. As guardian of the Philippine people, we in effect stated to them, "We will not give you the gold, but you can draw interest on your deposits in dollars." This interest is deducted from the credit they would have otherwise been entitled to.

Mr. McFADDEN. The banks pay interest on those deposits?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. If you are fair and want to be honestyou say the devaluation in the gold dollar amounted to $39,000,000, as due the Philippine government—why do you not be fair and pay them all of it—the whole $39,000,000? Why deduct $15,000,000 of interest paid them by the banks as interest on their deposits?

Mr. McDUFFIE. We are trying to do equity to them and to our own Government in this transaction.

The Government in its management of its ward's funds did as any guardian should have done and had them place those funds in banks as dollars, in order that the dependent government, the ward, might receive the benefit of the interest on the funds, just as the gentleman would have done had he been situated similarly to this Government and acting as a guardian. The gentleman's own conscience would have prompted him to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. McFADDEN. Could the gentleman from Maine yield me 2 minutes more?

Mr. BEEDY. I have only 4 minutes left for myself.

Mr. McFADDEN. Then I shall endeavor to get this answered under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I find in my experience here and elsewhere that I am sometimes disillusioned and that some of my idols have feet of clay. This afternoon I have been so much disillusioned and so disappointed in the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton]. He has been much disappointed in me also. I think, therefore, the scales will balance so far as our disappointment in each other is concerned. I have always supposed that he had a good deal of independent judgment, and I confess that I was astonished when he stood here and said that it has been his custom to shut his eyes and vote blindly, regardless of the wisdom of it, if the President asked him to. In the face of that admission he makes a distinct declaration that there is one policy that he is unalterably opposed to-that he is unalterably opposed to curtailing any foreign debt. I asked him if he voted for the devaluation of the gold dollar, and he said, "Yes; that he had shut his eyes and voted for it." He cast that vote blindly for the sake of refuting his own unalterable convictions. He thereby helped in robbing the taxpayers of this Nation, for whom he is the great spokesman, of hundreds of millions—yes, billions—of dollars due them on foreign obligations. He thereby cut the debts of every foreign debtor to this Nation by 40 cents on every dollar.

Mr. BLANTON rose.

Mr. BEEDY. Oh, not in 4 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman mentioned my name. Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, that was a great disappointment to me. I had thought better of the gentleman from Texas. That is not the kind of voting that we need in this Congress. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Brown] said that I said this whole thing would result in a net profit to the Philippines of $7,000,000. There is no question about that. This whole deflation policy resulted in a practical profit to every foreign nation who owes us, totaling hundreds of millions—yes, billions—of dollars. I voted against it; you voted for it. What I am asking you to do is to stand here like men and take your medicine. You must in equity give to these poor Filipinos the same profits that you are giving to Germany and France and Italy and all of the foreign nations of the world by your devaluation policy.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. Yes.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. Do we not owe every person who had gold and from whom we took it away the same as we owe the Filipinos?

Mr. BEEDY. Certainly. And the next logical step for your party to take will be to make our own bondholders whole. You now face one of the inevitable evils attendant on your own policy of devaluing the gold dollar. We beseeched you not to devalue it, but you did; and now we beseech you not to dodge the consequence of it.

Later on we hope that when these poor people in America come around with their bonds, which our Government promised to pay at the rate of 100 cents on the dollar, you will not ask them to take 60 cents, but that you will see the light, restore the dollar to its former 100-cent value. and do even-handed justice to our own people. [Applause.]

Mr. KENNEY. What rate of interest was paid the Filipinos on the money in the banks?

Mr. BEEDY. Two percent, as I recollect it.

Mr. KENNEY. But they deposited the money in the banks?

Mr. BEEDY. The interest rate on money so deposited was 2 percent, as I recollect it.

Mr. ELTSE of California. They were not charged interest; they were given interest.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, my argument must have had some guts in it when it caused such men as my friend from Maine [Mr. Beedy] and my friend from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead] to use most of their time in attacking me because of it.

Mr. BEEDY. Oh, the gentleman is an important individual.

Mr. BLANTON. There must have been something in my argument that bothered them.

Mr. BEEDY. There always is.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Maine and the gentleman from Alabama had an hour on this bill, and out of the hour I am given 1 minute to oppose this bill. If this proposal were fair to the American people, and they were not to be taxed to pay this $23,000,000 to the Filipinos, I would say O.K., but I want you to treat them all alike—American taxpayers here at home fair and justly—and charity begins at home. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, there is some confusion always in an issue of this kind. This issue is especially confusing because we are prone to confuse the question of bond issues and individual transactions with the real issue, which involves the currency-reserve funds of two great governments. If we clear our minds of individual transactions, their losses or gains, I think we could settle this question easily. It is not a question of who is going to pay bonds or when. We are dealing with a single problem, the duty of a great government to a dependent one, and let me say to you, if you were the guardian charged with the responsibility of a ward such as this Government is charged with the responsibility that it has assumed in this case, there is not a judge of probate or guardians' court in the United States that would fail in making you do the very thing for your ward that this Government is seeking here to do for its wards across the sea. It is purely a question of equity and good conscience. Nebody claims we are technically and legally liable for this money, but we are liable in equity and good conscience.

Now, the case has been stated over and over, and it is very simple. Those people had money in this country. They had $56,000,000 in various banks here, treated as gold. We did not give them any appreciation on it. It is true our citizens sent their money to the Government and the individual did not get credit, I will say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Terrell], for whose ability I have a very high regard, but our Government, which is you and me and every other American, took credit for it in the sum of $2,800,-000,000 on our Government's books, and our Government therefore has benefited.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I am sorry I cannot yield to the gentleman. I hope he will excuse me.

Now, there has been too much of personalities involved in this discussion. I regret it very much. I have nothing personal against the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Brown]. I have seen the gentleman stand on the floor and condemn all Members who failed to follow the President in a great speech in which he used strong language. I appreciate the loyalty he has shown, but when he fails now to follow him he assumes it is the right thing to do. I said in my remarks the other day that I regretted to see him, the only member on the committee, including the Republicans on the committee, all of whom in principle favored this equitable measure, pitting his judgment against that great President whom he has so loyally followed up to this time, possibly with some exceptions, although I do not know of any—I say I regret to see him oppose this measure.

As chairman of that committee, however, I was surprised, and I repeat it-and this statement is not made for political purposes-but as long as I am chairman I reserve the right to call the attention of the House to the fact that a follower of the President in days gone by has seen fit now to doubt his judgment. I think I had a right to do that. The gentleman, of course, can draw his own conclusions. We have always been friends. There is nothing personal between me and the gentleman from Kentucky; but I did dislike to see him underwrite, if you please, as others have done, including the gentleman from Texas, the very argument that gentlemen on the Republican side have made condemning the President's gold-standard policy. I am for it. Those gentlemen were against it, but there are some over there who can see the equity involved in this case and will support this bill.

Now, let me repeat, if I may: This is the way it appeals to me: Those people had this money. They said, "We should like to have gold for it." "No. We are your guardians. We shall take your money down here and invest it. You will thereby gain 2 percent interest on it. You will increase it."

There was no gold in the deposits. Nobody ever said there was actual, physical gold to their credit on January 31, 1934; but those dollar deposits were treated as gold, and everybody knows it was treated as gold. Incidentally, had we given them the $56,000,000 in gold which they asked for—and the gentleman knows it, although he did not attend every meeting of the committee—their appreciation or credit would have automatically followed.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Will the gentleman find one place in these hearings where it says they had to keep a currency reserve in this country?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Not by law, but a ward does what his guardian says, and the gentleman knows it. Everybody knows they have been subject to our will and our dictation for 30 years and more. Now they come here and raise a cry because it is carrying some benefit to a dependent people thousands of miles across the sea, a people against whose second largest industry this Congress has recently placed an embargo, if you please, to the detriment of two and a half million people over there, and to the hurt of the American farmer and laborer. Now if we follow up that injustice with failure on the part of this Congress to do an equitable thing suggested by our President, a man with all the sense of equity that a man can possess, with no loss to the Treasury for the very reason that we have already gained, ourselves, on this $56,000,000, what will our wards say? What will the world say? Suppose we had done what should have been done in equity, and said, "Here is' $56,000,000 in gold." They would have had the $56,000,000 in gold coins or bullion, or credit, and there would have been no need for this legislation. We did not do that. We said, "No. We will not do that, but we will treat it as gold." They had a right to rely on us. Our action contracted these reserves, because they are in dollars.

If we had treated our wards propertly, we should not have had the $56,000,000 in gold in our fund on which there was appreciation. Not having done it, we had $56,000,000 in our Treasury representing, in effect, gold on which, if you please, our American people—not the individual bondholder, but the American people as a great Government—have already gained this credit of $23,000,000 and more. That is what we have done. Therefore, we are simply giving to the Philippine government a credit we received on their funds.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FOCHT. It has been said many times that a demand was made by the Filipinos for the $23,000,000. Why did we not give it to them?

Mr. McDUFFIE. That is a question that I cannot answer. I say we should have done it, but we did not do it.

another. We refused to do it.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. We did not give it to them because we needed the gold at that time, and the Filipinos were good enough to help us and let their gold remain here. They had a right to the gold.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Had we done the equitable thing by them, we would not have had the $56,000,000 in gold to appreciate.

Therefore, I say we are not taking anything away from our own people. We are giving back to these dependent people something that we have taken from their own gold money in this country-treated as gold, not the actual dollars. Is it not fair? I repeat, there is not a probate judge, not a judge of a guardians' court in this country but who would make any one of you, whether you come from the State of Kentucky, if you please, or elsewhere, repay to his ward in dealing with the ward's funds the amount involved.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield.

Mr. EDMONDS. Is not this money held here in order to amortize the bonds when they come due?

Mr. McDUFFIE. No; this money was held here as a base, if you please, for their circulating currency, their reserve fund.

Mr. EDMONDS. In order to protect it.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Absolutely. We have their bonds; they have our money. When those bonds fall due they will be paid in depreciated currency. They have some of our Liberty bonds. When they come due we will buy them with depreciated currency. So, honors are about even along that line, if we are going to go into the question of bond

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield.

Mr. DOBBINS. Is it not a fact that they purchased something like only $16,000,000 of our bonds, whereas we purchased something over $73,000,000 of theirs?

Mr. McDUFFIE. There is an issue of ours they hold amounting to about $17,000,000, if you wish to make this a question of bond issues; but that does not enter into this case at all; this is above bonds. This is a great issue involving national morals. You cannot get away from that proposition. You are underwriting the very argument made by the gentleman from Maine; and I beg you, gentlemen, to look at this thing from the standpoint of equity and good conscience; it is not a question of dollars and cents.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I do not find in any part of the hearings anything to indicate that the Filipino people asked the return of their gold at any time prior to March 4, 1933; it was only after that date.

Mr. McDUFFIE. They did in 1932.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I do not find it in the hearings.

Mr. McDUFFIE. We could not put all of the correspondence in the hearings.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. What were the circumstances?

Mr. McDUFFIE. We had had a panic in this country. They appealed to the Government and said, "Do not let us suffer. We put up our good money in dollars treated as gold. We expect our guardian to take care of us."

The Governor General, Theodore Roosevelt, did it. It was done even prior to that time. It was done immediately after the depression started; and I can cite the gentleman the letters. Some of them we preferred not to put in the public hearings.

This is a matter of conscience; this question rises above the matter of dollars and cents.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I very closely followed the argument of the gentleman from Maine, who is in favor of this bill. His argument seems to be that the President in devaluating the dollar defrauded the people of some of the amount they

The gentleman would not now wish to add one wrong to were entitled to. I cannot, therefore, vote for this bill, because I do not believe the President's policy defrauded anybody, including the Filipinos.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman puts himself in a nice position to vote for the bill; I am sorry he will not do so.

Mr. O'MALLEY. If I followed the gentleman, I would have to vote for the bill.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. When was this money actually put in the United States Treasury? It was taken out and put in the banks.

Mr. McDUFFIE. It began in 1923.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. This money had been in the United States Treasury up to 1923?

Mr. McDUFFIE. The Philippine reserves were reconstituted in 1923. The funds were dissipated in 1918 and 1919, but these reserves have been reconstituted and are now standing dollar for dollar at the suggestion and dictation of this Government.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is author-Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed, when the funds therefor are made available, to establish on the books of the Treasury a credit in favor of the Treasury of the Philippine Islands for $23,862,750.78, being an amount equal to the increase in value (resulting from the reduction of the weight of the gold dollar) of the gold equivalent at the opening of business on January 31, 1934, of the balances maintained at that time in banks in the continental United States by the government of the Philippine Islands for its gold-standard fund and its treasury-certificate fund less the interest standard fund and its treasury-certificate fund less the interest received by it on such balances.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Preferential motion of Mr. BLANTON: I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid that we are coming to a dangerous situation when Members of the House cannot vote their honest, conscientious convictions without being criticized by other Members. With me, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Brown] is just as important a Member of this House as is either of our good friends from Alabama. His rights and privileges are identical with theirs.

Do we, by taking a man from Alabama because we love him and elevating him to the Chairmanship of the Rules Committee, give him the right to come on the floor and condemn and criticize his brothers from Kentucky, Texas, or anywhere else because they do not see fit to follow his lead? Why, that would be a ridiculous situation. I think that I have just as much right to my opinion as my friend from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead]. I think I have just as much right to vote here under the Constitution for the things that the Constitution says that only Members of Congress have control of without having anybody get up here and criticize my action-

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield, having referred to me?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly; I yield always to the gentleman from Alabama, although the gentleman did not yield

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course, the gentleman knows that there was nothing personal in this. I felt that the gentleman had taken a position that was subject to the criticism that I made.

Mr. BLANTON. And at the time I thought the gentleman from Alabama, although I did not say it, was taking a position that was subject to criticism; but I did not have the right to criticize him any more than he has the right to criticize me, and I did not do it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry, I have only a few minutes. The Constitution says that only Members of Congress may vote $23,000,000 out of the Treasury. The Constitution says that is a duty on your shoulders and not on the President's shoulders. This is not a part of the President's program | for economic recovery. If it were, I should vote for it. This is a mere recommendation by the President. If it appeals to us, we vote for it. If it does not appeal to us, we do not vote for it.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I am sorry; I have not the time. This is not a question of lotteries, that interests the gentleman so vitally.

I think when we go back home we are going to have a hard time explaining this $23,000,000 gift to the Filipinos. Since I have been a boy I have carried a policy in the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co. of Milwaukee, Wis. It is as good as gold. Suppose they came to you and said, "We have $75,000,000 of Government gold bonds. We have money loaned all over the country to farmers. We have the American Government behind our bonds, but because of action taken by the Government I think we ought to have $23,000,000." You would say, "Why, I cannot pay you." They would say, "But, you voted $23,000,000 to pay the Philippines."

For 35 years we have given the Filipino people something that is more valuable than gold. When we put that flag behind them we told every nation in the world, "Do not touch these people. The American Government is behind them." We have kept them in their integrity for 35 years, and every boy in the United States has been behind that flag to protect the Philippine government. Why should we give them $23,000,000? [Applause.]

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

I hope the Members will be kind enough to allow me to a little further express my views on this subject. As I said at the beginning, due to the shortness of time, and due to the fact that both gentlemen who control the time were for this bill, we who are against it have not had the opportunity to express our views as we should like.

Mr. BEEDY. I gave the gentleman some time.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. The gentleman gave me 2 minutes, and I thank the gentleman for it. The gentleman from Alabama gave me 2 minutes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I gave the gentleman 4 minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Having filed the only minority report on the bill, I thought I should be entitled to more than 4 minutes, but that has nothing to do with this argu-

The gentleman from Alabama has stated to you here at this late hour that I am turning against the President of the United States. That statement was made this afternoon in the arguments on this measure. I want to submit to the gentlemen that day before yesterday we were voting on an amendment which the President of the United States was vitally interested in, and to such an extent that he called from his office the Members at their offices to come over here and vote against a great committee of the House. I stood on the floor arguing in favor of the slum-clearance amendment. I called on the gentleman from Alabama to be here to vote for the amendment and in support of the President. The gentleman was not present. I saw him back there later and I asked him where he was when the President needed him. I asked the gentleman where he was.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I do not yield to the gentle-

I stood and watched to see if he would go through the line, and he did not go through the line, and I asked him that question.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that the President of the United States has on many occasions said that he did not expect to be right 100 percent of the time. He depends upon this Congress in the other 25 percent of the time to be a steadying balance which will in some measure have an influence on legislation passing through this House.

May I submit another proposition, that the one measure on which the President of the United States has taken more backwater than any other measure was the one in the beginning of the special session, brought in by the gentleman from Alabama and put over in this House under a plea to follow the leadership of the President. May I say that I then voted for the measure that the gentleman brought in, and under the same conditions I would vote for it again. But we have gotten along to a point now where we ought to exercise in some measure our own independence of thought and our own ideas. [Applause.]

May I say to the gentleman that I have talked to the President of the United States about this bill and he did not criticize me, as the gentleman from Alabama did, for exercising my own opinion. He considers that is the right of the Membership of this House. There has been some question here as to our making the Filipinos keep their money over here. This question was asked in committee, on page 10:

Mr. Robertson. Did the Philippine government keep its reserves here in accordance with law?

General Cox. By operation of their own laws plus the suggestion of the then Secretary of War, or from this Government, that the reserves be held on deposit in the United States in dollars, so that dollars were considered a reserve.

They made that law, and they made it because their own banks had dissipated their currency reserves, and it was safer to keep those currency reserves in the banks of this country.

Now, it has been said that if you vote against this bill, you are against the President's revaluation policy. Why is the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] voting for this bill? Because he is against the President's revaluation policy, and he knows he can go on the stump everywhere in this country and say that the President admits that his policy is wrong, because if he had not known it was wrong he would not have paid the Philippines the difference on their bonds, and you gentlemen know that. [Applause.] The minority leader knows this argument will ring in every political campaign in this country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I now want to read something else, but I first want to say this: I attended, I thought, every hearing on this subject. I have been absent from many meetings of the committee, as the chairman will testify. I have been a rather bad member of the committee with respect to several bills, but I attended, I thought, all the hearings on this measure, but sometimes the committee hearings were in conflict with other committee meetings, and I could not attend both. There never was one word of testimony that they could not take their gold out at any time before the revaluation.

Mr. GUEVARA and Mr. VINSON of Kentucky rose.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I yield first to the Commissioner from the Philippines, and then I shall yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. GUEVARA. Is the gentleman familiar with the fact that the Federal Reserve Act of 1913 requires the Philippine government to maintain its deposits in the United States in bonds with the Federal Reserve System?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. That it requires the Philippine government to keep their currency reserves here?

Mr. GUEVARA. Yes.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. You have the testimony taken before the committee over here in the House Office Building where these gentlemen were interrogated, and on every occasion they said they could have drawn this money out at any time they wanted to draw it out.

Mr. GUEVARA. Is the gentleman also familiar with the fact

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I have only 5 minutes, and I cannot yield to the gentleman further.

I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Do I understand my colleague from Kentucky to say today that a man may exercise the powers of his intellect and keep the pledges that he has made to his constituency without being disloyal to the President of the United States?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I know the gentleman from Kentucky also wants to take part in this political campaign down there, and I will say to him that when he gets down there, if he wants to take part in it, come on. I invite him in. [Laughter and applause.]

I refuse to yield any further.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will not the gentleman yield? Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I will not yield. The gentleman can move to strike out some words.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Does not the gentleman think he ought to yield?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. No; I will not yield. I know exactly what the gentleman is going to say.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Does not the gentleman think he ought to be fair enough today, when he says he is not disloyal to the President today, to state that a man who follows the dictates of his conscience, his judgment, and his pledges to a constituency-and I am referring to myself-was not disloyal upon a previous occasion?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I am willing to admit that. Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Well, that is my point. Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. That is all right.

Now, let me read from the statement of Colonel Stockton, on page 65 of the hearings. I had asked a question about the $23,000,000 of their last bond issue, which was money that was obtained in this country and here is what Colonel Stockton said:

The Philippine government borrowed the money and it is not due until 1952, and by that time nobody can tell what it will have to pay to redeem its bonds.

Here is what he further says:

By that time the United States may require that they pay in Suppose something happens to shift the value of this dollar. They are not going to give us this money back; and I want you to consider another thing: They talk about interlocking currencies, and I did not get time to discuss that a while ago. The law requires they can issue right now 12 for every dollar and that is all they ever could do. In 1929, when our dollars were worth only 60 cents, their pesos were worth just about one-third of what they are worth today. They did not ask anything then. In 1932, when the dollar was worth $2.04, their peso was worth twice as much or about three times as much as it was in 1929. They did not ask anything then.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Keller] is mistaken about gold being there. Our currency dollar is the backing of their currency and every dollar of it now supports $2 and every peso today buys more than it would have bought in 1929, and we do not owe them a dime; and unless you want to join with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] in saying that the revaluation program is a mistake, you ought to vote against this bill, so that the Philippine government and every other government and every other set of citizens that holds an American dollar walks in and takes that dollar at the same value as an American citizen does.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on the motion of the gentleman from Texas has been exhausted.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to

The CHAIRMAN. There is a motion to strike out the enacting clause pending and there has been 10 minutes of debate on the motion.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, the Chair has discretion in the recognition of speakers on the motion.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that only 10 minutes of debate is allowed on the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be pleased to hear the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BEEDY. No one having been recognized in opposition to the motion, I will be pleased to avail myself of a few moments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Kentucky was going to speak in opposition to the motion. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Maine is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that Kentucky is a great State. She has sent some fine men to the Congress, and I am glad to see her keep up the record. Incidentally, if it is not immodest, I may say that in times gone by, not in the present generation, Maine has sent some men down here who were not altogether slouches. [Laughter and applause.] I cannot refrain from calling attention to a situation which has developed here. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Brown] has taken the pains to emphasize the point to which I called his attention in the committee hearings. He has read to you from those hearings, showing how this situation is inevitably bound to yield a profit of $7,000,000 to the Philippines, and that amount of loss to us. That is unquestionably the fact; but I asked the gentleman at the time of the committee hearings if he did not see that his whole argument against this bill was directed against the devaluation program of the President, a program for which he voted? No; he did not see that—no; that was another matter. Now perhaps he sees the significance of my question to him in committee.

Mr. Chairman, whatever else the discussion of this bill may have accomplished, certain it is that it has done everything possible to disparage the program of the President of these United States embodied in the devaluation of the American dollar. Those who lead the opposition to the bill have shown to this House and the country the absurdity, the disastrous consequences that are inevitably attendant upon the devaluation of our dollar-a policy that involves loss to American citizens from every angle. In honor we must not only pay the Philippine government $23,000,000, but we must accept payment of the war loans from every debtor nation abroad in a depreciated dollar. Thus, in effect we drain the pockets of the American people of 40 percent of the war loans made to foreign nations. As another consequence of devaluation, we must add insult to injury by refusing to pay our own people 100 cents on the dollar for their Liberty Bonds, and compel them to take a 60-cent dollar in satisfaction of those bonded obligations.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I am delighted that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Brown] has made himself thus useful to the people of this country in showing them the truth and pointing out the folly and the fallacy of the policy for which you gentlemen have supinely stood, led by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton], who with his eyes closed, votes blindly, caring nothing for the consequences involved. and mindful only that his President commanded. Thus, notwithstanding that he was "unalterably opposed" to the curtailment of foreign obligations, he says he shuts his eyes and votes as the President wants him to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. BEEDY. Oh, I am delighted to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman now backed up by his minority leader over there?

Mr. BEEDY. Oh, don't worry about my being backed up by anybody.

Mr. BLANTON. But he has repudiated the gentleman.

Mr. BEEDY. I shall take care of myself and-

Mr. BLANTON. He is going to vote one way and the gentleman another.

Mr. BEEDY. And the minority leader will take care of himself. We have just opened the door to let in a little light, so that you gentlemen and the people of the Nation may see where we are being led by your party. I have endeavored to prove that the inevitably evil consequences of the new financial policy of this Nation are going to be catastrophic in their proportions.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield to the gentleman from New York because he is an expert in maintaining order in this House when he is in the chair, and I respect him for it.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. I thank the gentleman for those kind words. I rose to ask him if it is not a fact that the gentleman stands alone against practically every nation in the world which has devalued its currency.

Mr. BEEDY. I stand alone?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. The gentleman is in a unique

Mr. BEEDY. Point out to me what the gentleman means.
Mr. OLIVER of New York. Every nation in the world has devalued its currency.

Mr. BEEDY. That may be true.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Why not we?

Mr. BEEDY. If a gentleman in the south end of the chamber is dishonest and if that is true also of another in the north corner and yet another in the east corner, must I in the west corner also be dishonest?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Then the gentleman is the only honest man in the world.

Mr. BEEDY. Oh no; but the question of a sound dollar involves the question of fundamental financial integrity and political honesty.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Texas to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Blanton) there were—ayes 83, noes 117.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Those in favor of taking the vote by tellers will rise and stand until counted. (After counting.) Not a sufficient number and tellers are refused.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Taber: Page 1, line 6, strike out "$23,862,750.78."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the members of the committee will not overlook in this situation the real merits of what we are facing in this bill. We are not facing just one item that is provided for by this bill, but we are facing the whole situation, and when you are figuring equities you must figure the whole situation and not just a little piece of it. The little piece of it is what this bill provides for, and when we vote for this bill we are repudiating the whole picture, we are not facing it. You are handing $23,000,000 to the Philippine government, and on top of that you are making them a present of $30,000,000 that we gave to them when we devalued the dollar. If there should be further inflation I wonder if the proponents of this bill think we should come in here and hand them some more money.

I think we ought to face this situation with a sense of responsibility to our taxpayers, with a sense of fairness, with a sense of the equities of the whole picture. When you are looking at equities you should have the whole thing in front of you and not just a little of it. Let us forget personalities. Let us forget who is for it and who is against it, but let us think of what the situation is and what our duty is to the taxpayers of the United States. Shall we hand the Philippine government $53,000,000, or shall we be fair to the people of the United States and figure that we have done enough for them in devaluing the dollar, by giving them a net advantage on the bonds that they owe to the people of the United States? Why should we be playing favorites in this situation? Why should we do something that in our conscience we ought not to do, and betray the trust that we owe to the people of the United States?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber] has expired.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, the pathway in this life is not at all times strewn with roses. We do not stay here long, after all. I hope I am the last man in this House to do an injustice to a fellow man. I lost my temper a while ago and I regret that personalities have been injected into this debate. In addition to opposing the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber] I rise to make that statement.

I regretted, indeed, that the very assiduous, active, and able gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Brown], a member of the committee, saw fit several days ago to take exception as to how this matter was being handled. Naturally his attitude did not appeal to me. From time to time the gentleman had shown unusual interest in this bill, and I have tried to show him every courtesy. In the heat of debate both of us used language that I regret. I do not want the gentleman from Kentucky or a single man in this House to go away from here with the idea that I am one who would do an unjust or an unfair thing to a human being. I am sorry if he thought I was injecting myself into the campaign in Kentucky. I am not trying to run a campaign in Kentucky. I had a right to call attention to the fact that he was the only man who was not going along with all who studied this bill including President Roosevelt. It was a surprise to me. I, of course, recognized the genius of his argument if we base this question on individual transactions and bonds. It is a confusing argument. I did take occasion to call attention to his failure to support the President on this matter. I had a right to do this and I regretted his suggestion that the President was misled or failed to understand. The President has studied this question and understands it better than many who are opposing it. The language I used in anger I wish to withdraw from the RECORD.

Let me go further—you are not interested in these personalities, I know, but I think I should clear up the controversy as well as the record of what happened.

Mr. KENNEY. Oh, yes; we are very much interested in these personalities. I am, for one Member of this Congress. I do not like to see them when they become bitter.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I do not either, and I apologize to the House, as well as to the gentleman from Kentucky, for the language I addressed to him. We each had different votes in mind. The gentleman from Kentucky did call me as I walked through the hall yesterday afternoon, as the House adjourned, and reminded me that he had made a speech that afternoon on a matter in which the President was interested. I do not know what was in his heart. I took it good-naturedly. I said, "I was not here when you made your speech." That is my recollection. The gentle-man is correct to that extent, but I did not learn until today that he had called me to the support of the President. I have never needed such a call. He is correct in the fact that I did not go through tellers on the slumclearance item in the bill and was not in the hall when that vote was cast. That was the Prall amendment. I was here, however, when the amendment involving title II, in which I knew the President was interested was voted on, and voted for that amendment in the committee, as well as in the House. This explains the reason for my heated

Now, let us see about the losses here. They say they will sustain no losses. Every day they are sustaining losses. Why? They have to pay their tariff charges in American dollars with a depreciated peso. They will stand a loss of three and one-half million dollars per year on their tariff charges. In 10 years that is a lot of money. In addition to that they have outstanding railroad bonds payable in Swiss francs, guilders, florins, pounds, and so on. They are maturing gradually. The Philippine government will lose $10,000,000 in the payment of those bonds, yet you say they are suffering no losses. But, coupled with that, they would have been whole and the relationship of their currency reserve fund would have been maintained had we complied with their request which was rightly made, to give them gold for their dollars in order that they might keep 1932 and 1933 and often made.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I ask to proceed for just 1 minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McDUFFIE. There is no denial of the facts as to what would be depreciated, and the profit that might be made on certain bond issues when they are paid. We do not know when that will be. The issue is, Will you make whole a dependent government which has suffered as to its reserve fund, on which its currency is based, as the result of the act of a superior government and its guardian?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDuffie], has expired.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I feel the crucial test here is whether the United States held the moneys of the Philippine Islands as trust funds. If these moneys were trust moneys, then I believe that the United States Government should make good its trust and pay the moneys over to the Philippine government. There seems to be some dispute as to whether the relationship of debtor and creditor existed or whether in fact the United States occupied the position of a trustee of these funds.

I am satisfied so far that the United States Government held a trust relationship and, therefore, it is my conclusion that we ought not to overlook our trust and this money should, rightfully, be paid over to the Philippines. This is my considered judgment and I intend to vote accordingly. If this were not my absolute honest judgment I would vote the other way, for I would prefer to vote with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Brown]. I like the masterly way in which the gentleman stood up here and stuck by his guns in the face of bitter, vigorous opposition, and he has, I am sure, expressed himself and advanced his arguments according to his conscience and his own best judgment. He ought to have that privilege, and so had every other Member of this House, without being scorched or scorned by even the elder Members of this Congress.

And now I want to thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] for the boost that he gave my lottery bill this afternoon. [Applause.] It so happened that I did not want to discuss the proposition with him, but I am glad he is keeping the matter so indelibly fixed in his mind, for it is worthy of the consideration he is giving it, and I repeat for the benefit of the gentleman and the other Members that we should prepare ourselves to vote on the proposition, and when we do, of course the gentleman will vote conscientiously with the rest of us on this estimable measure, which inevitably must commend itself to the Congress.

Earlier in the debate, perhaps no one noticed it, for none has mentioned it, I listened to the dissertation on sleep merrily injected by the genial gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Britten]. In a light, untouching vein smiled from his countenance, he sang his already forgotten lullaby of the White House. Now he has been down there, I know. He has told me so. I have been there and so have you, and he knows, and I know, and you know, and all will agree that the most wide-awake man in Washington is the President of the United States. [Applause.]

As I said to you earlier in my remarks, it is my considered judgment that this money that we propose to pay over to the Philippine Islands is a part of their moneys intrusted to us, and is rightfully theirs. I believe this amendment should be defeated.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to inject myself into this debate, but when I listened to the specious and incorrect argument made by the gentleman from Maine in reference to this bill and its effect on the gold revaluation policy, I decided to expose the fallacy of his argument. [Laughter.]

The gentleman said that if this bill should pass it would be a repudiation of the gold revaluation policy. He said that in effect we would be saying to the American people that we would permit them to lose on the revaluation their reserve fund in dollars. That request was made in | policy but we would make good that loss to the Philippine people. As a matter of fact, the gentleman knows that the American dollar has not depreciated internally or domestically. The gentleman knows that the American dollar did depreciate on the foreign exchange to the extent of 40 percent, and the gentleman knows that the dollar today as measured in terms of 800 commodities is $1.44 compared with 57 cents in 1928 and 1929. The gentleman also knows, if he has ever investigated the subject, that the creditor today instead of taking a 60-cent dollar is getting $1.44 for the $1 he loaned in 1928. [Applause.]

Insofar as the argument of the gentleman in reference to giving the foreign nations 40-percent reduction on foreign debts is concerned, the gentleman also knows that we are not going to get even 2 percent of the foreign debts unless our debtors change their attitude. We are not going to get the foreign debts because they have been repudiated; and it is idle for the gentleman to argue that the revaluation policy will cost us 40 percent in war debts on account of the dollar being depreciated. When gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber undertake for the sake of this record to say that we, by our gold-revaluation policy, repudiated our obligations to the American people and that the effect of the passage of this bill will be to give to the Filipino people that which we deny to our own citizens, the gentleman knows, if they know anything about the subject, that the dollar internally or domestically has not depreciated but, as a matter of fact, is still appreciated in terms of the dollar of 1928 and 1929. Yet, repeatedly these incorrect statements are made by Republican Members in the very face of the facts, in the face of the index of commodity prices, in the face of that which is recognized by everyone, namely, that the dollar today is $1.44 as compared with the 57-cent dollar that prevailed during 1927, 1928, and 1929.

My purpose is to deny and contradict those statements that are repeatedly made by gentlemen on the other side of the House for the purpose of use in the coming congressional campaigns.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the debate today has strayed far afield. I doubt if the question presents the subject of the merits or demerits of the revaluing of the American dollar. So far as I am concerned, I am one who stood for revaluing the American dollar and I have not yet changed my mind. It is easy to criticize now, but may I say that if the American dollar had not been revalued, and if $3.30 would still buy a British pound, there would be more unemployment in the industries of the East. America was being driven from the markets of this world by virtue of the moneys of the rest of the world having depreciated below the normal value, leaving our money above the normal value in exchange. [Applause.]

Let us come now to the question involved today. Whether or not it was wise or unwise to devalue the dollar, the fact remains it has been done. It has been done by the American Congress and by the President of the United States, both of whom have been elected by the American people and, good or bad, the American people must stand by the policy. Therefore, it seems to me it is perfectly obvious that an American citizen stands on a different plane in this matter than the Philippine government, which is a dependent ward of this Government.

The gentleman from New York, whom I follow most frequently on matters pertaining to appropriations, suggests that we are taking $23,000,000, by this bill, from the taxpayers of the United States. We are doing nothing of the kind. The Government of the United States when it revalued the dollar marked up as a "windfall" or as a paper profit of $2,800,000,000. We said that belonged to the Treasury of the United States. The trouble is that $23,000,000 of this money belongs to the Philippine Islands. This is because $23,000,000 of this profit is based upon revaluing gold belonging to the Philippine Islands and not to the United States. We should not take it, and when we give $23,000,000 today to the Philippine Islands we are not taking it from the taxpayers of the United States. We are simply taking it from this "windfall", twenty-three million of which is not ours, but belongs to the Philippine!

This is a great Government. I should feel very much distressed if the time has come that the great Government of the United States profits by short changing her dependent ward, the Philippine Islands.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section close in 2 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, may I read briefly from the minority report. It states:

The Philippine Islands, according to testimony, produce six and one-half million dollars' worth of gold per year. This gold is worth 40 percent more when translated into money than it was before the President's proclamation. Between now and the time the bonded indebtedness is paid, they will have realized a profit of approximately $41,000,000 on the gold which they will produce.

Inasmuch as Great Britain produces $300,000,000 per year in gold, how much profit will Great Britain have to make on gold devaluation before those British welchers pay us their just obligations?

Mr. McDUFFIE. That gold is not produced by the Philippine government. It is produced by Americans in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. HOEPPEL. That is understood.

Mr. McDUFFIE. It is not at all connected with this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, between lines 6 and 7, insert: "and to establish on the books of the Treasury of the United States a credit in favor of the people of the United States for $2,787,150,375.22, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to issue United States Treasury notes in the latter amount and shall use such Treasury notes to pay current expenses of the United States Government", and insert the following on page 2, line 5, after the word "balances", "and the increase in value of the gold held in the Treasury of the United States for and in behalf of the people of

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin is not

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, the bill that we have before us provides that $23,800,000 shall be set aside for the credit of the Filipinos for the purpose of taking care of those people who live under the American flag in the Philippine Islands as a result of this gold revaluation. This amendment provides that similar treatment shall be given to the people who live in the continental United States, and that this money shall be placed to the credit of the people of the United States, and that Treasury notes shall be printed and issued to pay the current obligations of the Government.

All of the people of the continental United States will be placed on a par with those people who live under the American flag in the Philippine Islands. The bill proposes to dispose of a part of the profits that were made as a result of the gold revaluation by paying a part of the profits to the Filipinos, and my amendment merely provides that the balance of it be made available for the people of the United States by providing that the sum of $2,787,000,000 shall be used for the purpose of expanding the currency, and provides further that that amount be issued in new Treasury notes to be used for the purpose of paying a part of the current obligations of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the amendment is germane both to the section and to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLACK). The Chair is ready to

The bill deals with one class of people, to wit, the government of the Philippine Islands, while the amendment of derstood that.

the gentleman would cover all classes of people under the flag.

The Chair rules that the amendment is not germane and. therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of the receipts covered into the Treasury under section 7 of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, by virtue of the reduction of the weight of the gold dollar by the proclamation of the President on January 31, 1934, the amount necessary to establish the credit provided for the receipt of this set. in section 1 of this act.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do so for the purpose of completing the statement I previously made in reference to the total amount of the revaluation of the dollar which is due the Philippines, according to the arguments made here, of $39,000,000 and odd. On page 2 of the report it is stated that fifteen million one hundred and forty-three thousandand-odd dollars is interest which has accrued to the insular government since January 1923 and has been already credited by the banks to the Philippines.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDuffie], the chairman of the committee, in answer to my question, said that this interest was paid by the banks on the deposits of the Philippine government in those banks. This bill proposes that our Treasury is to deduct this $15,000,000-odd interest from the $39,000,000, which is the amount of the revaluation. Now, to whom is this interest to be paid? It is now in the bank account of the Philippines in American banks. The gentleman should answer us on this point. Who gets this $15,000,000? Does the United States Government get it or is it returned to the banks that have paid it to the Philippines or does it remain in the accounts of the Philippine government in these private banks?

Mr. McDUFFIE. No; these currency reserve funds have been accumulated from time to time and are made up in part of that interest; in other words, part of the $56,000,000

Mr. McFADDEN. But it stands to the credit of the Philippine government on the books of the banks at this time.

Mr. McDUFFIE. In 46 different banks of this country, and the Congress has authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to receive it at any time those in authority decide it is best for the government of the Philippines to put it in the

Mr. McFADDEN. Is this Government getting a part of the money that is lawfully due the Philippine government? Is the Government taking $15,000,000 of the amount due the Philippine government under this proposal? Unless the Philippine government draws a check to the United States Government or the banks, this interest, amounting to $15,000,000, will continue to belong to them. It is now in their possession.

Mr. McDUFFIE. No; I think the gentleman understands the situation.

Mr. McFADDEN. No; the gentleman does not understand it. There is something that is not covered in this bill. And I want full information about it.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman is quite an expert on finance and banking. Twenty-three million dollars was put in the various banks in 1923 at the direction of the Secretary of War, acting for our Government. On that, interest has accrued and has been added to the principal. It amounted to $56,000,000 on January 31, 1934. Now, had we given this reserve fund the full amount, relatively speaking, with the appreciated value of the gold dollar, this item would have been $39,000,000, but the President and all others in authority who have studied this problem said:

No; that is not equitable and fair. They did not have the gold here in bullion or in actual coin and could not have received interest on that, but they have received interest on these deposits and in all fairness that should be deducted.

This is what was done and I thought the gentleman unit clear, because the banks of this country have paid this $15,143,591.17 interest to the Philippine government and it has been placed to their credit. It is now a part of their hank account.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman is correct and I just stated that.

Mr. McFADDEN. Now it is evident that this interest which has been paid to them is to be confiscated by the United States Treasury, or by whom?

Mr. McDUFFIE. We are deducting from their reserve fund the amount of interest which they have received from these banks.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. McFADDEN. I have the floor, I may say to the gen-

I want to make it clear there is no obligation on the part of the United States Government to do this thing. This is a bank credit, and there never has been any obligation on the part of the United States to pay the Philippine government in gold. I would say to the gentleman from Alabama that the Treasury cannot deduct this $15,000,000 of interest from the bank account. The Government is either giving them the whole 40-percent appreciation under the gold-devaluation scheme or else there is a deal here to give the banks back $15,143,591.17 interest they have previously credited to the bank account of the Phillipine government. It is just some more fancy Treasury bookkeeping. I am sorry the gentleman does not know.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The President gave a good reason for the passage of this bill when he stated-

As the Philippine currency is interlocked with the United States gold dollar under laws enacted by the United States Congress, it would be equitable to reestablish the Philippine currency reserves on deposit in the United States at their former gold value as of January 31, 1934.

Now, unlike an individual in the United States, unlike any firm or corporation doing business in the United States, the government of the Philippines is doing business with other countries of the world as well as our own. If their dealings were confined strictly to the United States Government they would have no more complaint on account of gold revaluation than an American citizen or a firm or corporation doing business in America, because all their business being here, all their dollars are worth 100 cents on the dollar.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. In a moment. They deal with other countries of the world, and as the President said, their currency is interlocked with our currency and by revaluation they are placed in an unfavorable situation with other countries with which they deal. Therefore, their reserves should be reestablished. If this bill had been introduced to give them the same number of ounces of gold I do not believe anyone in the Congress, either House or Senate, would have raised his voice in opposition to it, because everyone would want to do that. Gold is what every country seeks as a reserve behind its currency, and the Filipino people had a right to expect gold behind their currency, but we took their gold or its equivalent and used it to expand $22.50 to every $1 of gold; we used it in our own business dealings in Amer-They now ask us to place them in the position that they were in, and as their guardian, we should place them back in that position.

When we revalued gold we reached up into the thin air and brought down $2,700,000,000 in thin-air money. trary to the belief of many people, we have $2,000,000,000 in the general fund of the Treasury of the United States today. That is part of your thin-air gold, or money that we brought down. The Philippines are asking us to give them that part of the increase that we got by reason of that revaluation of their gold. It is true, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Brown] argued, that they will be able to pay their debt to us with that devalued gold, but it will not cost the American

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman does not as yet make | Government one penny, because by reason of the revaluation we reached up into the thin air and brought down that amount of money, and it will not cost us one penny to do it. We are merely transferring their proportionate part of the profit that we placed upon the books of the Treasury that was brought down, as I said, out of thin air. I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

> Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman mean to say that if he had a $10 bill and out of the thin air reached up and got another $10 bill and thus had $20 and then gave away $10 that he would not be any

A REVIEW OF THE FARM QUESTION

Mr. ARENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARENS. Mr. Speaker, the main reason for a farm question is that the farmer for 10 years has produced the food of the Nation below the cost of production. During the war and right after the war, the farmer was asked as part of his patriotic duty to produce more in order to feed the world that could not produce during the war and shortly after the war. The farmer responded by extending his operations. He purchased larger and better machinery, built more and better buildings and improved old ones, and in some cases purchased more land. He borrowed a lot of money to do all these things. Before he was able to pay back these loans, boom prices disappeared. Since then prices have been such that the farmer was not able to pay the interest nor the ever-increasing taxes, together with cost of operation. He used up all his own resources and borrowed more money until today he is almost helpless.

The Democratic administration has recognized the fact that agriculture must be the first industry to be saved in order to save the Nation. In every other industry efficiency experts know fairly accurate what the demand for their product is going to be, and they can figure to a penny what it is going to cost to produce, and they usually regulate the production to the demand.

In agriculture this cannot be done. Man has no control over wind and rain and sunshine, and does not know what his harvest will be no matter how careful he is in planning and planting. He naturally must plant more land than is ordinarily necessary under favorable condition to feed and clothe the Nation. On this account surpluses occur whenever a bountiful crop is harvested. Many efforts have been made in the Seventy-third Congress to control production, to help distribution, and to finance the farmer. The farmer himself has not been able to give much aid to legislation, although he is able to plan local marketing. Representatives of farm organizations here in Washington have been here so long that the title of "professional lobbyist" is applied to them and their effectiveness is largely lost. The men in | was shamefully high although the farmer received a very charge of the A.A.A., sincere and able men, were willing to follow the lead of the President and give aid to agriculture by attempting to control production or marketing the surplus. Every time they made such an attempt we were told they were communistic and tried to sovietize the farmer. Enemies of the administration were able to repeat the charges of radicalism against the Agricultural Department so often that willing critics all over the country were repeating these charges to such an extent that it hampered the program. It is peculiar that the three measures, the Bankhead cotton bill, the Kerr tobacco bill, and the Fiesinger milk bill, all three measures that come the closest to sovietizing the farmer by licensing the producer, controlling the output, and taxing or taking over by the Government of surpluses produced, were not sponsored, nor supported, and to some extent opposed by this so-called "communistic brain trust" in the A.A.A.

The cotton and tobacco legislation has already accomplished some good and it is expected to bring great relief to the producers. It is, however, very temporary, only for 1 year. Corn and hog legislation and the wheat-allotment plan were not very popular on account of a processing tax. They have not shown many benefits so far, and the drought in the corn- and wheat-producing area will eliminate the surplus. The corn, hog, and wheat program will probably be terminated before it can show real results. Legislation in reference to financing farmers was passed and is more promising of good results. It has considerable red tape attached to it, which makes the needed relief very slow and the interest charges too high compared to the price of farm products. This will have to be corrected at a future session. All legislation in regard to agriculture, with the exception of the Farm Mortgage Act, is emergency legislation and does not extend beyond 2 years. The permanent solving of the farm question lies in the control of distribution. Control of production of foodstuffs or its destruction in case of produced surplus will not be sanctioned by a Christian people. Our present drought in the corn-wheat area reminds us what a reduction in the planting of those commodities may lead us into.

To solve the farm question, the farmer must receive more money for his produce. At present the city consumer cannot pay any more; therefore the first step must be to eliminate all profit on foodstuffs and all waste and unnecessary expense in the cost of distribution. This is done alone by cooperative marketing, and cooperative marketing is the only thing that will permanently solve the farm question.

To show how cooperative marketing can solve the proper method of distribution may I be permitted to state some experience I had as an officer of a cooperative organization? Land O'Lakes Creamery is an organization that markets butter, eegs, cheese, and poultry in Wisconsin, Minnesota, and the two Dakotas. It markets the butter of one-third of the cooperative creameries in this territory. Its two main competitors in the butter-producing section are two Nation-wide chain stores. Land O'Lakes pays its member creameries all it receives for the butter on the eastern market less actual hauling and processing cost. It handles the butter like all cooperatives, without profit. Its competitors have to meet this price and in many cases pay creameries a little more in order to keep them from joining Land O'Lakes. Ordinarily these competitors were able to add the extra cost to the sale price of butter in their stores and were able to meet the competitive price of cooperatives in the buying field.

To overcome this advantage, Land O'Lakes marketed its butter direct in the main markets. It established its warehouses in every large city and sold from there direct to the retail trade. By doing this it helped establish the sale price in those cities. It met competition on both ends. The result has been that the price the consumer paid and the price the producer received was very close together and very little profit made on butter. Out of every dollar the consumer paid, from 80 to 90 cents went to the producer. Large dairy corporations tell you that their profits come from milk, cream, and ice cream. There was no competition from cooperatives on these products. The price on these products low price. Private business will take all the traffic can bear while cooperatives operate without profit. Because the price of butter was kept reasonable the consumption of butter has increased. The price of ice cream until just recently was as high as during good times although butter fat was less than half, and the consumption of ice cream fell as much as 20 percent at times.

Eliminating profit increases consumption. Cooperatives always improve and standardize their products more so than if private dealers buy the farm products.

If Land O'Lakes controlled the selling of all butter, they could fix the price. Where they only handle a fraction they are compelled to enter the distributing market. Where they only handle one-third of the butter they were able to improve quality, eliminate waste, and unnecessary middlemen profit, and eliminate all profit on butter and help increase consumption. The proper method would be that all farmers organize a group for each commodity, and this group should sell direct to consumers' cooperatives organized in the cities. We must and will eliminate profit on necessities of life and this is the logical way. Our milk producers should have long ago organized cooperative consumers or entered the distributing end. The time of the cooperative that gathers large quantities of farm products and then dumps them into the laps of private speculators or distributors and permits them to make large profits is 30 years behind the times and should make room for the new deal. If farmers could be educated to handle their own products and receive the full reward for their labor, it would create a proud, independent, conservative bulwark or backbone of the Nation and communism could not gain a foothold. Such a program is a program of education. It will take 100 years to bring it about if farmers are left to themselves. You will have to educate a new generation. Farmers have demonstrated that during the last 2 years they have not been able to get together with a friendly Government.

The Government, however, has a duty to save agriculture. By proper legislation it can promote cooperation and bring about results in a short time. It may have to temporarily regimentize the farmer. It should help more than ever to organize, audit, and finance cooperatives. It should help build warehouses where in fat years the surplus can be stored and kept for lean years, and it should help by all means to find and develop new markets. It should help standardize products and, through cooperatives, keep inferior articles off of the market and through their organization even regulate production. By doing these things cooperatives will return to the farmer the larger part of the producer's dollar. It will keep the marketing in the hands of the farmer himself. If not, the distribution of butter, cheese, eggs, and poultry at least will be in the hands of chain stores, which would mean a ruinous return to the farmer.

SUMMARY OF CONSTRUCTIVE LEGISLATION ENACTED BY THE SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, as the present session of the Seventy-third Congress draws to a close, I believe it is fitting that we devote a few minutes to a discussion of the legislation which has been passed by this Congress in aid of the program of our beloved President.

At the close of the Hoover administration a heavy, dark cloud of despair and gloom pervaded our great country. The one and only ray of sunshine and hope for restored prosperity rested entirely in the course to be charted by our President and this Congress. Our economic order was crumbling on its very foundations, our industries were on the verge of bankruptcy, our banking system was tottering, our citizens were being evicted from their homes, our farms were devastated, unemployment was rampant throughout the land. Great and immediate reconstruction and recovery measures were necessary if our Nation were to be saved to measures into effect. Let us see how we have justified their faith. Time will permit me to dwell only briefly on the major accomplishments already in effect and to outline in a few words the steps yet to be taken in order to enlarge and perpetuate the results already achieved.

Our first great problem was to reform our banking and monetary system in order to encourage and conserve the savings of the people. To this end legislation was enacted which answered this purpose. The powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Federal Reserve Board were enlarged so that immediate relief was made available to thousands of banks throughout the land in which were invested the savings of millions. The monetary gold of the Nation was taken from the ownership and control of private individuals and placed in the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of us all.

In addition, we have just passed legislation nationalizing silver, so that a system has been inaugurated which provides for the monetization of that metal in a conservative relationship with gold, so that our currency has a sounder value today than at any other period in our Nation's history. We hope that this will lead the way to the restoration of the monetary system of the entire world and result in widespread improvement in foreign trade and commerce between

In order to safeguard deposits in the banks of the country we created the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, so that at the present time all deposits eligible to the benefits of that legislation up to the amount of $5,000 are now insured in full by the Federal Government, and eventually deposits regardless of size will likewise be protected. In addition to this, we have instructed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to liberalize its method of appraising assets in closed banks, so that a much greater amount of money will be available for distribution to depositors in those banks and a minimum will have been lost because of the defects of the system which prevailed through the Hoover administration. In conjunction with this, I might add that I was instrumental in making available to receivers and conservators of closed banks the benefits of mortgage refinancing by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. This has materially helped both the depositors, in that a liquid security readily converted into cash has been substituted for a frozen mortgage, and also the mortgagors in that a mortgage in default and subject to immediate foreclosure was converted into a sound long-term mortgage with very reasonable provisions for payment of principal and interest.

To alleviate unemployment, eliminate unfair practices in industry, abolish child and sweatshop labor, reduce hours of work, and increase wages, enforce the rights of the American workingman to bargain collectively with his employer, promote trade and commerce throughout the land, inaugurate a great public-works program, the National Industrial Recovery Act was passed and the machinery for its operation immediately created. Business has been revived, 4,000,000 of the unemployed have returned to work, wages have increased. How well we have succeeded is amply demonstrated by the returning confidence of our citizens because of the tremendous improvement in the industrial situation beginning with the summer of 1933 and extending through the present time. What we have done for industry and the workman in the city, we have also done for agriculture and the farmer in the rural community. We have created the Agricultural Adjustment Administration which has made it possible for the farmer to work his farm at a profit instead of a loss. The Farm Credit Administration has made it possible for him to refinance his obligations on a sound basis over a long period of time with reasonable provisions for the repayment of same. I believe I can safely venture to say that the farmer and the mechanic, now working hand in hand for the common good, will eventually restore this Nation to a permanent, prosperous condition, never before approached in the history of the world.

The legislation which created the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and the act passed in the House of Representatives | possession of the facts.

its citizens. The people had faith that we would put these | on Wednesday, June 13, 1934, enlarging its power has not only saved the homes of hundreds of thousands of our fellow citizens but has also given a new stimulus to business throughout the country. It will eventually result in affording the opportunity to every American family to own a pleasant habitable residence without the constant fear of its being taken away by ruthless foreclosure. I am sincere in my prayer that our children will live to see the day when slums and filth shall no longer exist to disgrace our civilization. We have gone far toward making this dream a reality, and we shall not stop until our purpose has been fulfilled.

We have passed legislation which will have the effect of safeguarding the investments of our citizens; I refer to the Securities Act and the stock-exchange control bill. The loaded dice have been taken from the hands of the Wall Street manipulators, but at the same time we have made it possible for anyone to buy and sell an honest security at a fair price.

While not interfering with the rights of the States to enforce their own criminal statutes, we have provided the means for the Federal Government to assist them in this end. In the future commerce in organized crime, racketeering, and kidnaping will indeed be a dangerous undertaking for the criminal.

We have eliminated the loopholes whereby those so inclined have been enabled to avoid payment of their just share of the cost of good government. It has been conservatively estimated that $300,000,000 yearly has slipped through the hands of the poor into the hands of the ultrarich because of the defects in the revenue law. This condition has been remedied.

The immigration and naturalization laws have been liberalized so that law-abiding persons who heretofore could not become citizens are now eligible for citizenship at much lower cost to themselves. This will aid the worthy who desire to become citizens of our great country.

I should like to pause for a moment to mention an undertaking in which I was particularly interested because of the need existing in my own district for it. I refer to the subsistence homesteads project. The machinery has already been set in motion whereby those of our citizens who so desire may own and cultivate a small plot of land and at the same time be close to the industry in which they earn their livelihood. I have been informed by the director that 100 of these farm homes will be established shortly near my district, and I am highly pleased in the part I played in bringing this to pass.

While we have achieved much, our program has not yet been completed. The Seventy-fourth Congress and those to follow will make a thorough study of social legislation discussed briefly by our President last week. In this category I include old-age pension and unemployment-insurance measures, which will eliminate the dole. Our Constitution, like the Holy Bible, sets forth our principles for decent living, liberty, freedom, and justice. We have declared it to be our purpose to make available to all our people, from the most humble to the mightiest, the benefits to be derived from our form of government. We shall perpetuate the American system created by our forefathers. To this we have pledged ourselves. Let each American judge how well we have performed our mission.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. It has been called to the attention of the American Federation of Labor, through a misleading speech published in the Congressional Record, that manufacturers in the cotton-garment industry are endeavoring to induce Members of Congress to bring political pressure to bear on the N.R.A. The impropriety of such procedure is obvious, and I am confident no Member of the House or the Senate will be a party to it once he or she is placed in The cotton-garment industry is a sweated industry. Hours are unreasonably long; wages are unreasonably low. The industry has been in this unfortunate condition for years. The code approved by the National Recovery Administration has brought about some improvement, but standards are still far below those of related industries.

The N.R.A. has been asked to raise the standards in the cotton-garment industry, and a hearing has been arranged for Monday, June 18.

The sweatshop proprietors evidently feel that they cannot successfully defend long hours and low wages before an impartial tribunal. They know that the facts are all against them. Therefore, they are endeavoring to play politics with an issue which involves the well-being of approximately 200,000 men and women. They are therefore deluging the country with this false propaganda.

They are asking Members of the House and Senate to appear at the hearing and to protest against the proposed changes on the ground that they will destroy the industry and restrict the market for cotton. Of course, there is not the slightest foundation in fact for these claims. By increasing employment and wages and thereby building up consumers' purchasing power, the markets for cotton clothing and for raw cotton will be greatly expanded.

Enlightened employers and spokesmen for the organizedlabor movement will appear at the hearing prepared to prove by a wealth of statistical data that wages should be raised and hours shortened. They will come before the N.R.A. with clean hands. They will contend that politics has no place in the determination of the issues raised.

The American labor movement asks Members of Congress to refuse to be influenced against capable representatives of labor who are sincerely endeavoring to remedy indefensible economic wrongs which approximate sweatshop conditions in the cotton garment manufacturing industry.

AID TO THE DAIRY INDUSTRY MUST BE HANDLED AS A PUBLIC UTILITY

Mr. HENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HENNEY. Mr. Speaker, fellow colleagues, I desire to address myself today briefly on the subject of the dairy industry. The supply, distribution, and consumption of milk and its products affect, to a greater extent, the financial income, health, and well-being of a larger proportion of our American people than any other agricultural commodity.

This industry ranks first in farm income, having reached a high point of nearly 2 billion dollars annually in 1930 to a low point of approximately 900 millions in 1933. It is the most universally used food product of adults throughout the world, and as a food for infants and invalids it is as indispensable as are drugs and medicines in saving the lives of our malnourished and sick children and grown-ups, as well as being a dire necessity in infant feeding in every village, hamlet, and city of our country. Science has produced no suitable substitute for milk—and yet, Mr. Speaker, I submit that this industry has had less assistance and protection by our Government than any other major agricultural commodity.

We have enacted legislation that has figuratively "saved the hide" of the cotton producer. We have given the wheat farmer the protection that he has been clamoring for during the past many years and that protection which he was led to believe a protective tariff would insure-even to the direct rebate of the processing tariff-in such a way that it is an assured and not an assumed fact that he will be reimbursed to the extent of the tax when and if he complies with the acreage reduction contracts. I wish to add here and now, Mr. Speaker, that this program has been and is a real lifesaver to those wheat farmers who did not allow themselves to be stampeded by a group of rabble rousers into objecting to and obstructing the program in their hopes that it might be broken down. Those producers who cooperated are now receiving their contract checks on a basis of 1932 and 1933 production, although the unfortunate and devas-

The cotton-garment industry is a sweated industry, tating drought has left them without a solitary bushel of ours are unreasonably long; wages are unreasonably low, wheat to sell.

The corn-hog farmers and the tobacco producers are likewise receiving the beneficent assistance of the Government, but our dairy farmers—those of my State and of my district in Wisconsin—are still out in the cold. I am not one of those who criticize and damn the triple A because of its method of handling the milk situation. I have consulted, contacted, and communed with them day after day in attempting to have this industry given a "chance for its white alley." The problem is difficult, it is intricate, and it is involved. A plan that will be of assistance to one group may be strenuously objected to by another group, and a compromise is most frequently met by opposition from all groups.

I have reference, Mr. Speaker, to the milk-shed group, who, I am sorry to say, are at the mercy of the distributors, many of whom are real pirates and buccaneers. This group of middlemen have been responsible for and have insisted on the two-grade classification; namely, first, that portion dispensed directly to the trade and for which the top price is allowed, and second, the so-called surplus milk, which latter is simply in reality an accessory supply to be used in case of "a run." All that is not used, and which amounts to approximately 30 percent of the farmers' milk sold through these distributors, is converted into butter or milk products and shipped back to compete with and beat down the price of butter, cheese, and canned-milk products of the farmers living outside the milk-shed district. This milk is usually sold by the farmers for a price of approximately 90 cents to $1 per 100 pounds, which is a price that is ruinous to the industry in "the hinterlands."

My district in Wisconsin is very largely outside the Chicago and Milwaukee milk shed, and my dairy producers have a real and valid complaint against this procedure, but, leaving that element out of consideration, it is an unfair and discriminatory procedure for a great percentage of those farmers living within the drainage area; and until this policy is better adjusted our producers in the midland districts will continue to be subject to unfair competition.

The worst parasites in the milk industry, as I see it, Mr. Speaker, are the monopolistic distributors who vote themselves enormous salaries and pay themselves huge dividends at the expense of the dairy producer. I supported and assisted in bringing out the so-called "Kopplemann resolution", calling for a congressional investigation of milk distributors and processors, and I am certain that when the facts become known that the American consumers will rise up in their might in demanding the control and supervision of these "milk brokers" who, it appears, have profited in the past and at the expense of the farmer who is obliged to produce milk on a less-than-cost basis. At the same time they have advanced the price to the consumers to a point that underconsumption and lack of consumption have tended to pile up a milk surplus that beats the price down by making the farmer be good and accept any price they may wish to offer him.

It was shown in the hearings, Mr. Speaker, that the producers in New York State were receiving  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cents per quart, while the consumers in New York City were paying 16 cents per quart, or in other words, the distributor returns about 9 cents out of every consumer's dollar to the producer.

The Consumers' Guide, which is put out by Frederick C. Howe of the Triple A, shows that at the present time, for all milk products, the farmer received about 37 cents of the consumer's dollar; whereas 1 year ago he was receiving about 45 cents of it.

It was likewise shown by Miss Grace Abbott, of the Children's Bureau, that in a study of a large group of railroad employees whose wages had been cut 30 percent, milk consumption among 90 percent of them had been cut 50 percent and 27 percent had discontinued using milk entirely. I therefore submit, Mr. Speaker, that the purchasing power of industrial labor is quite necessary to a continuing normal consumption of milk, butter, and cheese, and certainly if the consumers' price can be lowered either through cooperative production and distribution or through a voluntary reduction in retail price brought about by the Kopplemann investigation, or lastly through cooperative purchasing by the retail trade, then, and then only, Mr. Speaker, will the producer receive his just and equitable share of the consumer's dollar and then again will the consumer receive the honest quantity that his dollar has bought and then so-called "underconsumption" will vanish—all of this will be insured only by stricter supervision of the machinery of distribution.

I am in perfect agreement, Mr. Speaker, with Miss Abbott that in the interests of the producer, in the interest of public health and the saving of infants' lives, the milk industry should be considered and operated as a public utility by our Government, and I also believe, Mr. Speaker, that this is the only solution of the problem if we really desire and intend to give our dairy producers a square deal along with the new deal.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SECREST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SECREST. Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce reported a resolution this morning providing for a study of the oil industry. It is hoped that this will enable the next Congress to pass proper legislation. I want to present a few facts which I feel will be appreciated by Members of the House on this subject.

In my district as well as in the State of Ohio there are thousands of people whose prosperity and welfare depend upon the production of coal and oil. Not only must we produce these two commodities if we are to prosper but we must be able to sell them at a price that will guarantee just and satisfactory wages to the employees and a reasonable return to those whose capital is invested.

The regulation of commerce in petroleum is of vital importance and necessity to the producers of oil and, incidentally, to the producers of coal. I shall speak primarily on the problems facing the oil industry.

To understand these problems a few essential facts should be held in mind.

Since America's first oil well was drilled near Titusville, Pa., in 1859, the United States had produced approximately 16,000,000,000 barrels of oil up to January 1, 1934. There are 319,419 producing oil wells in the United States, and these wells produce at the present time slightly over two and one-half million barrels each day.

Of the total wells in production, 300,000, or 92 percent are wells of settled production, commonly referred to as "stripper wells." These stripper wells may be divided into four groups, based on the amount of oil produced. The first consists of 50,000 wells which produce less than 4 barrels each day. The second consists of 50,000 wells which produce less than 3 barrels each day. The third consists of 50,000 wells which produce less than 1 barrel each day. The last consists of 150,000 wells which produce less than onehalf barrel each day. These 300,000 stripper wells are the backlog of the Nation's supply of crude oil, and if they are forced out of production by destructively low prices, the Nation will suffer a great and irrecoverable economic loss. The greatness of this loss is emphasized by the fact that science has determined that no more than 25 percent of the oil originally in the sand has been taken from these stripper well areas, leaving to time and the ingenuity of man to recover the other 75 percent.

For generations these wells will continue to contribute to our national wealth if we can make their operation profitable. In my district, near Chesterhill, in Morgan County, there is a well that has been in continuous production since 1861, and today, although it is the oldest producing well in the world, it contributes its small share to our national wealth. In the last 4 years 5,000 wells similar to this one have been abandoned in Ohio alone because it was economically impossible to operate them with oil selling for less than $1 per barrel. Future generations must certainly condemn us if we revert to conditions that compel the abandonment of small wells with the consequent loss forever of such great aggregate quantities of oil. The welfare of our Nation demands that these small producing wells must be saved. Eighteen States are engaged in the production of oil, yet three States, California, Oklahoma, and Texas, produce more than 70 percent of the Nation's supply. Regulation, in my opinion, will be beneficial to every oil-producing State, both large and small.

Let us go back to 1931 for a brief picture of the pitiful condition of the oil industry. The average price for oil throughout the United States during that year was 65 cents per barrel. This condition brought about the abandonment in 1 year of 1,589 producing wells in Ohio alone, while the same general demoralized condition existed in practically every oil-producing State of the Union. During the first half of 1932 conditions grew steadily worse.

In the early months of that year it was my privilege to support in the Legislature of Ohio a resolution memorializing Congress to place a tariff on the importations of crude oil and its products. The same urgent appeal was made from other sections of the country and Congress wisely placed a duty of 21 cents per barrel on crude and fuel oil and $1.05 per barrel on gasoline imports. This tariff went into effect June 21, 1932, and the next month imports of crude oil dropped from 6.811.000 barrels in June to 1.525.000 barrels in July. Gasoline shipped in from foreign countries dropped from 1,316,000 barrels in June to 63,000 barrels in July. The price of crude oil arose with such rapidity that by the end of 1932 the average price of all oil in the United States for the whole year of 1932 was 87 cents per barrel. a gain of more than 33 percent over the previous year. This tariff, together with curtailment of production in nearly every oil field of the Nation, gave us a short period of rapid recovery.

This recovery lasted only a short time, for in December 1932 the price of oil began a decline that drove prices to the lowest levels in history in practically every field in the United States. The price of oil in the east Texas field fell from 75 cents per barrel on January 19, 1933, to 10 cents per barrel on April 25, just 3 months later. The price of Pennsylvania crude oil produced in my district dropped to 77 cents per barrel on May 9, 1933. From one end of the Nation to the other oil was produced at a loss by the operators and the royalty checks of the landowners dwindled to almost nothing.

Not only was this disastrous to the oil industry, but it affected the production of coal as well. We cannot hope to prevent the natural competition of one commodity with another, but cheap oil was thrown into unnatural, unwarranted, and unjust competition with coal, resulting in great loss to the producers of coal and no profit to the producers of oil.

In 1933 the consumption of fuel oil was equal to more than 80,000,000 tons of coal. A reasonable price for oil would certainly have prevented much of this loss of market suffered by the coal industry. During the years of 1931 and 1932 oil burners alone replaced the market for 3,300,000 tons of coal. At least 1,200 miners lost continuous work by this replacement and at the same time the actual producers of this oil failed to profit. There was no justification for this competition, inasmuch as both competitors suffered severe loss. In general, the situation for several years seemed hopeless. The oil industry was demoralized. Voluntary agreements had failed. State militia had been called. Other schemes were devised to control production and assure fair prices. Eventually, all efforts failed, and the desired result seemed more hopeless with the collapse of each new plan.

In the spring of 1933 the Congress passed the National Industrial Recovery Act and soon the oil producers of the country began to consider the possibilities of drafting a code for the industry. Each day as the drafting of the code progressed the chaotic condition of the oil industry of past years was forcefully brought to the attention of the Nation, and the very hope of order and regulation was sufficient to | lend strength to market prices.

In September 1933 the petroleum code went into effect, and in 9 months of operation it has proven its advantage to the oil industry. It has helped the large producer just as it has aided the small producer.

For example, Mr. Speaker, the production in the east Texas field in April 1933 was 41,037,000 barrels, according to the Bureau of Mines. The price quoted and paid for this oil by the major companies on the 25th of April was 10 cents per barrel. Other companies paid less and in fairness let it be said that a few companies bound by contracts paid substantially more. At this price, the production for April 1933, 5 months before the code went into effect, was worth less than $5,000,000.

In April of this year, 7 months after the code was effective, the production of this same field, which is the largest in Texas, brought $31,935,000 despite the fact that production was cut over 9,000,000 barrels. Thus, east Texas received in April 1934, compared to April 1933, many times the amount of money for 25 percent less oil. This higher price for oil has remained constant since the adoption of the code 9

Now, let us see the effect of the code on a field composed of typical stripper wells, namely those wells in Ohio producing Pennsylvania grade crude oil. On May 9, 1933, the price posted for this oil in Ohio was 77 cents per barrel, far below the actual cost of production. One year later, May 1, 1934, the price of this grade of oil was quoted at $2.07 per barrel.

In Ohio two other grades of oil are produced, the Lima grade in the northwestern section of the State, and the Corning grade in the northern and central sections of the While the quality of oil in these fields is somewhat lower than that of southeastern Ohio, yet the price of all grades of oil increased in proportion to the quality. Thus, under the code, by reason of its inherent worth and wise administration, great benefit has been derived by the oil industry. The great fields have gained financially and at the same time have retained millions of barrels of oil for future sale. The small fields have gained financially and are free to produce that oil which without the code often would be lost forever.

It is to insure these benefits that the Secretary of the Interior, who is the administrator of the oil code, and the President of the United States have requested the enactment of the Disney bill.

Let me quote from a letter sent by the President to the chairman of the Senate and the House committee to which this bill was referred. He says:

If the principle of prorating production under a code is to be maintained, it seems necessary that the existing law should be strengthened by the passage of the bill which has been introduced in the Senate by Senator Thomas and in the House by Congressman Disney and supported by the Oil Administrator.

It is a simple fact that as a result of the work of the Oil Administrator definite progress has been made both in eliminating unfair practices and in raising the price of crude petroleum to a reasonable level, which has brought added employment and more fair wages to those engaged in oil production.

more fair wages to those engaged in oil production.

I am frankly fearful that if the law is not strengthened, illegal production will continue and grow in volume and result in a collapse of the whole structure. This will mean a return to the wretched conditions which existed in the spring of 1933.

I hope therefore that the proposed legislation can be enacted.

I am eager to protect the stripper wells of the entire United States, as well as those of my district. To these wells it means economic life or economic destruction. Though Texas has the greatest flush fields in the United States, there are thousands of small wells in that great State that would suffer the same fate as the stripper wells of my district for the average production for the 48,000 wells in Texas was less than 23 barrels in 1933. For every gusher there are hundreds of small wells in Texas and elsewhere that need the protection this bill seeks to give.

If oil is to be maintained at a reasonable price by controlling production, I want to be sure of two things. First, I want to feel sure that the high price of oil at home does not throw our markets open to foreign competitors. Second, I want to know that this increased price will not place an undue burden upon the consumers of this Nation. The only way to answer these questions is to make a complete examination of the available facts.

I will briefly discuss the question of imports first, and it is well to bear in mind that imports of oil fall into two classes; first, those that enter into domestic commerce and compete with oil produced in the United States. On this class of imported oil we levy a duty or tariff of 21 cents per barrel, which can be increased to more than 30 cents per barrel by Executive order, if the domestic market is threatened at any time in the future.

The second class of imports are known as free imports on which there is no duty because not one barrel of this oil is consumed within the boundaries of the United States. This oil is fuel oil which is stored at our principal ports and is used exclusively to refuel foreign vessels that come to our shores.

It is a common and misleading error to refer to both classes of oil as actual imports in the common sense of the word. It is just as ridiculous to say that a visiting king imported $1,000,000 worth of diamonds because he brought them with him during a short visit and then took them to his native land on his return.

The only real imports are those that enter our land for purposes of competition in our domestic markets. Either ignorance, or an intentional disregard of this fact, was unjustly used as the basis for criticizing the oil code administrator before the Senate committee a short time ago.

The real facts regarding imports are easily understood. The tariff on oil took effect in June 1932. Immediately the imports of crude oil, gasoline, and fuel oil fell to the lowest levels since 1918. When the oil code was drafted a provision was inserted that gave the administrator the right to restrict the importations of oil to the average daily imports for the 6 months immediately following the effective date of the tariff, inasmuch as these 6 months afforded slim picking in the United States for the foreign producers of oil.

This quota of allowed imports amounts to 108,000 barrels of oil per day. The statement was made to the Senate committee that the administrator permitted imports to the amount of 117,000 barrels per day. It is true that this much touched our shores, but of this amount 19,000 barrels was free oil that did not enter our markets. The facts, in justice to Mr. Ickes, show that 10,000 barrels less competitive oil is being imported daily than the amount permitted under the code. It is a fact that imports for March of this year, even including free oil, are less than imports for March of last year, when the oil code was not even thought of as a possibility.

On the other hand, exports of petroleum have more than held their own, with an increase of more than 3,000,000 barrels in 1933, according to figures of the United States Bureau of Mines.

Thus, without doubt, a much fairer price has been established for crude oil under the code, and at the same time our markets are better protected from importations of

Let us now consider the consumer. Have we placed a burden on him when we raise the price of crude oil from which his gasoline is refined? Facts alone can give us the true answer, and these show that the average price of gasoline at the refinery during the first quarter of 1934 was almost one-half cent less per gallon than in 1932. I have two excellent authorities for this statement, the Petroleum Administrative Board and the Bureau of Mines. The Oil and Gas Journal for January 25, 1934, states that the price of gasoline at the refinery was lower in 1933 than in 1932. Better refining methods have, no doubt, been largely responsible for the decrease in the price of gasoline in the face of greatly increased prices of crude oil. I have used refinery prices because these reflect the only real basic effect that the price of crude oil can have on gasoline. From the refinery to the consumer the price is governed entirely by distribution costs and not by the price of oil.

Because of additional employment and higher wages along the line of distribution, the actual price to the consumer at the gasoline station has increased a fraction of a cent over the depression price of 1932. This negligible advance cannot be charged to the increased price of crude oil. Also, it must be remembered that gasoline is made chiefly from the lower-priced oil. The better grades of oil are used for lubrication and the comparatively high price always paid by the consumer for lubricating oil has permitted the industry to absorb what would usually result in increased prices.

For instance, there are 42 gallons in a barrel of Pennsylvania oil produced in my district. From this it is possible to refine 5 gallons of good lubricating oil in addition to all other products. This refined oil for automobiles sells for an average of 80 cents per gallon at the filling station and thus, it is possible for the price of oil to increase considerably without necessary increase to the consumer.

Certainly, to say the least, the consumer has not felt any undue or unjust burden by reason of the great improvement in the oil industry. With a clear conscience and with the most logical reasons we can take steps to retain by law the ground gained by the operation of the oil code.

The oil industry ranks third in the United States and stands second only to cotton in our national exports. It is a great natural resource which we must conserve.

For generations we wasted the timber resources of our Nation and today we are spending great sums to restore that which we so foolishly destroyed.

Unlike trees, oil cannot be replaced. Conditions should be such that no well will be abandoned from which it is possible to produce a reasonable supply of oil.

Under the code the small stripper wells have been given a new hope. Production has more nearly been brought to balance consumption. Wages to employees in the stripper-well areas of 10 States increased 55 percent while employment increased 34 percent. Royalty checks again brighten the homes of countless people. Two and one-half million investors see greater values in their holdings. Coal is relieved of an unnatural and unnecessary competitor. The consumer of petroleum products has not suffered. All this, and more, has been achieved in 9 short months of operation under the oil code.

I hope that we will do all in our power to prevent a loss of ground while we bend every effort toward greater gains. As I see it, this is not only our duty to the present generation, but a duty to generations to come. The question of conserving our natural resources is not only the concern of every State, but it is the concern of the National Government as well. Sooner or later Congress must face the issue.

I had hoped action on the Disney bill would be taken at this session of Congress, but the committee decided to investigate and make a complete report on the oil industry for the attention of Congress when it meets next January. At that time I hope for immediate and conclusive action.

SUGAR PROCESSING TAX

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I invite your attention to the following item in the Washington Star of June 5, which is rather illuminating:

The A.A.A. and the press have started a little private feud. When the sugar-allotment figures were announced the other day, news men were gathered into a room for a conference. An arrangement was made so the news would not be sent out until the conference was over and the matter thoroughly explained.

The conference lasted about half an hour. When the news men dashed to their wires they found the figures were out in the financial district in New York and actually had reached Cuba.

It was found that someone in the A.A. had leaked the figures to representatives of sugar concerns who spread it broadcast, scooping the press by half an hour or more.

That item leads me to some reflections upon the despairing situation of the American farmer that may be of interest to the Members of this House and to the American public, particularly the farmer.

Years ago farm life in the Middle West was a rather happy lot. It is not so happy today. After the farmer has planted a crop, he must start worrying about the chinch bug, the army worm, the Hessian fly, and a host of other things. If he gets a crop he has to worry about the market price that it will command. If prices are low, he has to worry about the principal and interest on the mortgage.

The market price years ago was not so grave a concern as it is today, because he had a market. He could feed corn to pigs and there was a market for the ham, the lard, and the bacon. He had to raise a certain quantity of products for his horses and mules. He could feed corn to beef cattle and find a market. He had no difficulty in disposing of butter and cream. More and more uses were found for the manufactured products of corn and that market was expanding. The distilleries used corn in the production of whisky and alcohol and when alcohol was being promoted as an antifreeze solution for auto radiators, the possibilities seemed tremendous. The prospects for the farmer looked rosy indeed and land values went up.

Today, the farm picture is distressing to say the least. The chinch bug, the drought, the Hessian fly, the Army worm are still with him, but that is not the saddest aspect of agricultural despair. The mortgages and the interest requirements are still with him in increased measure, but that difficulty might be surmounted. The real difficulty is that the market for farm products is being slowly but surely strangled and the farmer's prospects are about as bright as those of a man who sits in the death cell of Sing Sing prison.

Now the tragic aspect of this whole market situation is that the farmer has been kidded, bilked, guyed, sopped, and plundered by a lot of ballyhoo emanating out of Washington. A grim cruel joke has been played on him in the guise of aiding him and it is about as humorous as dropping an iron washer in a blind man's cup and stealing a dime. Now this not a partisan speech. I am interested in recovery first and politics afterward. I will vote for any measure that contains some reasonable assurance that it will be of genuine benefit to the farmer, the business man, the laboring man. No Member of Congress can listen to the despairing cries of farmers in danger of foreclosure, of laboring men without jobs, of business men on the ragged edge of insolvency without uttering in his heart a fervent prayer for Divine guidance in getting out of our difficulties.

Look at the Record and you will note that during all of the Seventy-third Congress, I have said little or nothing about the "brain trusters", the hot dogs, the radicals, and the Bolesheviki. I did not like their brand of regimentation and control but I was willing to go along with these schemes because after all they might have turned out all right. I recall what Glenn Frank, president of Wisconsin University, once said to the effect that you can put a radical in jail but you may find a few days later that he was right. I did not feel like getting out on a limb on these involved and complicated schemes of crop control and reduction and hog slaughtering because I felt that the Department of Agriculture and the Agricultural Adjustment Administration had more facts than I and they might be right.

But recently I have been getting suspicious that there is something wrong in Washington. These suspicions were aggravated when I noticed the speed with which the United States Senate recently confirmed the treaty with Cuba, handing to that little island republic its unequivocal freedom on a platter without any strings tied to it. The ink was scarcely dry on that treaty down in the State Department at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue until it was rushed to the Senate by special messenger and passed by that body. Ordinarily the Senate does not do business that way. They are a deliberative body. This treaty business therefore seemed very strange indeed. Senators, too, were suspicious and the word went around that they were getting ready to break the gentle news to Cuba about how much or how little sugar she could send to the United States next year and perhaps the year after that. They figured that Cuba would get mad. They were afraid of open hostilities and of the need for taking the fleet right away from the imposing review in New Hork Harbor and dispatching it to Cuba to comfort and assuage the anger of the Cubans. There were, of course, some intimations that perhaps a movement was on foot to restore Gerardo Machado, the former brutal, bloody-handed tyrant of Cuba to the presidency. Bullets have been breaking the widow lights in the home of Jefferson Caffery, the American Ambassador down there, and his chauffeur was informed that if he and his boss did not move out of Cuba, they might have an informal engagement with the undertaker. Anyway, a lot of reasons, real and fancied, were advanced for the immediate adoption of the treaty and so it was adopted and ratified.

Now, the farmer may wonder what relationship exists between an Illinois cornfield and the island of Cuba. To that I answer, "Plenty." But that is one of the perplexities of life. Life on this planet is closely integrated. We little realize how small this world is and how a frost in the Illinois Valley on Tuesday night will be registered in the Liverpool market Wednesday morning. The fact is that this treaty business confirmed what was going on in my thoughts, and I proceeded to look up the names and connections of a few gentry whose actions seemed tinged with ulterior motives, and I believe you will be interested in the kind of a deal that is being prepared for agriculture.

By way of preliminary, let me say that in 1933 this country imported nearly 180,000,000 pounds of tapioca flour from Java and the Dutch East Indies, which is used for making glue, for sizing textiles, and a lot of other purposes. This quantity replaces millions of bushels of corn. We import millions of pounds of oils and fats for use in oleomargarine and soap despite the fact that we have 37,000,000 pounds of butter in cold storage. We have got 65,000,000 pounds of beef in storage, but despite that fact we seem to find it necessary to import beef in cans from Argentina and Uruguay. We have got 40,000,000 pounds of frozen eggs and 90,000 cases of shell eggs in storage, and yet in 1932 we seemed to find it necessary to import 30,000 cases of shell eggs and about 3,000,000 pounds of yolks and dried albumin. We imported millions of pounds of hides despite the fact that domestic prices were so low that it was not worth while to put a skinning knife on a slaughtered calf or cow.

It seemed to me that something had to be done to preserve a market for the farmer, so when the Agricultural Committee of the House started to consider the bill to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic commodities and to establish quotas of sugar that might be raised by the beet growers and quotas that might be imported from Cuba, Puerto Rico, the Philippines, and the Virgin Islands, it occurred to me that a quota on blackstrap molasses might very properly be included in that bill.

Accordingly, I talked it over with Congressman Gilchrist, of Iowa, who is a member of that committee, and after some discussion the amendment was prepared and introduced, but it was rejected by the committee. Now, I am not blaming the committee. The sugar bill was an administration bill. It was sponsored by the A.A.A. as is indicated by the fact that Mr. Weaver, Mr. Tugwell, and Mr. Ezekiel all appeared before the committee. They knew what they wanted. They admitted that they were experts on the subject. The bill was an administration bill, and so the blackstrap amendment was rejected. This seemed strange. It was a good amendment. It seemed germane to the bill. It was right in line with the administration's professed solicitude for the farmer. Since Mr. Tugwell was going in for planned scarcity of just about everything, I thought that a scarcity of blackstrap molasses would be just the thing. If we could cut down on the amount of blackstrap molasses which comes into this country from the off-shore islands, we could thereby expand the market for corn and other grains.

The fact is that blackstrap molasses is used for only two purposes—namely, for mixing with dry feeds such as chopped alfalfa and for conversion into alcohol. About one-third of the importations of blackstrap molasses are for feed purposes. Such importations are quite all right. When used in feed, it does not enter into competition with farm products. It merely expands the use of such products. But when used in the production of alcohol, it is in direct competition with corn and other cereal grains. You can make all forms of alcohol from blackstrap. It will produce the kind of spirits that folks drink or the kind they put into their auto radiators or the kind they use to rub away aches and pains. Before 1910 the importations of blackstrap molasses were very small and of little concern. Since that time they have increased to hundreds of millions of gallons annually.

Now, it seemed very strange to me that, after all the statements of Mr. Tugwell, Mr. Ezekiel, Mr. Weaver, and everybody else connected with the Department of Agriculture and the A.A.A., that the blackstrap amendment to the sugar bill should have been rejected. Were they really interested in the farmers or only kidding them? Were they moved to despair by the foreclosures and the low grain prices which afflicted the farmers of the Middle West or were they giving lip service to their solicitude and then secretly laughing in their sleeves and laughing at the ease with which another academic remedy was being put over on the Corn Belt farmers. I could understand the economic reason for the molasses distillers wanting to continue to import blackstrap molasses for alcohol purposes. It was a lot cheaper. In fact, the raw material cost of blackstrap as against corn in the production of alcohol is about one-fourth. It can also be processed much faster. Anyone can understand that. It is only normal selfishness. But what I could not understand was why it is permitted, even though it was cheaper, and meant larger profits for the blackstrap people. when the A.A.A. was talking about crop control, pig slaughtering, overproduction, and what not, as a remedy for the farm situation. The two ideas were not consistent and did not make sense. There was something wrong and for a few days I have been trying to find out what it was. I think I found it, and that is why the corn farmer of Illinois and the sugar planters of Cuba and the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico may be thousands of miles apart geographically but are next door neighbors economically.

I can lay the foundation for these disclosures in short order. For every ton of cane sugar produced, there remains about 600 pounds of blackstrap molasses. Manifestly the producers of sugar are anxious for a profitable outlet for this by-product so it is plain to be seen that the sugar producers have a distinct interest in backstrap molasses. Since blackstrap molasses is used largely for the production of alcohol, it must be apparent that the sugar and blackstrap producers would be much interested in the distilling business and in alcohol.

If sugar is hooked up with blackstrap, and blackstrap is hooked up with alcohol, and blackstrap displaces corn in the industrial market, it is easy to see that perhaps the sugar people might be responsible for these continued importations of molasses. But surely the "brain trusters", who are charged with omniscience, could see this. Surely the genial Mr. Tugwell, the studious Ezekiel, the affable Mr. Dalton, the suave Mr. Weaver, could see this. Then why did they not give attention to it? Now, a sad thought obtrudes itself. Could it be that they might be parties to a general scheme to continue to import blackstrap molasses, even though it affected the corn farmer? Perish the thought! Were they not "brain trusters"? Were they not radicals? Were they not "hot dogs"? Had not they frightened the people of this Nation with implications of radicalism, with theories of regimentation in industry and agriculture? Were they not leftwingers? How silly to even speculate on the theory that the American people had been duped and hoodwinked with cries of radicalism, sovietism, and "brain trusting" which in reality might be nothing more than a smoke screen to conceal the economic plundering of the American farmer. It was silly. It was laughable. These so-called "brain trusters" were snugly and securely established as radicals of the first water, and to think that they might be cooperating with a group of reactionaries was like getting the wolf and the lamb to lie down together. Yet stranger things have happened. Moreover, it seemed singular that most of the radicalism was concentrated in the Department of Agriculture. Anyway, it was a starting point for a quiet, unobtrusive one-man investigation, and I now give you the various relationships and let you judge whether or not there is something singularly strange in Washington.

Mr. Charles W. Taussig, who has been in and out of Washington many times and who has been regarded as one of the unofficial advisers on sugar, molasses, and related matters, is in the molasses business; in fact, he is president of the American Molasses Co.; the Numoline Co.; the American Molasses Co., of Louisiana; the Applied Sugar Laboratories, Inc.; vice president and director of the Boston Molasses Co.; and director of the American Molasses Co., of Maine. He is thoroughly steeped in molasses. He is also a member of the advisory council of the Virgin Islands, where they grow sugar, produce molasses, and make rum, and also bay rum. On April 9, 1934, this council passed an ordinance providing for the rehabilitation of the Virgin Islands by getting back into all forms of industry, including the sugar, molasses, rum, and bay-rum business. For that purpose, the P.W.A. allocated a million dollars. About a month before that, Mr. Tugwell, "brain truster extraordinary", made a trip to the islands by airplane, presumably to see that everything was in apple-pie order and to take a salute from the school children. Mr. Taussig may have been there to help prepare a welcome for Mr. Tugwell. In any event, Mr. Taussig is very much in the molasses business, is very much in the Virgin Islands, and very much interested in the continued importation of molasses, no matter how much it curtails the market for the products of the midwestern

Mr. A. A. Behrle, Jr. Now, it is surpassing strange that Adolph Behrle, Jr., precocious young "brain truster", who lectures at Columbia University twice a week, acts as an adviser to the administration, and in spare time looks after the fiscal affairs of New York City at $13,500 per annum, should have been one of the directors and general counsel for the American Molasses Co., of which Mr. Taussig is the president. But it is even more singular that Mr. Behrle should have been appointed as legal adviser for the A.A.A. in the hearings that were held on the sugar stabilization agreements held in Washington in August of 1933. At that time members of the Sugar Institute protested that Mr. Behrle was biased and prejudiced and might have an ax to grind, but that made no difference. Their protests went unheeded and Mr. Behrle continued to sit in the picture. Now. any average citizen would conclude that apparently Mr. Behrle, one of the original "brain trusters" could not be so radical nor lock like a younger brother of Stalin if he was so acceptable, not only to the A.A.A. but to Mr. Taussig and to those other sugar boys who had certain sugar interests in Cuba. I know how unbelievable it seems that the widespread and continued talk of Mr. Behrle's "brain trust" proclivities might have been just so much hooey to divert attention from the fact that he was close to the molasses and sugar interests, but what are you going to do when the bald facts keep staring you in the face?

Mr. Jerome N. Frank. If you will look in the Congressional Directory you will find that Mr. Frank is not only general counsel for the A.A.A. but also general counsel of the Federal Surplus Relief Corporation. He bears a heavy responsibility. He sits at the right hand of Mr. Wallace and Mr. Davis. He puts the legal O.K. on what is done in the A.A.A. I expect that Mr. Frank is a most estimable and capable gentleman, but what struck my fancy was that, according to Martindale's Law Directory, he was a member of the New York law firm of Chadbourne, Stanchfield & Levy. This law firm, according to Poor's Manual of Industrials, acted as the attorneys for the Schenley Distillers in an offering of capital stock in July of 1933. It is singular too that Lehman Bros., of New York, of which Governor Lehman had for a long time been a sort of silent partner, first offered this stock to the public. The Schenley Distillers, as you may or may not know, control and operate a number of distilleries, and have been much interested in the manufacture of alcohol from blackstrap molasses. Mr. Frank, in a position of vantage in the A.A.A., and his former law firm in New York, acting as attorneys for the Schenley Distillers, would indicate a most pleasing relationship. Now, please do not misunderstand. I am not saying that Mr. Frank would take advantage of his position. I am content to point out that he could, if he were so disposed. But more intriguing than that is the variety and the importance of the relationships that Mr. Frank's law partner, Mr. Thomas Lincoln Chadbourne, bears to this set-up.

Mr. Thomas Lincoln Chadbourne. He is a man of many interests. Sugar is his forte. That means that he is interested in blackstrap molasses which in turn means that he is interested in alcohol. That means that the corn farmers might be interested in him. He is close to the Chase National Bank of New York. This is a fair inference, in view of the fact that he, along with Mr. Hayden, Mr. Wiggin, and Mr. Allen, all of whom are directors of the Chase National Bank, are also directors of the Otis Elevator Co. Mr. Hayden and Mr. Chadbourne are both directors of the Matanzas Sugar Corporation of Cuba. Mr. Chadbourne is close to James H. Post, key man of the Chase National Bank sugar properties in Cuba. In the course of the hearings on the sugar marketing agreement, held in Washington in August of 1933, at which Mr. Behrle sat in for the A.A.A., Mr. Chadbourne appeared in behalf of the Cuban Cane Products Co., the Punta Alegre Sugar Corporation, the Cuban Dominican Sugar Corporation, the Matanzas Sugar Co., the Compania Cubana, and for the Producers and Processors of Sugar in the Republic of Cuba. He is the same Thomas Lincoln Chadbourne who drew up the celebrated Chadbourne plan for sugar quotas in 1930, which was signed by Gerardo Machado for the Republic of Cuba, signed by the New National Sugar Exporting Corporation, signed by the Chase National Bank, and by the National City Bank of New York. Now, a blind man can see the profound interest that Mr. Chadbourne had and still has in sugar. That means that his law firm of which Mr. Frank is or was a partner is interested in sugar; that means that this law firm is interested in blackstrap molasses. It does seem a bit odd that Mr. Frank sits in as general counsel for the A.A.A., but then I suppose stranger things than that have happened. Moreover, far be it from me ever to intimate that Mr. Frank might have had anything to do with the bill which made sugar cane and sugar beets basic commodities, and far be it from me to say that Mr. Frank would resist any effort to have a blackstrap amendment inserted in that bill, but, then, you never can tell.

Mr. Daniel C. Roper, Secretary of Commerce in the President's Cabinet. Back in 1917 Mr. Roper was Vice Chairman of the United States Tariff Commission. This was doubtless a broadening experience. Now we find that on February 17, 1933, just a few days before he became a member of the President's official Cabinet family, he appeared before the Tariff Commission in behalf of Cuban Cane Products Co., the Matansas Sugar Co., the Guantanamo Sugar Co., the Punta Allegre Sugar Co., the Compania Cubana, and the Cuban-American Sugar Co. These are the same companies for which Mr. Thomas Lincoln Chadbourne appeared before the hearings on the sugar-marketing agreement. These are the companies in which the Chase National Bank and the National City Bank are interested. Mr. Percy Rockefeller and Mr. Charles Mitchell, of Chase Bank fame, are directors in some of these companies. Far be it from me to impute ulterior motives to Mr. Roper. I merely point out that he was associated and appeared for sugar companies in which Mr. Chadbourne, law partner of Mr. Jerome N. Frank, general counsel of the A.A.A., also appeared. I merely point out that Chase National and National City Bank were, and are, interested in these companies; and I think it quite fair to infer that Mr. Roper, by virtue of his interest in sugar companies as late as last year, might have had an interest in their by-product, namely, blackstrap molasses, which comes into this country in millions of gallons to compete with corn and other cereal grains.

Mr. Vincent Astor. He might be properly catalogued as a bright young socialite, who is skipper of the famed yacht Nourmahal, which was formerly the flagship of the International Mercantile Marine Corporation. He is a director of the Chase National Bank, which, as I pointed out, is deeply interested in sugar and blackstrap molasses. He | was also a director of the ill-fated Atlantic Fruit & Sugar Co., which had 153,000 acres of sugar properties and a sugar mill in Cuba, 132,000 acres in Nicaragua, and which operated 21 steamers and controlled a number of subsidiaries. Percy Rockefeller was also a director of this company. The Atlantic Fruit & Sugar Co. was one of the many companies which composed the United States Sugar Association founded in 1922, for which Mr. Roper at one time appeared before the Tariff Commission and for which Mr. Chadbourne appeared before the hearing on the Sugar Marketing Agreement. It is but fair to assume that Mr. Roper, Mr. Chadbourne, Mr. Astor, Mr. Frank, and others all have an identity of interest because of these varied connections and that Mr. Astor is interested in sugar and doubtless in blackstrap molasses, the byproduct of sugar.

Mr. William H. Woodin, late lamented Secretary of the Treasury. Now comes a sad and difficult task, and I approach it with reluctance. Yet it would be a mark of moral cowardice on my part to fail to state the bare facts, even though I might be charged with a species of blasphemy of one who is gathered unto the dust of his fathers. Mr. Woodin was president of the American Car & Foundry Co., as everyone knows. Mr. Oscar B. Cintas, the vice president of that company, was appointed Cuban Ambassador to the United States and served for about 10 months. Mr. Cintas at one time sold American Car & Foundry Co. products in Cuba. Mr. Woodin was a member of the board of directors of the Cuba Co., the Cuba Railroad Co., the Consolidated Railroad Co. of Cuba, and the Compania Cubana (Producers of Sugar). Mr. Herbert C. Lakin, a director in Mr. Woodin's companies, and a relative by marriage of former Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson, testified before the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee in 1929 that Mr. Woodin's sugar and rail interests in Cuba were valued at $175,-000,000. Mr. Woodin was associated with Mr. Percy Rockefeller and with Charles E. Mitchell, of Chase National Bank fame, in various enterprises. I shall go no further than to point out that Mr. Woodin was tremendously interested in sugar, and blackstrap molasses as a by-product of sugar.

Mr. Norman H. Davis. Mr. Davis is our roving ambassador. He turns up at the most unexpected places. He is high in the councils of the administration. One of the unexpected places where he turned up was Cuba. He arrived there with little more than carfare and ultimately became a dollar-a-year man, president of the Cuba Trust Co., and connected with various enterprises down there. Mr. Davis' name was linked up with the so-called Ports Co. of Cuba concession which turned out to be rather smelly.

Now, to show how closely sugar, molasses, and alcohol dovetail, it might be interesting to note who was present at the hearings on the code of fair competition for the distilled spirits industry, held under the supervision of the A.A.A. in November 1933. One of the controversial questions at that hearing was whether beverage alcohol or spirits should be made from grain entirely or whether the molasses distillers should have a right to convert some of their imported molasses into drinking liquor. The grain distillers contended that the American farmer had voted to repeal the eighteenth amendment on the express promises of the administration spokesmen that repeal would provide an enlarged market for cereal grains. This, however, made little difference to the molasses boys, who were more interested in profits than in the destinies of the American farmer. Now, note. The firm of Chadbourne, Stanchfield & Levy were there. This, as you may remember, is the firm of which Mr. Frank, general counsel of the A.A.A. was a member. In fact, Mr. Louis Samter Levy, member of that firm, seems to have been a member of the code-drafting committee. Countless distilleries appeared at that hearing, many of which had been and are making alcohol out of blackstrap molasses. John E. Dalton, chairman of the code analysis committee for the A.A.A. and the very gentleman who will help to administer the sugar agreement, was also there:

And who is John E. Dalton? He is a rather intimate friend of Dr. Raymond Moley, one-time "brain-truster", editor of Today, and still something of a kingpin in administration affairs. Better than that, Mr. Dalton is an intimate friend of Mr. Charles W. Taussig, president of many molasses companies, member of the Virgin Islands Advisory Council, and a sort of unofficial adviser on sugar and related subjects. Mr. Dalton, therefore, should have no difficulty in fitting into the sugar, blackstrap, alcohol picture, nor should he have any trouble in preventing the beet-sugar growers from snitching a few pounds beyond their quota, even though we only raise enough beets and produce enough beet sugar for only one-fourth of our sugar requirements.

This narrative would not be complete, of course, unless it included the ace "brain trusters"—Dr. Tugwell and Dr. Ezekiel—and in order to get some first-hand evidence of their subtle philosophy it might be well to examine the hearings which were held on the measure to "include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities." While the testimony is subtle, it seems convincing.

Now, before we turn the pages and see what the eminent Dr. Tugwell and the studious Dr. Ezekiel had to say we might with high profit look at page 142 of those hearings and quote from a statement that was issued by the National City Bank, of New York, in October 1933 and inserted in the hearings, because this bank, being so heavily interested in Cuban sugar and Cuban molasses and, by proper inference, in alcohol, is an authority on the subject. The statement is as follows:

At the present time-

And this is dated October 1933-

a very large amount of American capital appears to be hopelessly sunk in Cuba. Unfortunately, these banks have been obliged to take over from the debtors sugar plantations and other properties in Cuba.

There you have it. Now, if that statement had been more explicit it might have particularized on some of the wildcat financing down in Cuba, which nothing short of a revolution and bloodshed could save. A recital of the Morgan loan of nine million in July of 1927, the Chase National sixty-million loan in June of 1928, the Chase loan of eighty million in 1930, the Chadbourne sugar-bond authorization of forty-two million in 1930, for which Chase and National City Banks acted as fiscal agents, together with many other loans, tells the story of wildcat financing, the story of why they had to take over plantations, and why they must now seek to perfect a sugar-and-molasses arrangement for pulling their chestnuts out of the fire, no matter how it hurts the American farmers' outlet for grain.

On the same page of the hearings is quoted a memorandum of Thomas Lincoln Chadbourne, who might properly be styled "the world's greatest sugar daddy." This memorandum was given to the Washington Sugar Conference on July 9, 1933, and for fear that you may forget, let it be noted again that this is the Mr. Chadbourne who is a law partner of Jerome N. Frank, general counsel of the A.A.A. and of Mr. Louis Samter Levy who, it appears, was on the code-drafting committee for the distillers' marketing agreement. Says Mr. Chadbourne, "Seventy percent of the sugar production of the Island of Cuba is owned by Americans in the form of investments in Cuban and American companies (bonds, debentures, and stocks), largely scattered among small holders throughout the length and breadth of the United States. This American investment, when made, exceeded $600,000,000 in amount. The present market value of the securities representing this large sum, does not now in the aggregate exceed $50,000,000." Now, let the farmer take a second peep at that statement by Mr. Chadbourne. The original investment was $600,000,000. value is now estimated at $50,000,000. That means that they estimate the value at 81/3 percent of the original investment. In other words, they depreciated 91% percent. Is anything more necessary to establish the wildcat-nature of this sugar financing and is anything more necessary to show the impelling reason, why these gentlemen are interested in promoting a set-up of personnel in high places so that they can pump a lot of life-giving water into these securities, by perpetuating a sugar, molasses, and alcohol arrangement that is inimical to the interest of the midwestern farmer. You have it right there, from the sugar sage, Mr. Chadbourne, himself.

With this background, we may now proceed to the testimony of Mr. A. J. S. Weaver, chief of the sugar section of the A.A.A. who testified at great length before the committee. During the hearing, Congressman Hope, of Kansas, a true friend of the American farmer, asked this question:

Well then, in other words, the policy is to start in eliminating the industry (beet-sugar industry) before it gets any bigger. Am I correct in that assumption?

Mr. Weaver. Yes; I think that is a reasonable statement.

There, folks, you have a statement from the chief of the sugar section of the A.A.A., that it will be the policy to eliminate the beet-sugar industry before it gets any bigger. Fancy that! We produce only enough sugar to fill 25 percent of our sugar requirements, but despite that, it will be the policy to give it the ax and put it out of business. Why? Because it is inefficient? That is a lot of balderdash. Because we are overproduced? Certainly not. Then why? Go back and read Mr. Chadbourne's statement. The conclusion is obvious enough. Put the beet-sugar folks out of business because any expansion in the beet-sugar industry means contraction in the cane-sugar industry, and that might be prejudicial to the interests of the Chase National, the National City Bank, Mr. Chadbourne, and others. More beets will be prejudicial to island sugar, island molasses, and alcohol made from molasses. More beets would be quite the thing for the American farmer, but he apparently plays second fiddle in this scheme of things. You see now why there is nothing accidental about the relationship of Chase National, National City Bank, Mr. Taussig, Mr. Behrle, Mr. Astor, Mr. Roper, Mr. Chadbourne, Mr. Frank, Mr. Dalton, Mr. Weaver, Mr. Percy Rockefeller, Mr. Woodin, and all the rest. Sugar, molasses, alcohol. That is the story. An identity of interest and whether it is good or bad for the farmer is of little consequence. Nor was there anything accidental about the fact that Jose Obregon, son-in-law of Gerardo Machado, the arch Cuban president-dictator and tool of the sugar interests, was made manager of the Chase National Bank branch at Habana, Cuba. Nor is it accidental that Mr. Thomas Lamont, Morgan partner at a dinner given to President Machado in New York City in April of 1927, said. "We do not care by what means, but we should like to see Machado kept in power."

Parenthetically, let us pause long enough to remark that when the hearings on the bill to "include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic commodities" was printed, the testimony of Mr. Weaver was altered so as not to appear too patent and revolutionary. Even Mr. Wallace could not stand it, and the next day Mr. Tugwell appeared at the hearings, altogether uninvited, which is altogether unusual for the ace "brain truster." Did he come to pour oil on waters that were growing turbulent and troubled? Let us see.

Turn to page 42 and the following of the hearings, and there you have the spectacle of Mr. Tugwell, ace "brain truster", out on a limb, as it were, a bit hazy and uncertain of his ground, angling, sparring, feinting, dodging with an agility and alertness that would have put old Jim Corbett to shame. On page 47 appears this gleaming gem from the erudite Mr. Tugwell: "I think no one here would argue that we have no duty to Puerto Rico, to the Hawaiian Islands, or to Cuba. I think we all recognize there is a duty there, whatever it is." There you have it. A duty-whatever it is. Well, Mr. Tugwell doubtless knows what that duty is. So does Mr. Taussig and Mr. Behrle; so does Mr. Astor and Mr. Roper; so does Mr. Weaver and Mr. Dalton; so does Mr. Chadbourne and Mr. Frank; so does the Chase National and the National City Bank. And they will probably see that that duty is performed. They will see that the sugar, molasses, alcohol interests are not prejudiced, no matter what the present or future plight of the midwestern farmer may be. Let regimentation proceed, let crop reduction and drouth enter into mortal combat, let despair reign among the farmers, let the market for American grain be slowly but surely curtailed and strangled. Sugar, molasses, and alcohol must be served. And from the looks of this formidable set-up. it will be served, unless the American farmers and American people take a hand in this matter.

Now for our studious friend, Dr. Ezekiel. His name intrigues me. When you pronounce it-Mordecai Ezekiel-it seems like one of the prophets of the Old Testament suddenly jumps up before you. For enlightenment turn to page 71 of the hearings. Much has been made of the fact that the more sugar we purchased from Cuba the greater the buying power of the Cubans for other products of the American farmer, and Mr. Ezekiel had it worked out very nicely to show just how many acres of land in the United States were necessary to produce the things which Cuba purchased. As if they were not raising corn and beef and dairy products in Cuba in increasing amount every year! But wait! Mr. McCandless, the Delegate from Hawaii, at this point unfurled some figures to show that in 1931, 1932, and 1933 we purchased twice as much sugar from Cuba as Cuba did all forms of merchandise and commodities from us. There were the bald, winking, blinking, bewildering figures to prove it. Then is when Dr. Ezekiel, "brain truster" extraordinary and farm expert plenipotentiary from the Department of Agriculture, rose to superb heights of statesmanship. Said he:

Mr. Chairman, may I suggest to the gentleman that a great deal of the Cuban industry, particularly sugar, is owned by people of the United States, which rather suggests that a great deal of what we are purchasing from Cuba constitutes, or at least is income or profit to Americans, citizens of the United States.

There you have it. Mr. Ezekiel might just as well have left his fancy and intriguing figures and his academic theories in the office. He might have with greater clarity substituted the following statement:

"Mr. Chairman, may I suggest to the gentleman that a great deal of the Cuban industry, particularly sugar, blackstrap molasses, and the alcohol which is made from blackstrap molasses at the expense of the grain farmers' market. is owned by the Chase National, the National City Bank, and in which Mr. Chadbourne, Mr. Astor, Mr. Rockefeller, Mr. Woodin, and many others have a heavy interest, and that a great deal of the sugar and blackstrap molasses which we are purchasing from Cuba constitutes or at least is income or profit to Americans, citizens such as Mr. Astor, Mr. Chadbourne, Mr. Rockefeller, Mr. Morgan, and all the others who are linked with them directly and indirectly."

To the farmer of the Midwestern States I say: Take a look at this set-up which seems to have an unusual interest in sugar and in the protection of those wild-cat investments in Cuba; take a look at the names of those whose interest in sugar denotes an interest in the blackstrap molasses, the natural byproduct of sugar, which is converted into alcohol and thereby steals away your market for grain; take a look at the high and responsible key positions held by those who have heretofore been identified with the protection of sugar and its byproducts, and you can readily understand why little heed has been given to the demand for a limitation on importations of blackstrap.

They talk about processing taxes on blackstrap so as to equalize it with grain, but they do not tell you about the idle acreage-40,000,000 acres in fact-in all sections of the country, which are the capital with which the farmer must do business. If their absurd argument about taxing blackstrap so as to equalize it with grain has any value, then why not put all corn and grain acreage out of business, import all available blackstrap, and pass on to the farmer penurious and inadequate benefits from which he cannot maintain an existence for himself and his family. There must come a reckoning some day, and it is high time that this whole matter was investigated by an official committee. It is time that the very lid was blown off of this set-up.

It becomes easier to understand why this cry of "brain truster" and "radical" and "Socialist" went up to frighten the people. To me it appears to have been a mere smokescreen to cloak the activities of the sugar- and blackstrapmolasses-alcohol interests. My own notion is that in some respects Mr. Tugwell is about as radical as last year's hat; Mr. Ezekiel is about as radical as J. P. Morgan; Mr. Behrle is about as much of a "brain truster" and "left winger" as Percy Rockefeller; if these gentlemen are radical "brain trusters", then J. P. Morgan is a younger brother of Stalin and J. D. Rockefeller is a first cousin of Mussolini.

I am afraid that both the American people and the President are being fooled by this group, and before long there will be an awakening.

And now, is it so difficult to understand why the news about Cuban sugar had gotten to the financial district of New York and even to Cuba before the newsmen could leave the conference and put it on the wire? In fact, is it so difficult to discern who might have been doing the divulging?

(By unanimous consent, Mr. Dirksen was granted permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Printing, I send to the desk a privileged resolution (S.Con.Res. 20) to provide for the printing of additional copies of the hearings held before the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate on the resolution (S.Res. 278), St. Lawrence Waterway, Seventy-second Congress, second session, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 20

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concur-Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act, approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate be, and is hereby, empowered to have printed for its use 2,000 copies of the hearings held before a subcommittee of said committee during the second session of the Seventy-second Congress, on the resolution (S.Res. 278), entitled "Resolution authorizing the Committee on Foreign Relations to make an investigation and to hold hearings respecting matters touching the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty", part 1 and part 2.

The Senate concurrent resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE TO MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution (S.J.Res. 130) to amend section 72 of the Printing Act, approved January 12, 1895, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, relative to the allotment of public documents, and section 85 of the same act fixing the date of the expiration of the franking privilege to Members of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, in what way does this change the present law?

Mr. LAMBETH. I will state that the purpose of this amendment is to readjust the time within which ex-Members of Congress must remove their documents in order to conform with the expiration of their terms as changed by the twentieth amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. BLANTON. How much additional time is given them?

Mr. LAMBETH. They have until June 30.

Mr. BLANTON. And it in no other way changes the present law?

Mr. LAMBETH. That is the sole purpose of the amend-

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Sec. 72. Allotment of documents: The congressional allotment of public documents (except the Congressional Record) printed after the expiration of the term of office of the Vice President of the United States, or any Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, shall be delivered to his or her successor in office.

"The Vice President of the United States and any Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner in Congress, having public documents to his credit at the expiration of his term of office shall take the same prior to the 30th day of June next following the date of such expiration, and if he shall not do so within such period he shall forfeit them to his or her successor

Szc. 2. That section 85 of chapter 23 of the Printing Act (U.S.C., title 39, sec. 326), approved January 12, 1895, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Szc. 85. Franking privilege: The Vice President of the United States, and Senators, Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners in Congress, the Secretary of the Senate, and Clerk of the House of Representatives may send and receive through the mail all public documents printed by order of Congress; and the name of the Vice President, Senator, Representative, Delegate, Resident Commissioner, Secretary of the Senate, and Clerk of the House shall be written thereon, with the proper designation of the office he holds; and the provisions of this section shall apply to each of the persons named herein until the 30th day of June following the expiration of their respective terms of office."

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COORDINATION OF VETERANS' OBJECTIVES

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks by inserting a letter written to me by the chairman of the national veterans' conference committee, Victory Post of the American Legion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter from the chairman of the national veterans' conference committee:

VICTORY POST, No. 4, THE AMERICAN LEGION, Washington, D.C., June 13, 1934.

Washington, D.C., June 13, 1934.

The Honorable William P. Connery,

Member of Congress.

Dear Sir and Comrade: Victory Post, No. 4, American Legion, has authorized this committee to call a national conference of representatives of all patriotic veteran organizations and units to be convened in Washington, D.C., in October for "indoctrinating all of the veterans of the World War and Spanish-American War, regardless of their veteran organization affiliation, with the spirit of cooperation and coordination of veterans' objectives, thereby affording the membership of each organization the opportunity to take such action within each particular organized group as will permit and lead to the promotion of a planned national policy to the end that veterans will not always be vulnerable in the face of attack and that the veteran may again be restored to that high the end that veterans will not always be vulnerable in the face of attack and that the veteran may again be restored to that high level of patriotic idealism which was once theirs."

Your long experience in battling for the veteran will give you full appreciation of the necessity for such action, and your cooperation in making this conference a success is paramount and will be greatly appreciated.

This, so far as we know, is the first national meeting of its kind ever proposed and it will no doubt have a lasting effect upon unity of thought among veterans and upon national welfare.

unity of thought among veterans and upon national welfare. We know we can depend upon you.

Fraternally yours,

D. E. CARTER, Chairman National Veterans' Conference Committee, tory Post, No. 4, Am District of Columbia. American Legion, Department of the

BRIDGE ACROSS ELEVEN POINTS RIVER

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H.R. 9826) granting the consent of Congress to the State highway commission to construct, maintain, and operate a highway bridge across Eleven Points River in section 17, township 23 north, range 2 west, approximately 12 miles east of Alton, on Route No. 42, Oregon County, Mo.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman inform us what this bill is?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is a measure providing for the construction of a free bridge across the Eleven Points River by the State highway commission.

Mr. SNELL. Has the bill been reported by the Interstate Commerce Committee?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was unanimously reported, and the bill is endorsed by the War Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State Highway Commission of Missouri to construct, maintain, and operate a highway bridge across Eleven Points River in the northwest half of section 31, township 25 north, range 3 west, 8 miles northeast of Alton, on route B in Oregon County, Mo., at a point suitable to the interests of naviga-tion, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. The authority hereby granted shall cease and be null and void unless the actual construction of the bridge be commenced within 2 years and completed within 5 years from the date of SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 9, strike out the figure "3" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "2."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Amend the title of the bill so as to read: "A bill granting the consent of Congress to the State highway commission to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Eleven Points River in the northwest half of section 31, township 25 north, range 3 west, 8 miles northeast of Alton, on route B in Oregon County, Mo."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, H.R. 9827, a companion measure to the one just passed.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely unfair to bring up these bills at this hour of the night. I object.

CHANGES IN RURAL DELIVERY HARMFUL TO SERVICE

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, the inauguration of the rural-delivery system as part of the service rendered by the Post Office Department has proved to be one of the most beneficent activities of our Government. In many instances it was, and has continued to be, the only contact that dwellers in rural communities have with the outside world. Its development through succeeding administrations has been the natural outgrowth of a service for which there was a distinct need. There has been created a just pride in its accomplishments, shared by those in high official administrative offices, and, the humble rural carrier, whose faithfulness in the performance of a public duty has not been exceeded by any other class of Government employee.

The development of this service, which has no equal in all the world, has required years of effort and toil. Each succeeding year has seen its routes extended, the number of persons served increased, and the character of service enlarged, until today the dweller on farm or in rural community has all the varied forms of service available to those who reside in the largest city. It has been a marvelous achievement. Today, it occupies such an important part in the welfare of rural communities that any effort or tendency to break down, curtail, or minimize the service rendered should meet with stout resistance.

It is regrettable that the present administration of the Post Office Department seems to have lost the vision that induced its predecessors to enlarge and extend the rural service, and, has entered upon a course of consolidations and eliminations in the name of economy, and a fictitiously balanced budget that is seriously destroying the effectiveness and usefulness of this branch of the service to many who formerly enjoyed and were benefited by it.

In the same wild effort or delusion of balancing the Budget, the present Post Office administration has closed post offices serving small communities, cut hours of service in others, enforced pay cuts and furloughs among employees until the morale of the employees has been broken, and the patience of the public exhausted. And yet all of this curtailment is being made upon a theory of economy when in fact there are 81,000 more officeholders in the Federal service than 1 year ago. Why should those living in rural communities be made to suffer by discontinued or delayed service of mail to effect savings that enable a vast army of new job holders to be placed in political positions? All of this is done by or under the authority of Postmaster General Farley, who, as chairman of the national committee of his party, is the dispenser of political patronage. And closely allied to this practice is that of demanding the resignation of postmasters whose terms have not expired and who have served faithfully and well, and for no other than political reasons. I regret to say that never before has any administration, Democratic or Republican, been so ruthless and cold-blooded or more politically minded in the administration of the Post Office Department.

The conditions of which I complain are not local in character. They reach into every State. They should not be permitted to continue. Consideration should be given to the rights of individuals who find it necessary to utilize the rural-delivery system. There should be no let-up in effort until the wrongs are remedied. It is the duty of each to help in this common endeavor for the good of those who reside in rural communities.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as

SENATE

FRIDAY, JUNE 15, 1934

(Legislative day of Wednesday, June 6, 1934)

The Senate met in executive session at 11 o'clock a.m., on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

As in legislative session,

On motion of Mr. Robinson of Arkansas, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Thursday, June 14, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CONSIDERATION OF TREATIES

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into yesterday the Senate, in executive session, will proceed to the consideration of treaties on the calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] is absent on account of illness, and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Keyes] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO] is absent, due to illness, and that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuys] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] are necessarily detained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The clerk will state the first treaty on the calendar.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there are 12 treaties on the calendar, and the reason I desired to have a particular time set aside for their consideration was so that those Senators who are interested in the treaties might be able to make arrangements to be present.

I desire to take the treaties up out of order on the calendar; that is, I desire to have considered first the treaties which are purely formal ones. Therefore I will ask that Executive M be first considered.

SUPPLEMENTARY EXTRADITION TREATY WITH FINLAND

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive M (73d Cong., 2d sess.), a supplementary extradition treaty between the United States and Finland, signed at Washington on May 17, 1934, which was read the second time, as follows:

The United States of America and the Republic of Finland, being desirous of enlarging the list of crimes on account of which extradition may be granted under the treaty concluded between the United States of America and the Republic of Finland on August 1, 1924, with a view to the better administration of justice and the prevention of crime within the two countries, have resolved to conclude a supplementary treaty for this purpose and have appointed as their plenipotentiaries, to wit:

The President of the United States of America, Mr. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State of the United States of America; and

The President of the Republic of Finland, Mr. L. Aström, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Finland to the United States of America;

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, which were found to be in due and proper form, have agreed to and concluded the following articles:

ARTICLE I

The following crime is added to the list of crimes numbered 1 to 17 in article II of the said treaty of August 1, 1924, on account of which extradition may be granted, that is to say:

18. Fraudulent bankruptcy.

ARTICLE II

Paragraph 3 of article II of the said treaty of August 1, 1934, is hereby amended by substituting for the words "a girl", contained therein, the word "children", so that this paragraph shall now read: "rape, abortion, and the carnal knowledge of children under the age of twelve years."

ARTICLE III

The present treaty shall be considered as an integral part of the said Extradition Treaty of August 1, 1924.

ARTICLE IV

The present treaty shall be ratified by the high contracting parties in accordance with their respective constitutional methods, and shall take effect on the date of the exchange of ratifications which shall take place at Helsinki as soon as possible.

In witness whereof, the above-mentioned plenipotentiaries have signed the present treaty and have hereunto affixed their seals.

Done, in duplicate, at Washington, this 17th day of May 1934.

CORDELL HULL. [SEAL] L. ASTRÖM. [SEAL]

Mr. PITTMAN. I will state, Mr. President, that this is a supplementary extradition treaty. It adds to the crimes made extraditable under the existing treaty the crimes of fraudulent bankruptcy and rape. That is all.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, am I to understand that the present treaty with Finland omits those two crimes?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. And this treaty proposes to include them? Mr. PITTMAN. The treaty merely includes the additional crimes to the list of extraditable crimes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no amendments, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive M, Seventy-third Congress, second session, a supplementary extradition treaty between the United States and Finland, signed at Washington on May 17, 1934.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Twothirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution is agreed to, and the treaty is ratified.

SUPPLEMENTARY EXTRADITION TREATY WITH LITHUANIA

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive L.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of Executive L, a supplementary extradition treaty between the United States and Lithuania, signed at Washington, May 17, 1934, which was read the second time, as follows:

The United States of America and the Republic of Lithuania desiring to promote the cause of justice by enlarging the list of crimes on account of which extradition may be granted under the treaty concluded between the United States of America and the Republic of Lithuania on April 9, 1924, have resolved to conclude a supplementary treaty for this purpose and have appointed as their plenipotentiaries, to wit:

The President of the United States of America, Cordell Hull, Secretary of State of the United States of America; and

The President of the Republic of Lithuania, Mikas Bagdonas, Chargé d'Affaires ad interim of the Republic of Lithuania at Washington.

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, which were found to be in due and proper form, have agreed to and concluded the following articles:

ARTICLE I

The following crimes are added to the list of crimes numbered 1 to 24 in article II of the said treaty of April 9, 1924, on account of which extradition may be granted, that is to say:

25. Crimes and offenses against the bankruptcy laws.

26. Crimes and offenses, or attempted crimes or offenses, against the laws relating to the traffic in narcotic drugs.

ARTICLE II

The present treaty shall be considered as an integral part of the said extradition treaty of April 9, 1924, and article II of the last-mentioned treaty shall be read as if the list of crimes therein contained had originally comprised the additional crimes specified and numbered 25 and 26 in the first article of the present treaty.

The present treaty shall be ratified by the high contracting parties in accordance with their respective constitutional methods, and shall take effect on the date of the exchange of ratifications which shall take place at Washington as soon as possible.

In witness whereof, the above-mentioned plenipotentiaries have signed the present Treaty and have hereunto affixed their seals.

Done, in duplicate, at Washington this 17th day of May 1934.

CORDELL HULL. [SEAL] MIKAS BAGDONAS. [SEAL]

Mr. PITTMAN. This treaty simply adds to the list of extraditable crimes those against the bankruptcy laws and those against the narcotic laws.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no amendment, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive L (73d Cong., 2d sess.), a supplementary extradition treaty between the United States and Lithuania, signed at Washington on May 17, 1934.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Twothirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution is agreed to and the treaty is ratified. SUPPLEMENTARY EXTRADITION TREATY WITH SWEDEN

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask that Executive K be next considered. There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive K, a supplementary extradition treaty between the United States and Sweden, signed at Washington on May 17, 1934, which was read the second time, as follows:

The President of the United States of America and His Majesty the King of Sweden, being desirous of enlarging the list of crimes and offenses on account of which extradition may be granted under the Extradition Treaty of January 14, 1893, between the United States of America and Sweden, have resolved to conclude a supplementary treaty for this purpose and have appointed as their plenipotentiaries, to wit:

The President of the United States of America, Cordell Hull, Secretary of State of the United States of America; and

His Majesty the King of Sweden, W. Boström, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Sweden at Washington.

Who, having communicated to each other their respective full powers, which were found to be in due and proper form, have agreed to and concluded the following articles:

ARTICLE I

To the list of crimes and offenses numbered 1 to 12 in article II of the treaty of January 14, 1893, the following, contained in a paragraph numbered 13, is added:

13. Crimes and offenses against the bankruptcy laws, provided the act in the United States of America is punishable as a felony and in Sweden is regarded as a crime that may be punished according to the Swedish Penal Law by imprisonment at hard labor.

ARTICLE II

The present treaty shall be considered as an integral part of the said Extradition Treaty of January 14, 1893, article II of which shall be read as if the list of crimes and offenses therein contained had originally compromised the additional crimes and offenses specified and numbered 13 in the first article of the present treaty.

The present treaty shall be ratified and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Stockholm as soon as possible. It shall take effect on the date of the exchange of ratifications,

In witness whereof, the respective plenipotentiaries have signed the present supplementary treaty and have thereto affixed their seals.

Done, in duplicate, at Washington this seventeenth day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirty-four.

CORDELL HULL. [SEAL] W. BOSTRÖM. [SEAL]

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this treaty also adds crimes against the bankruptcy laws, but provides a qualification so as to include only such crimes of this character as are felonies in the United States and punishable by hard labor in Sweden.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no amendment, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amend-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive K (73d Cong., 2d sess.), a supplementary extradition treaty between the United States and Sweden, signed at Washington May 17, 1934.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution is agreed to, and the treaty is ratified.

SUPPLEMENTARY EXTRADITION TREATY WITH AUSTRIA

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask that the Senate now consider Executive R.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive R, a supplementary extradition treaty between the United States of America and Austria signed at Vienna on May 19, 1934, which was read the second time, as follows:

The United States of America and Austria, desiring to enlarge the list of crimes on account of which extradition may be granted under the convention concluded between the United States and Austria on January 31, 1930, with a view to the better administration of justice and prevention of crime within their respective territories and jurisdictions, have resolved to conclude a supplementary convention for this purpose and have appointed the following plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America: Mr. Alfred W. Kliefoth, his chargé d'affaires ad interim to Austria, and The Federal President of Austria: Dr. E. Dollfuss, Federal Chancellor.

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found to be in good and due form, have agreed upon and concluded the following articles:

ARTICLE I

The following crimes are added to the list of crimes numbered 1 to 22 in article II of the said convention of January 31, 1930, on account of which extradition may be granted, that is to say:

23. Crimes against the bankruptcy laws.

ARTICLE II

The present convention shall be considered as an integral part of the said extradition convention of January 31, 1930, and article II of the last-mentioned convention shall be read as if the list of crimes therein contained had originally comprised the additional crimes numbered 23 in the first article of the present convention.

The present convention shall be ratified by the high contracting parties in accordance with their respective constitutional methods, and shall take effect on the date of the exchange of ratifications which shall take place at Vienna as soon as possible.

In witness whereof the above-mentioned plenipotentiaries have signed the present convention in both the English and German languages, and have hereunto affixed their seals.

Done, in duplicate, at Vienna, this 19th day of May 1934. United States of America:

ALFRED W. KLIEFOTH.

Austria

E. DOLLFUSS.

Mr. PITTMAN. That simply adds crimes against the bankruptcy laws.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no amendment, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive R (73d Cong., 2d sess.), a supplementary extradition treaty between the United States of America and Austria signed at Vienna on May 19, 1934, adding crimes against the bankruptcy laws to the extraditable crimes and offenses listed in the extradition treaty of January 31, 1930, between the two countries.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Twothirds of the Senators concurring therein, the resolution is agreed to and the treaty is ratified.

TREATY OF FRIENDSHIP AND COMMERCE WITH FINLAND

Mr. PITTMAN. I now ask that the Senate consider Executive D.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive D (73d Cong., 2d sess.), a treaty of friendship, commerce, and consular rights between the United States and the Republic of Finland, signed at Washington, February 13, 1934, which was read the second time, as follows:

The United States of America and the Republic of Finland, desirous of strengthening the bond of peace which happily prevails between them, by arrangements designed to promote friendly intercourse between their territories through provisions responsive to the spiritual, cultural, economic and commercial aspirations of the peoples thereof, have resolved to conclude a Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Consular Rights and for that purpose have appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America,

Mr. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State of the United States of America:

The President of the Republic of Finland,

Mr. L. Aström, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the Republic of Finland to the United States of America

Who, having communicated to each other their full powers found to be in due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I

Nationals of each High Contracting Party who conform to the laws and regulations of the other Party, shall be permitted to enter, travel and reside in its territory for the purpose of carrying on trade between the two countries; also for other purposes in so far as entry, travel and residence is or may be permitted by local law.

The nationals of each of the High Contracting Parties within the territory of the other shall be permitted to engage in professional, scientific, religious, philanthropic, manufacturing and commercial work of every kind, to carry on every form of commercial activity, to own, erect or lease and occupy appropriate buildings and to lease lands for residential, scientific, religious, philanthropic, manufacturing, commercial and mortuary purposes, and generally to do anything incidental to or necessary for the enjoyment of any of the foregoing privileges, upon the same terms as nationals of the state of residence insofar as may be permitted by local law. In no case shall they be accorded less favorable treatment in respect of any of the aforesaid matters than nationals of the most favored nation. They shall be permitted in pursuance of any of the aforesaid activities to appoint representatives, agents, or employees of their choice, subject to the local laws in relation to the immigration of aliens.

The nationals of either High Contracting Party within the territory of the other shall not be subjected to the payment of any internal charges or taxes other or higher than those that are exacted of and paid by its nationals.

The nationals of each High Contracting Party shall enjoy freedom of access to the courts of justice of the other on conforming to the local laws, as well for the prosecution as for the defense of their rights, and in all degrees of jurisdiction established by law.

The nationals of each High Contracting Party shall receive within the territory of the other, upon submitting to conditions imposed upon its nationals, the most constant protection and security for their persons and property, and shall enjoy in this respect that degree of protection that is required by international law. Their property shall not be taken without due process of law and without payment of just compensation.

ARTICLE II

With respect to that form of protection granted by National, State or Provincial laws establishing civil liability for injuries or for death, and giving to relatives or heirs or dependents of an injured party a right of action or a pecuniary benefit, such relatives or heirs or dependents of the injured party, himself a national of either of the High Contracting Parties and injured within the territory of the other, shall regardless of their alienage or residence outside of the territory where the injury occurred, enjoy the same rights and privileges as are or may be granted to nationals, and under like conditions.

ARTICLE III

The dwellings, warehouses, manufactories, shops and other places of business, and all premises thereto appertaining of the nationals of each of the High Contracting Parties in the territory of the other, used for any purposes set forth in Article I, shall be respected. It shall not be allowable to make a domiciliary visit to, or search of any such buildings and premises, or there to examine and inspect books, papers or accounts, except under the conditions and in conformity with the forms prescribed by the laws, ordinances and regulations for nationals.

ARTICLE IV

Where, on the death of any person holding real or other immovable property or interests therein within the territory of one High Contracting Party, such property or interests therein would, by the laws of the country or by a testamentary disposition, descend or pass to a national of the other High Contracting Party, whether resident or nonresident, were he not disqualified by the laws of the country where such property or interests therein is or are situated. such national shall be allowed a term of three years in which to sell the same, this term to be reasonably prolonged if circumstances render it necessary, and withdraw the proceeds thereof without restraint or interference, and exempt from any succession, probate or administrative duties or charges other than those which may be imposed in like cases upon the nationals of the country from which such proceeds may be drawn.

Nationals of either High Contracting Party may have full power to dispose of their personal property of every kind within the territory of the other, by testament, donation, or otherwise, and their heirs, legatees and donees, of whatso-ever nationality, whether resident or non-resident, shall succeed to such personal property and may take possession thereof, either by themselves or by others acting for them, and retain or dispose of the same at their pleasure subject to the payment of such duties or charges only as the nationals of the High Contracting Party within whose territory such property may be or belong shall be liable to pay in like cases.

ARTICLE V

The nationals of each of the High Contracting Parties may exercise liberty of conscience and freedom of worship within the territory of the other Party. They may, without annoyance of molestation of any kind by reason of their religious belief or otherwise, conduct services either within their own houses or within any appropriate buildings which they may be at liberty to erect and maintain in convenient situations, provided their teachings or practices are not contrary to public morals; and they may also be permitted to bury their dead according to their religious customs in suitable and convenient places established and maintained for the purpose, subject to the reasonable mortuary and sanitary laws and regulations of the place of burial.

ARTICLE VI

Between the territories of the High Contracting Parties there shall be freedom of commerce and navigation. The nationals of each of the High Contracting Parties, equally with those of the most-favored nation, shall have liberty freely to come with their vessels and cargoes to all places, ports and waters of every kind within the territorial limits of the other which are or may be open to foreign commerce and navigation.

ARTICLE VII

Each of the High Contracting Parties binds itself unconditionally to impose no higher or other duties or charges, and no other conditions or prohibitions on the importation of any article, the growth, produce or manufacture of the territory of the other Party, from whatever place arriving, than are or shall be imposed on the importation of any like article, the growth, produce or manufacture of any other foreign country. Nor shall any such duties, charges or conditions affecting importations be made effective retroactively.

Each of the High Contracting Parties binds itself unconditionally to impose no higher or other duties or charges and no other conditions, restrictions or prohibitions on the to persons and goods coming from or going to, or passing exportation of any article to the territory of the other Party than are or shall be imposed on the exportation of any like article to any other foreign country.

Nothing in this Treaty shall be construed to restrict the right of either High Contracting Party to impose on such terms as it may see fit, and subject to the sole requirement that there shall be no arbitrary discrimination against the other Party as compared with any other foreign country where similar conditions prevail, prohibitions or restrictions designed to protect human, animal, or plant life and health, or regulations for the enforcement of police or revenue laws of the United States or of Finland relating to imports the importation, transportation, or sale of which is prohibited or restricted, nor shall anything in this Treaty be construed to restrict the measures applicable in either the United States or Finland to seeds of agricultural plants which, on account of their origin, are deemed not to thrive in the territory of the respective countries.

Neither High Contracting Party shall establish or maintain restrictions on imports from or exports to the territory of the other Party which are not applied to the import and export of any like article originating in or destined for any other country. Any withdrawal of an import or export restriction which is granted even temporarily by one of the Parties in favor of the articles of a third country shall be applied immediately and unconditionally to like articles originating in or destined for the other Contracting Party. In the event of rations or quotas being established for the importation or exportation of articles restricted or prohibited, each of the High Contracting Parties agrees to grant for the importation from or exportation to the territory of the other Party an equitable share in the allocation of the quantity of restricted goods which may be authorized for importation or exportation.

ARTICLE VIII

Merchandise the growth, produce or manufacture of either of the High Contracting Parties, after importation into the territory of the other Party, shall not be subjected to other or higher internal taxes or charges, or to other or higher charges in respect of warehousing or other facilities, than those payable under like circumstances and conditions on like articles of national origin.

ARTICLE IX

Any advantage of whatsoever kind which either High Contracting Party may extend to any article, the growth, produce or manufacture of any foreign country, whether such favored State shall have been accorded such treatment gratuitously or for compensation, shall simultaneously and unconditionally, without request and without compensation, be extended to the like article the growth, produce or manufacture of the other High Contracting Party, from whatever place arriving.

ARTICLE X

The stipulations of this treaty regarding the treatment to be accorded by each High Contracting Party to the commerce of the other do not extend.

- (1) to the treatment which is accorded by the United States of America to the commerce of Cuba under the provisions of the Commercial Convention concluded by the United States and Cuba on December 11, 1902, or any other commercial convention which hereafter may be concluded by the United States with Cuba; or to the commerce of the United States with the Panama Canal Zone or with any of the dependencies of the United States or the commerce of the dependencies of the United States with one another under existing or future laws;
- (2) to the benefits which either High Contracting Party has accorded, or may accord, to its neighboring states in order to facilitate local traffic;
- (3) to the treatment which Finland accords or may hereafter accord to the commerce of Estonia.

There shall be complete freedom of transit through the territory including the territorial waters of each High Contracting Party on routes convenient for international transit through the territory of the other High Contracting Party, except such persons as may be forbidden admission into its territory or goods of which the importation may be prohibited by law. Persons and goods in transit shall not be subjected to any transit duty, or to any unnecessary delays or restrictions, or to any discrimination as regards charges, facilities, or any other matter.

Goods in transit must be entered at the proper custom house, but they shall be exempt from all customs and similar duties.

All charges imposed on persons and goods in transit shall be reasonable, having regard to the conditions of the traffic. The provisions of this article do not apply to the Panama Canal or to waterways and canals which constitute inter-

ARTICLE XII

All articles which are or may be legally imported from foreign countries into ports of the territory of the United States or are or may be legally exported therefrom in vessels of the United States may likewise be imported into those ports or exported therefrom in Finnish vessels without being liable to any other or higher duties or charges whatsoever than if such articles were imported or exported in vessels of the United States; and, reciprocally all articles which are or may be legally imported from foreign countries into the ports of the territory of Finland or are or may be legally exported therefrom in Finnish vessels may likewise be imported into those ports or exported therefrom in vessels of the United States without being liable to any other or higher duties or charges whatsoever than if such articles were imported or exported in Finnish vessels.

In the same manner there shall be perfect equality in relation to the flags of the two countries with regard to bounties, drawbacks, and other privileges of this nature of whatever denomination which may be allowed in the territory of each of the Contracting Parties, on goods imported or exported in national vessels so that such bounties, drawbacks and other privileges shall also and in like manner be allowed on goods imported or exported in vessels of the other country.

national boundaries.

With respect to the amount and collection of duties or charges on imports and exports of every kind each of the High Contracting Parties binds itself to give to the vessels of the other the advantage of every favor, privilege or immunity which it shall have accorded to the vessels of a third State, whether such favored State shall have been accorded such treatment gratuitously or for compensation.

ARTICLE XIII

No duties of tonnage, harbor, pilotage, lighthouse, quarantine, or other similar or corresponding duties or charges of whatever denomination, levied in the name or for the profit of the Government, public functionaries, private individuals, corporations or establishments of any kind shall be imposed in the ports of the territory of either High Contracting Party upon the vessels of the other, which shall not equally, under the same conditions, be imposed on national vessels. Such equality of treatment shall apply reciprocally to the vessels of the two countries respectively from whatever place they may arrive and whatever may be their place of destination.

ARTICLE XIV

Merchant vessels and other privately owned vessels under the flag of either of the High Contracting Parties shall be permitted to discharge portions of cargoes at any port open to foreign commerce in the territory of the other High Contracting Party, and to proceed with the remaining portions of such cargoes to any other ports of the same territory open to foreign commerce, on the same terms as national vessels and without paying other or higher tonnage dues or port charges in such cases than would be paid by national vessels in like circumstances. They shall be permitted, on the same terms as national vessels, to load in like manner at different ports in the same voyage outward.

Exceptions, however, shall be made to the provisions of this article and other provisions of this treaty in regard to

(1) coasting trade (cabotage), respecting which the High Contracting Parties shall concede to each other the mostfavored-nation treatment;

(2) traffic in natural or artificial inland waterways, not ordinarily navigable by transoceanic vessels, provided, however, that in regard to such traffic each High Contracting Party will grant to the other most-favored-nation treatment; and provided further, that such vessels of one of the High Contracting Parties as may be permitted to engage in traffic on inland waterways of the other, and the cargoes of such vessels, shall be subject to no other or higher charges than national vessels and their cargoes:

(3) it is further understood that without modifying the stipulations of this Treaty, so far as the amount of pilotage fees is concerned, the United States agrees not to claim, under this Treaty, for American ships any special concessions in regard to the employment of Government pilots which the Finnish Government has granted or may grant to Finnish and Swedish ships on voyages between Finland and Sweden confined to the Baltic Sea and its bays north of 59 degrees north latitude, so long as such concessions are not extended to the vessels of any third country;

(4) it is also understood that the United States will not claim, under this Treaty, any benefits which Finland has accorded, or may accord, to Russia in respect of fishing or sealing in its territorial waters in the Arctic Ocean.

ARTICLE XV

For the purposes of this treaty merchant vessels and other privately owned vessels under the flag of either of the High Contracting Parties and carrying the papers required by its national laws in proof of nationality shall be deemed to be the vessels of the Party whose flag is flown both within the territorial waters of the other High Contracting Party and on the high seas.

ARTICLE XVI

Limited liability and other corporations and associations, whether or not for pecuniary profit, which have been or may hereafter be organized in accordance with and under the laws, National, State or Provincial, of either High Contracting Party and maintain a central office within the territory thereof, shall have their juridical status recognized by the other High Contracting Party provided that they pursue no aims within its territory contrary to its laws. They shall enjoy free access to the courts of law and equity, on conforming to the laws regulating the matter, as well for the prosecution as for the defense of rights in all the degrees of jurisdiction established by law.

The right of such corporations and associations of either High Contracting Party so recognized by the other to establish themselves within its territory, establish branch offices and fulfill their functions therein shall depend upon, and be governed solely by, the consent of such party as expressed in its National, State or Provincial laws. If such consent be given on the condition of reciprocity the condition shall be deemed to relate to the provisions of the laws, National, State or Provincial under which the foreign corporation or association desiring to exercise such rights is organized.

ARTICLE XVII

The nationals of either High Contracting Party shall enjoy within the territory of the other, reciprocally and upon compliance with the conditions there imposed, such rights and privileges as have been or may hereafter be accorded the nationals of any other State with respect to the organization of and participation in limited liability and other corporations and associations, for pecuniary profit or otherwise, including the rights of promotion, incorporation, purchase and ownership and sale of shares and the holding of executive or official positions therein. In the exercise of the foregoing rights and with respect to the regulation or procedure concerning the organization or conduct of such corporations or associations, such nationals shall be subjected to no conditions less favorable than those which have been or may hereafter be imposed upon the nationals of the most favored nation. The rights of any of such corporations or associations as may be organized or controlled or participated in by the nationals of either High Contracting Party within the territory of the other to exercise any of their functions therein, shall be governed by the laws and regulations, National, State or Provincial, which are in force or may hereafter be established within the territory of the Party wherein they propose to engage in business.

The nationals of either High Contracting Party, shall moreover, enjoy within the territory of the other, reciprocally and upon compliance with the conditions therein imposed, such rights and privileges as have been or may hereafter be accorded the nationals of any other State with respect to the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain of the other. It is understood, however, that neither High Contracting Party shall be required by anything in this paragraph to grant any application for any such right or privilege if at the time such application is presented the granting of all similar applications shall have been suspended or discontinued.

ARTICLE XVIII

Commercial travelers representing manufacturers, merchants and traders domiciled in the territory of either High Contracting Party shall on their entry into and sojourn in the territory of the other Party and on their departure therefrom be accorded the most-favored-nation treatment in respect of customs and other privileges and of all charges and taxes of whatever denomination applicable to them or their samples.

Commercial travelers, for the purpose of this article, shall be understood to include representatives of commercial concerns who are traveling for the purpose of soliciting orders.

Either High Contracting Party may require, as a condition for granting the privileges mentioned in Paragraph 1 of this article, the presentation of an authentic document establishing the identity and authority of the commercial traveler. For this purpose any of the following documents, issued in the country where the commercial concern represented is domiciled, shall be accepted as satisfactory to the authorities of the country of destination:

a) a certificate issued by the official authority designated for the purpose;

b) a certificate issued by a Chamber of Commerce, or

c) a signed statement, issued by the concern or concerns represented, in which case it may be required to be certified by a consular officer of the country of destination.

ARTICLE XIX

Each of the High Contracting Parties agrees to receive from the other, consular officers in those of its ports, places and cities, where it may be convenient and which are open to consular representatives of any foreign country.

Consular officers of each of the High Contracting Parties shall, after entering upon their duties, enjoy reciprocally in the territory of the other all the rights, privileges, exemptions and immunities which are enjoyed by officers of the same grade of the most favored nation. As official agents, such officers shall be entitled to the high consideration of all officials, national or local, with whom they have official intercourse in the state which receives them.

The Government of each of the High Contracting Parties shall furnish free of charge the necessary exequatur of such consular officers of the other as present a regular commission signed by the chief executive of the appointing state and under its great seal; and they shall issue to a subordinate or substitute consular officer duly appointed by an accepted superior consular officer with the approbation of his Government, or by any other competent officer of that Government, such documents as according to the laws of the respective countries shall be requisite for the exercise by the appointee of the consular function. On the exhibition of an exequatur, or other document issued in lieu thereof to such subordinate, such consular officer shall be permitted to enter upon his duties and to enjoy the rights, privileges and immunities granted by this treaty.

ARTICLE XX

Consular officers, nationals of the state by which they are appointed, shall be exempt from arrest except when charged with the commission of offenses locally designated as crimes and subjecting the individual guilty thereof to punishment as a criminal. Such officers shall be exempt from military billetings and from service of any military or naval, administrative or police character whatsoever.

In criminal cases the attendance at the trial by a consular officer as a witness may be demanded by the prosecution or defense. The demand shall be made with all possible regard for the consular dignity and the duties of the office; and there shall be compliance on the part of the consular officer.

Consular officers shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the courts in the state which receives them in civil cases, subject to the proviso, however, that when the officer is a national of the state which appoints him and is engaged in no private occupation for gain, his testimony shall be taken orally or in writing at his residence or office and with due regard for his convenience. The officer should, however, voluntarily give his testimony at the trial whenever it is possible to do so without serious interference with his official duties.

ARTICLE XXI

Consular officers, including employees in a consulate, nationals of the State by which they are appointed other than those engaged in private occupations for gain within the State where they exercise their functions shall be exempt from all taxes, National, State, Provincial, and Municipal, levied upon their persons or upon their property, except taxes levied on account of the possession or ownership of immovable property situated in, or income derived from property of any kind situated or belonging within the territory of the State within which they exercise their functions. All consular officers and employees, nationals of the State appointing them shall be exempt from the payment of taxes on the salary, fees or wages received by them in compensation for their consular services.

The Government of each High Contracting Party shall have the right to acquire and own land and buildings required for diplomatic or consular premises in the territory of the other High Contracting Party and also to erect buildings in such territory for the purposes stated subject to local building regulations.

Lands and buildings situated in the territory of either High Contracting Party, of which the other High Contracting Party is the legal or equitable owner and which are used exclusively for governmental purposes by that owner, shall be exempt from taxation of every kind, National, State, Provincial and Municipal, other than assessments levied for services or local public improvements by which the premises are benefited.

ARTICLE XXII

Consular officers may place over the outer door of their respective offices the arms of their State with an appropriate inscription designating the official office. Such officers may also hoist the flag of their country on their offices including those situated in the capitals of the two countries. They may likewise hoist such flag over any boat or vessel employed in the exercise of the consular function.

The consular offices and archives shall at all times be inviolable. They shall under no circumstances be subjected to invasion by any authorities of any character within the country where such offices are located. Nor shall the authorities under any pretext make any examination or seizure of papers or other property deposited within a consular office. Consular offices shall not be used as places of asylum. No consular officer shall be required to produce official archives in court or testify as to their contents.

Upon the death, incapacity, or absence of a consular officer having no subordinate consular officer at his post, secretaries or chancellors, whose official character may have previously been made known to the government of the State where the consular function was exercised, may temporarily exercise the consular function of the deceased or incapacitated or absent consular officer; and while so acting shall enjoy all the rights, prerogatives and immunities granted to the incumbent.

ARTICLE XXIII

Consular officers, nationals of the State by which they are appointed, may, within their respective consular districts, address the authorities, National, State, Provincial or Municipal, for the purpose of protecting their countrymen in the enjoyment of their rights accruing by treaty or otherwise. Complaint may be made for the infraction of those rights. Failure upon the part of the proper authorities to grant redress or to accord protection may justify interposition through the diplomatic channel, and in the absence of a diplomatic representative, a consul general or the consular officer stationed at the capital may apply directly to the government of the country.

ARTICLE XXIV

Consular officers may, in pursuance of the laws of their own country, take, at any appropriate place within their respective districts, the depositions of any occupants of vessels of their own country, or of any national of, or of any person having permanent residence within the territory of, their own country. Such officers may draw up, attest, certify and authenticate unilateral acts, deeds and testamentary dispositions of their countrymen, and also contracts to which a countryman is a party. They may draw up, attest, certify and authenticate written instruments of any kind purporting to express or embody the conveyance or encumbrance of property of any kind within the territory of the State by which such officers are appointed, and unilateral acts, deeds, testamentary dispositions and contracts relating to property situated, or business to be transacted within, the territory of the State by which they are appointed, embracing unilateral acts, deeds, testamentary dispositions or agreements executed solely by nationals of the State within which such officers exercise their functions.

Instruments and documents thus executed and copies and translations thereof, when duly authenticated under his official seal by the consular officer shall be received as evidence in the territories of the contracting parties as original documents or authenticated copies, as the case may be, and shall have the same force and effect as if drawn by and executed before a notary or other public officer duly authorized in the country by which the consular officer was appointed; provided, always, that such documents shall have been drawn and executed in conformity to the laws and regulations of the country where they are designed to take

ARTICLE XXV

A consular officer shall have exclusive jurisdiction over controversies arising out of the internal order of private vessels of his country, and shall alone exercise jurisdiction in cases, wherever arising, between officers and crews, pertaining to the enforcement of discipline on board, providing the vessels and the persons charged with wrongdoing shall have entered a port within his consular district. Such an officer shall also have jurisdiction over issues concerning the adjustment of wages and the execution of contracts relating thereto provided the local laws so permit.

When an act committed on board of a private vessel under the flag of the State by which the consular officer has been appointed and within the territorial waters of the State to which he has been appointed constitutes a crime according to the laws of that State, subjecting the person guilty thereof to punishment as a criminal, the consular officer shall not exercise jurisdiction except insofar as he is permitted to do so by the local law.

A consular officer may freely invoke the assistance of the local police authorities in any matter pertaining to the maintenance of internal order on board of a vessel under the flag of his country within the territorial waters of the State to which he is appointed, and upon such a request the requisite assistance shall be given.

A consular officer may appear with the officers and crews of vessels under the flag of his country before the judicial authorities of the State to which he is appointed to render assistance as an interpreter or agent.

ARTICLE XXVI

In case of the death of a national of either High Contracting Party in the territory of the other without having in the locality of his decease any known heirs or testamentary executors by him appoined, the competent local authorities shall at once inform the nearest consular officer of the State of which the deceased was a national of the fact of his death, in order that necessary information may be forwarded to the parties interested.

In case of the death of a national of either of the High Contracting Parties without will or testament, in the territory of the other High Contracting Party, the consular officer of the State of which the deceased was a national and within whose district the deceased made his home at the time of death, shall, so far as the laws of the country permit and pending the appointment of an administrator and until letters of administration have been granted, be deemed qualified to take charge of the property left by the decedent for the preservation and protection of the same. Such consular officer shall have the right to be appointed as administrator within the discretion of a tribunal or other agency controlling the administration of estates provided the laws of the place where the estate is administered so permit.

In case of the death of a national of either of the High Contracting Parties without will or testament and without any known heirs resident in the country of his decease, the consular officer of the country of which the deceased was a national shall be appointed administrator of the estate of the deceased, provided the regulations of his own Government permit such appointment and provided such appointment is not in conflict with local law and the tribunal having jurisdiction has no special reasons for appointing someone else.

Whenever a consular officer accepts the office of administrator of the estate of a deceased countryman, he subjects himself as such to the jurisdiction of the tribunal or other agency making the appointment for all necessary purposes to the same extent as a national of the country where he was appointed.

ARTICLE XXVII

Each of the High Contracting Parties agrees to permit the entry free of all duty and without examination of any kind, of all furniture, equipment and supplies intended for official use in the consular offices of the other, and to extend to such consular officers of the other and their families and suites as are its nationals, the privilege of entry free of duty of their baggage and all other personal property, whether accompanying the officer to his post or imported at any time during his incumbency thereof; provided, nevertheless, that no article, the importation of which is prohibited by the law of either of the High Contracting Parties, may be brought into its territory.

It is understood, however, that this privilege shall not be extended to consular officers who are engaged in any private occupation for gain in the countries to which they are accredited, save with respect to governmental supplies.

ARTICLE XXVIII

All proceedings relative to the salvage of vessels of either High Contracting Party wrecked upon the coasts of the other shall be directed by the Consular Officer of the country to which the vessel belongs and within whose district the wreck may have occurred. Pending the arrival of such officer, who shall be immediately informed of the occurrence. the local authorities shall take all necessary measures for the protection of persons and the preservation of wrecked property. The local authorities shall not otherwise interfere than for the maintenance of order, the protection of the interests of the salvors, if these do not belong to the crews that have been wrecked, and to carry into effect the arrangements made for the entry and exportation of the merchandise saved. It is understood that such merchandise is not to be subjected to any custom house charges, unless it be intended for consumption in the country where the wreck may have taken place.

The intervention of the local authorities in these different cases shall occasion no expense of any kind, except such as may be caused by the operations of salvage and the preservation of the goods saved, together with such as would be incurred under similar circumstances by vessels of the nation

ARTICLE XXIX

A consular officer of either High Contracting Party may in behalf of his non-resident countrymen, and without being required to produce his authorization, collect and receipt for their distributive shares derived from estates in process of probate or accruing under the provisions of so-called Workmen's Compensation Laws or other like statutes provided he remit any funds so received through the appropriate agencies of his Government to the proper distributees, and provided further that he furnish to the authority or agency making distribution through him reasonable evidence of such remission.

ARTICLE XXX

A consular officer of either High Contracting Party shall have the right to inspect within the ports of the other High Contracting Party within his consular district, the private vessels of any flag destined or about to clear for ports of the country appointing him in order to observe the sanitary conditions and measures taken on board such vessels, and to be enabled thereby to execute intelligently bills of health and other documents required by the laws of his country, and to inform his Government concerning the extent to which its sanitary regulations have been observed at ports of departure by vessels destined to its ports, with a view to facilitating entry of such vessels therein; provided however, that in respect of vessels of any country other than the High Contracting Parties, the Government concerned does not object.

ARTICLE XXXI

Except as otherwise provided in this treaty, the provisions thereof shall apply to all territories under the sovereignty and authority of each of the High Contracting Parties. It is understood, however, that they shall not apply to the Panama Canal Zone.

ARTICLE XXXII

The present Treaty shall be ratified and the ratifications thereof shall be exchanged at Washington. The Treaty shall take effect in all its provisions thirty days from the date of the exchange of ratifications and shall remain in full force for the term of one year thereafter.

If within six months before the expiration of the aforesaid period of one year neither High Contracting Party notifies to the other an intention of modifying by change or omission, any of the provisions of any of the Articles in this Treaty or of terminating it upon the expiration of the aforesaid period, the Treaty shall remain in full force and effect indefinitely after the aforesaid period subject always to termination on a notice of six months.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed this Treaty and have affixed their seals thereto.

Done in duplicate, each in the English and Finnish languages both authentic, at Washington, D. C., this thirteenth day of February, one thousand nine hundred and thirty-four.

PROTOCOL

At the moment of signing the Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Consular Rights between the United States of America and the Republic of Finland, the undersigned Plenipotentiaries duly authorized by their respective Governments have agreed as follows:

1) Wherever the term "consular officer" is used in this Treaty it shall be understood to mean Consuls General, Consuls, Vice Consuls and Consular Agents to whom an exequatur or other document of recognition has been issued pursuant to the provisions of paragraph 3 of Article XIX, provided however that the customs courtesies accorded to consular officers under Article XXVII shall apply to consular officers en route to their post for the first time, prior to the receipt of an exequatur.

2) Upon entering into force of the accompanying Treaty of Friendship, Commerce, and Consular Rights, the Agreement effected by exchange of notes between the United States and Finland, singed at Washington, D.C., on May 2, 1925, and also the Agreement effected by exchange of notes between the United States and Finland, signed at Washington, D.C., on December 21, 1925, shall cease to be operative.

In faith whereof the undersigned Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Protocol and affixed thereto their respective seals.

Done in duplicate each in the English and Finnish languages, both authentic, at Washington, D. C., the thirteenth day of February, 1934.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is this the usual treaty of friendship?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; it is the usual treaty of friendship. There is no difference in the form.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no amendment, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment. The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The resolution of ratification was read, as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive D (73d Cong., 2d sess.), a treaty of friendship, commerce, and consular rights between the United States and the Republic of Finland, signed at Washington, February 13, 1934.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Twothirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution is agreed to and the treaty is ratified.

ANTIWAR TREATY OF NONAGGRESSION AND CONCILIATION

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask that Executive H (73d Cong., 2d sess.) be next considered.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive H (73d Cong., 2d sess.), antiwar treaty of nonaggression and conciliation, signed at Rio de Janeiro on October 10, 1933, by Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Mexico, Paraguay, and Uruguay, which was read the second time, as follows:

ANTI-WAR TREATY ON NON-AGGRESSION AND CONCILIATION

The states designated below, in the desire to contribute to the consolidation of peace, and to express their adherence to the efforts made by all civilized nations to promote the spirit of universal harmony:

To the end of condemning wars of aggression and territorial acquisitions that may be obtained by armed conquest, making them impossible and establishing their invalidity through the positive provisions of this treaty, and in order to replace them with pacific solutions based on lofty concepts of justice and equity:

Convinced that one of the most effective means of assuring the moral and material benefits which peace offers to the world, is the organization of a permanent system of conciliation for international disputes, to be applied immediately on the violation of the principles mentioned;

Have decided to put these aims of non-aggression and concord in conventional form, by concluding the present treaty, to which end they have appointed the undersigned plenipotentiaries, who, having exhibited their respective full powers, found to be in good and due form, have agreed upon the following:

ARTICLE I

The High Contracting Parties solemnly declare that they condemn wars of aggression in their mutual relations or those with other states, and that the settlement of disputes or controversies of any kind that may arise among them shall be effected only by the pacific means which have the sanction of international law.

ARTICLE II

They declare that as between the High Contracting Parties, territorial questions must not be settled by violence, and that they will not recognize any territorial arrangement which is not obtained by pacific means, nor the validity of the occupation or acquisition of territories that may be brought about by force of arms.

ARTICLE III

In case of non-compliance by any state engaged in a dispute, with the obligations contained in the foregoing articles, the contracting states undertake to make every effort for the maintenance of peace. To that end they will adopt in their character as neutrals a common and solidary attitude; they will exercise the political, juridical or economic means authorized by international law; they will bring the influence of public opinion to bear but will in no case resort to intervention either diplomatic or armed; subject to the attitude that may be incumbent on them by virtue of other collective treaties to which such states are signatories.

ARTICLE IV

The High Contracting Parties obligate themselves to submit to the conciliation procedure established by this treaty, the disputes specially mentioned and any others that may arise in their reciprocal relations, without further limitations than those enumerated in the following article, in all controversies which it has not been possible to settle by diplomatic means within a reasonable period of time.

ARTICLE V

The High Contracting Parties and the states which may in the future adhere to this treaty, may not formulate at the time of signature, ratification or adherence, other limitations to the conciliation procedure than those which are indicated below:

- (a) Differences for the solution of which treaties, conventions, pacts or pacific agreements of any kind whatever may have been concluded, which in no case shall be considered as annulled by this agreement, but supplemented thereby in so far as they tend to assure peace; as well as the questions or matters settled by previous treaties;
- (b) Disputes which the parties prefer to solve by direct settlement or submit by common agreement to an arbitral or judicial solution;
- (c) Questions which international law leaves to the exclusive competence of each state, under its constitutional system, for which reason the parties may object to their being submitted to the conciliation procedure before the national or local jurisdiction has decided definitively; except in the case of manifest denial or delay of justice, in which case the conciliation procedure shall be initiated within a year at the latest:
- (d) Matters which affect constitutional precepts of the parties to the controversy. In case of doubt, each party shall obtain the reasoned opinion of its respective tribunal or supreme court of justice, if the latter should be invested with such powers.

The High Contracting Parties may communicate, at any time and in the manner provided for by Article XV, an instrument stating that they have abandoned wholly or in part the limitations established by them in the conciliation procedure.

The effect of the limitations formulated by one of the contracting parties shall be that the other parties shall not consider themselves obligated in regard to that party save in the measure of the exceptions established.

ARTICLE VI

In the absence of a permanent Conciliation Commission or of some other international organization charged with this mission by virtue of previous treaties in effect, the High Contracting Parties undertake to submit their differences to the examination and investigation of a Conciliation Commission which shall be formed as follows, unless there is an agreement to the contrary of the parties in each case;

The Conciliation Commission shall consist of five members. Each party to the controversy shall designate a member who may be chosen by it from among its own nationals. The three remaining members shall be designated by common agreement by the parties from among the nationals of third Powers, who must be of different nationalities, must not have their customary residence in the territory of the interested parties nor be in the service of any of them. The parties shall choose the President of the Conciliation Commission from among the said three members.

If they cannot arrive at an agreement with regard to such designations, they may entrust the selection thereof to a third Power or to some other existing international organism. If the candidates so designated are rejected by the parties or by any one of them, each party shall present a list of candidates equal in number to that of the members to be selected, and the names of those to sit on the Conciliation Commission shall be determined by lot.

ARTICLE VII

The tribunals or supreme courts of justice which, in accordance with the domestic legislation of each State, may be competent to interpret, in the last or the sole instance and in matters under their respective jurisdiction, the Constitution, treaties, or the general principles of the law of nations, may be designated preferentially by the High Contracting Parties to discharge the duties entrusted by the present treaty to the Conciliation Commission. In this case the Tribunal or Court may be constituted by the whole bench or may designate some of its members to proceed alone or by forming a mixed commission with members of other courts or tribunals, as may be agreed upon by common accord between the parties to the dispute.

ARTICLE VIII

The Conciliation Commission shall establish its own rules of procedure, which shall provide in all cases for hearing both sides.

The parties to the controversy may furnish and the commission may require from them all the antecedents and information necessary. The parties may have themselves represented by delegates and assisted by advisers or experts, and also present evidence of all kinds.

ARTICLE IX

The labors and deliberations of the Conciliation Commission shall not be made public except by a decision of its own to that effect, with the assent of the parties.

In the absence of any stipulations to the contrary, the decisions of the commission shall be made by a majority vote, but the commission may not pronounce judgment on the substance of the case except in the presence of all its members.

ARTICLE X

It is the duty of the Commission to secure the conciliatory settlement of the disputes submitted to its consideration.

After an impartial study of the questions in dispute, it shall set forth in a report the outcome of its work and shall propose to the Parties bases of settlement by means of a just and equitable solution.

The report of the Commission shall in no case have the character of a final decision or arbitral award either with respect to the exposition or the interpretation of the facts, or with regard to the considerations or conclusions of law.

ARTICLE XI

The Conciliation Commission must present its report within one year counting from its first meeting unless the parties should decide by common agreement to shorten or extend this period.

The conciliation procedure having been once begun may be interrupted only by a direct settlement between the parties or by their subsequent decision to submit the dispute by common accord to arbitration or to international justice.

ARTICLE XII

In communicating its report to the parties, the Conciliation Commission shall fix for them a period which shall not exceed six months, within which they must decide as to the bases of the settlement it has proposed. On the expiration of this term, the Commission shall record in a final act the decision of the parties.

This period having expired without acceptance of the settlement by the parties, or the adoption by common accord of another friendly solution, the parties to the dispute shall regain their freedom of action to proceed as they may see fit within the limitations flowing from Articles I and  $\Pi$  of this treaty.

ARTICLE XIII

From the initiation of the conciliatory procedure until the expiration of the period fixed by the Commission for the parties to make a decision, they must abstain from any measure prejudicial to the execution of the agreement that may be proposed by the Commission and, in general, from any act capable of aggravating or prolonging the controversy.

ARTICLE XIV

During the conciliation procedure the members of the Commission shall receive honoraria the amount of which shall be established by common agreement by the parties to the controversy. Each of them shall bear its own expenses, and a moiety of the joint expenses or honoraria.

ARTICLE XV

The present treaty shall be ratified by the High Contracting Parties as soon as possible, in accordance with their respective constitutional procedures.

The original treaty and the instruments of ratification shall be deposited in the Ministry of Foreign Relations and Worship, of the Argentine Republic, which shall communicate the ratifications to the other signatory states. The treaty shall go into effect between the High Contracting. Parties 30 days after the deposit of the respective ratifications, and in the order in which they are effected.

ARTICLE XVI

This treaty shall remain open to the adherence of all states.

Adherence shall be effected by the deposit of the respective instrument in the Ministry of Foreign Relations and Worship of the Argentine Republic, which shall give notice thereof to the other interested states.

ARTICLE XVII

The present treaty is concluded for an indefinite time, but may be denounced by one year's notice, on the expiration of which the effects thereof shall cease for the denouncing state, and remain in force for the other states which are parties thereto, by signature or adherence.

The denunciation shall be addressed to the Ministry of Foreign Relations and Worship, of the Argentine Republic, which shall transmit it to the other interested states.

In witness whereof, the respective plenipotentiaries sign the present treaty in one copy, in the Spanish and Portuguese languages, and affix their seals thereto at Rio de Janeiro, D. F., on the tenth day of the month of October one thousand nine hundred thirty and three.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of | the Whole proceeded to consider the treaty, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with a reservation to the resolution of ratification.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this is the nonaggression treaty which was signed at Montevideo. I understand the treaty does not undertake to define aggression?

Mr. PITTMAN. It does not. There is only one important paragraph in the treaty and that is article V, which reads as follows:

Article V. The high contracting parties and the States which may in the future adhere to this treaty may not formulate at the time of signature, ratification, or adherence, other limitations to the conciliation procedure than those which are indicated below.

Those limitations are as follows:

(a) Differences for the solution of which treaties, conventions, pacts, or pacific agreements of any kind whatever may have been concluded, which in no case shall be considered as annulled by this agreement, but supplemented thereby insofar as they tend to assure peace; as well as the questions or matters settled by previous treaties.

(b) Disputes which the parties prefer to solve by direct settlement or submit by common agreement to an arbitral or judicial

(c) Questions which international law leaves to the exclusive competence of each State, under its constitutional system, for competence of each State, under its constitutional system, for which reason the parties may object to their being submitted to the conciliation procedure before the national or local jurisdiction has decided definitively; except in the case of manifest denial or delay of justice, in which case the conciliation procedure shall be initiated within a year at the latest.

(d) Matters which affect constitutional precepts of the parties to the controversy. In case of doubt, each party shall obtain the reasoned opinion of its respective tribunal or supreme court of justice, if the latter should be invested with such powers.

Those are the exceptions.

Mr. BORAH. I think article II is a very important provision. In that article it is declared that-

As between the high contracting parties, territorial questions must not be settled by violence, and that they will not recognize any territorial arrangement which is not obtained by pacific means, nor the validity of the occupation or acquisition of territories that may be brought about by force of arms.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is a reiteration, as I understand, of the Kellogg-Briand pact.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me an important provision of Mr. PITTMAN. Aside from that provision, the treaty prescribes the method of settlement. Each party desiring to submit the question in dispute shall appoint a representative. Those two shall select three nationals from other countries, and those whom they select must not be resident of either one of the disputant countries. If they cannot agree on the three, then each one of the representatives of the disputing countries select three names, making six in all, and out of the six by lot three are selected. It is also provided that supreme courts of the respective countries shall have arbitral power; the matter may be submitted to those courts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no amendment, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amend-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of ratification, with the reservation reported by the committee, will be read. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the adherence by the United States to Executive H (73d Cong., 2d sess.), the Antiwar Treaty of Nonaggression and Conciliation, signed at Rio de Janeiro on October 10, 1933, by Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Mexico, Paraguay, and Uruguay, in accordance with article 16 thereof, but subject to a reservation as follows:

"In adhering to this treaty the United States does not thereby

"In adhering to this treaty the United States does not thereby waive any rights it may have under other treaties or conventions or under international law."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the reservation to the resolution of ratification.

The reservation was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification as amended by the reservation. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification, as amended by the reservation, is agreed to, and the treaty is ratified.

PROTOCOL TO GENERAL CONVENTION OF INTER-AMERICAN CONCILIATION

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I now ask that Executive N, Seventy-third Congress, second session, be considered. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive N (73d Cong., 2d sess), an additional protocol to the General Convention of Inter-American Conciliation which was signed at Washington on January 5, 1929; the additional protocol was signed at Montevideo, Uruguay, December 26, 1933, by plenipotentiaries of the United States of America, Uruguay, Ecuador, and Chile to the seventh international conference of American states held at that capital, which was read the second time,

The high contracting parties of the General Convention of Inter-American Conciliation of the 5th of January 1929, convinced of the undeniable advantage of giving a permanent character to the Commissions of Investigation and Conciliation to which article 2 of said convention refers, agree to add to the aforementioned convention the following and additional protocol.

ARTICLE 1

Each country signatory to the treaty signed in Santiago, Chile, the 3d of May 1923 shall name, as soon as possible, by means of a bilateral agreement which shall be recorded in a simple exchange of notes with each one of the other signatories of the aforementioned treaty, those members of the various commissions provided for in article 4 of said treaty. The commissions so named shall have a permanent character and shall be called "Commissions of Investigation and Conciliation."

Any of the contracting parties may replace the members which have been designated, whether they be nationals or foreigners; but, at the same time, the substitute shall be named. In case the substitution is not made, the replacement shall not be effective.

ARTICLE 3

The commissions organized in fulfillment of article 3 of the aforementioned treaty of Santiago, Chile, shall be called "Permanent Diplomatic Commissions of Investigation and Conciliation.

ARTICIE 4

To secure the immediate organization of the commissions mentioned in the first article hereof, the high contracting parties engage themselves to notify the Pan American Union at the time of the deposit of the ratification of the present additional protocol in the Ministry of Foreign Relations of the Republic of Chile, the names of the two members whose designation they are empowered to make by article 4 of the convention of Santiago, Chile, and said members, so named, shall constitute the members of the commissions which are to be organized with bilateral character in accordance with this protocol.

It shall be left to the governing board of the Pan American Union to initiate measures for bringing about the nomination of the fifth member of each Commission of Investigation and Conciliation in accordance with the stipulation established in article 4 of the Convention of Santiago, Chile.

ARTICLE 6

In view of the character which this protocol has as an addition to the Convention of Conciliation of Washington, of January 5, 1929, the provision of article 16 of said convention shall be applied thereto.

In witness whereof, the plenipotentiaries hereinafter indicated have set their hands and their seals to this additional protocol in English, and Spanish, in the city of Montevideo, Republic of Uruguay, this 26th day of the month of December in the year 1933.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The resolution of ratification was read, as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive N (73d Cong., 2d sess.), an additional protocol to the General Convention of Inter-American Conciliation, which was signed at Washington on January 5, 1929. The additional protocol was signed at Montevideo, Uruguay, December 26, 1933, by plenipotentiaries of the United States of America, Uruguay, Ecuador, and Chile to the Seventh International Conference of American States held at that capital.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to, and the treaty is ratified.

CONVENTION WITH MEXICO PROVIDING FOR EN BLOC SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask to have Executive I, Seventy-third Congress, second session, considered.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider Executive I (73d Cong., 2d sess.), a convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States, signed at Mexico City on April 24, 1934, providing for the en bloc settlement of the claims presented by the Government of the United States to the Commission established by the Special Claims Convention concluded September 10, 1923, instead of by international adjudication in each case as provided in that convention; which was read the second time, as follows:

The United States of America and the United Mexican States, desiring to settle and adjust amicably the claims comprehended by the terms of the Special Claims Convention concluded by the two Governments on the 10th day of September 1923, without resort to the method of international adjudication provided by the said agreement, have decided to enter into a convention for that purpose, and to this end have nominated as their plenipotentiaries—

The President of the United States;

The Honorable Josephus Daniels, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America in Mexico:

The President of the United Mexican States; and

The Honorable José Manuel Puig Casauranc, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs;

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found to be in due and proper form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I

The claims of the United States of America covered by the Special Claims Convention of September 10, 1923, shall be adjusted, settled, and forever thereafter barred from further consideration, by the payment by the Government of Mexico to the Government of the United States a sum of money which shall equal the same proportion of the total amount claimed by the United States in all such cases (after the deductions provided for in article IV hereof), as the proportion represented—in respect to the total sum claimed by the Governments of Belgium, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, and Spain—by the total amount found to be due from the Mexican Government in the settlement of similar claims and under the conventions concluded with those Governments by the Government of Mexico during the years from September 25, 1924, to December 5, 1930.

the years from September 25, 1924, to December 5, 1930. To determine said general average percentage resulting from the settlements with said countries for similar claims, the classic arithmetical procedure shall be used; that is to say, the total amount awarded to Belgium, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, and Spain shall be multiplied by 100 and the product shall be divided by the total amount claimed by said countries.

Having thus determined the general average percentage, in order to ascertain the amount that Mexico should pay to the United States, said percentage shall be multiplied by the total amount claimed by the United States (after the deductions provided for in article IV of this convention) and the resulting products shall be divided by 100.

ARTICLE II

The amount provided for in article I above shall be paid at Washington, in dollars of the United States, at the rate of $500,000 per annum, beginning January 1, 1935, and continuing until the whole amount thereof shall have been paid.

ARTICLE III

Deferred payments, by which term is meant all payments made after January 2, 1935, shall bear interest at the rate of one fourth of 1 percent per annum for the first year counting from January 1, 1935, and an additional one fourth of 1 percent for each additional year until the maximum of 1 percent is reached which shall be applied beginning January 1, 1939. In the event of failure to make annual payments when due, however, this rate shall be increased at the rate of one fourth of 1 percent per annum on the amount of deferred payments during the period of any such delay until a maximum additional rate of 3 percent on such overdue amounts is reached.

ARTICLE IV

In computing the total amount of claims mentioned in article I above, there shall be deducted from the total amount of all special claims filed by the United States under the terms of the Special Claims Convention of September 10, 1923, the following items:

First. Claims decided.

Second. One half of the amount represented by the total claimed in all cases in which the same claim has been filed twice, either for the same or for different amounts, with the Special Claims Commission.

Third. From the claims registered for the same reason with both Commissions, there shall be deducted the total amount of all claims that in fact or apparently should have registered only with the General Claims Commission established by the convention of September 8, 1923.

The determination, by the representatives of both Governments referred to in article V of this convention, of claims that ought to be withdrawn from the Special Commission because in fact or apparently they should have been registered only with the General Commission for presentation and adjudication, does not prejudge the jurisdiction in and validity of said claims, which shall be determined in each case when examined and adjudicated by the commissioners or umpire in accordance with the provisions of the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, and the protocol of April 24, 1934, or the Special Claims Convention of September 10, 1923, and the protocol of June 18, 1932, in the event it shall be found by the commissioners or umpire to have been improperly eliminated from the Special Claims settlement. In the latter event, the claims improperly eliminated in the opinion of the commissioners or umpire shall be settled and adjusted by the same en bloc procedure prescribed by this convention for all claims registered with the Special Commission.

ARTICLE V

The total amount of the special claims of the United States, as well as the deductions to be made therefrom, in accordance with article IV above, and the proportionate amount thereof to be paid in accordance with article I above, shall be determined by a joint committee consisting of two members, one to be appointed by each Government, whose joint report, after due conference and consideration, shall be accepted as final.

ARTICLE VI

It is agreed that, for the purpose of facilitating a proper distribution by the United States to the respective claimants of the amount to be paid as provided for herein, the Mexican Government shall deliver to the United States, upon request, all evidence in its possession bearing upon the merits of particular claims and to procure, at the cost of the United States, such additional evidence as may be available in Mexico and as may be indicated by the Government of the United States to be necessary to the proper adjudication of particular claims, leaving to the judgment of the Mexican Government the furnishing of originals or certified copies thereof and with the specific reservation that no documents shall be delivered which owing to their nature cannot be furnished by said Government.

ARTICLE VII

The present convention shall be ratified by the high contracting parties in accordance with their respective constitutions, such ratifications being exchanged in Mexico City as soon as practicable and the convention shall take effect on the date of the exchange of ratifications.

In witness whereof, the respective plenipotentiaries have signed and affixed their seals to this convention.

Done in duplicate, in English and Spanish, at Mexico City this 24th day of April 1934.

JOSEPHUS DANIELS [SEAL] PUIG [SEAL]

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the chairman of the committee the terms of the treaty, and if this is a treaty which ostensibly provides for compensation to American nationals for the great wrongs which have been done them in the destruction of life and in the destruction of property by Mexico and by Mexican nationals?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is exactly it. As the Senator well knows, there are two kinds of claims which have been dealt with by two special commissions. One was called the "General Claims Commission", dealing with all character of claims which have arisen during the period since about 1860. The other claims were special ones arising out of revolutions in Mexico. The treaty, so far as those claims are concerned, deals with the period from 1910 to date.

I think probably it would be better, as this is a very important matter, that I have read a communication from our Ambassador to Mexico, Mr. Daniels. I ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D.C., May 26, 1934.

My Dear Senator Pittman: In compliance with the request which you made of me at yesterday's meeting of your committee to consider the pending convention with Mexico providing for an en bloc settlement of the special claims of citizens of the United States against Mexico, I take pleasure in furnishing you the following expression of my reasons for advocating the approval of this Convention which, by direction of the President, I had the honor of signing with the Mexican Minister for Foreign Affairs at Mexico City on April 24, 1934.

I understand that what you desire me to embody in this letter is not a detailed explanation of the provisions of the Convention, as their meaning and intent would appear to have been made sufficiently clear in the report of the Secretary of State of May 5, 1934, which accompanied the President's message of the same date transmitting the Convention to the Senate, and which is printed in Executive I, Seventy-third Congress, second session. You wish, rather, I take it, that I summarize informally in writing the statements which I made before your committee.

First of all, consideration should be given to the fact that all the claims dealt with in this Convention originated between the years 1910 and 1920—that is to say, in the tragic years following the departure of Diaz from the countryuntil the Mexicans began to emerge from a succession of revolutions which sorely rent that country. The truth is that between these years Mexico had no government able to enforce protection in all parts of the bleeding Republic. With the terrible days following the death of President Madero and Vice President Suarez, it will be recalled that President Taft advised Americans residing in Mexico to return to the United States. Upon his becoming fully acquainted with the inability of the Mexican usurping President to offer the semblance of protection, President Wilson gave the same counsel. He provided the means for the safe return of American citizens to escape the danger to which they and others were exposed. When finally, after the A.B.C. Conference, Carranza was recognized, the continual warfare of Villa in the northern part of Mexico and of Zapata in another sector and roving bands of other men withholding allegiance from Carranza, the conditions were beyond the control of the recognized authorities. During these trying 10 years many lives were lost and much property destroyed belonging to Americans and Europeans as well as of Mexicans who were objectionable to some men Upon the restoration of a responsible government, having behind it the will of the majority of the people, it was felt in Mexico that the killings and destruction of property were mainly by irresponsible bands or parties not responsible to government control. The United States pressed for the recognition and payment of the claims of our nationals which arose during the tragic 10 years. There seemed to be an impasse. For 3 years the United States refused to recognize the Mexican Government of President Obregon who had been put in office by the National Revolutionary Party. Mexico earnestly desired recognition by the United States. This was withheld until after the Payne-Warren Commission reached agreements with Mexico by which the Mexican Government pledged itself to submit all claims originating between 1910 and 1920 to a Special Claims Commission and all other claims to a General Claims Commission. These Commissions, composed of a Mexican, an American, and a representative of a neutral country, with changing personnel, held sessions a portion of the time after the Convention of September 1923. The result of these hearings has been disappointing in the extreme. The cases decided have been few. The cost of these Commissions to the United States has been in round figures, $1,900,000.

Upon my appointment as Ambassador to Mexico, I began a study here in Washington of the questions which would demand my attention in Mexico. The first concerned the settlement of the pending claims. Within a brief period I reached the conclusion that the hearings had been so long drawn out and seemed so interminable that the matter might properly be called the modern case of Jarndyce v. Jarndyce.

I suggested to the Secretary of State that a less expensive and more expeditious method of adjustment should be sought.

About that time I had a call from the Honorable Gonzalez Roa, Ambassador from Mexico to the United States, who presented a message from the Honorable José Manuel Puig Casauranc, Minister of Foreign Relations of Mexico, asking him to take up with me the question of an en bloc settlement. The Minister for Foreign Affairs wired that upon my arrival in Mexico City he would like at once to enter into negotiations looking to such settlement. During the more than a year that has elapsed during my mission in Mexico, my time has been largely occupied with discussions and conferences relating to the settlement of these claims. The Mexican Government took the ground that a fair precedent for settlement could be found in the percentage agreed upon by Mexico and the United States in the settlements under the conventions of 1839 and 1868. That percentage was 1.25. This view was not acceptable to our Government.

Later, after Mexico had reached settlements with all the European countries for like claims originating within the same period, it was ascertained that the average percentage of recovery between Mexico and these European countries was about 2.65. The Mexican Government proposed that a similar settlement be made for like claims between that country and the United States. Inasmuch as our country and Mexico are the nearest neighbors, it seems to me that we could not insist upon receiving a larger percentage for our claims than the European countries had accepted. I therefore recommended acceptance to the Secretary of He approved. By direction of the President, I signed the Convention on the 24th day of April 1934, with the Honorable José Manuel Puig Casauranc, Minister of Foreign Affairs, who was thereunto authorized by the President of Mexico. The carrying out of the Convention awaits the approval of the Senates of the United States and Mexico. The Senate of that country convenes in September, and I do not think there is any doubt it will ratify the Convention if the Senate of the United States votes ratification at this session of Congress.

Already, in anticipation of favorable action, I have caused officials of the Embassy to take up with officials of the Foreign Office the study, for the benefit of the Joint Commissioners provided for in article 5 of the Convention, of the question of just division of those claims which have been filed by American claimants with both Commissions. We also hope by September, for the information of the Commissioners, to make a definite computation of the total amount of the special claims, and an accurate computation of the specific percentage of liability to be applied. Therefore, if our Senate ratifies the Convention at this session, it will make possible the payment of the first $500,000 by January 1, as contemplated under the terms of the Convention, with like yearly payments of $500,000 each year until the full amount, estimated at around $7,000,000, is paid.

If it be suggested that the percentage is small, the answer is that many of the claims are, as in most claims, both national and international, larger than can be established by evidence. Some of these claims are of doubtful validity—others are so clearly just that those claimants should not longer be denied such payment as will give them real money during their natural lives. Further delay will in all probability deny them any compensation in time to meet their present needs.

The acceptance of the percentage for all the claims, valid or unsustainable, does not at all mean that all claimants will receive the same percentage. By no means. The sum received will be distributed to claimants by a domestic commission or other domestic agency on the basis of the merit of the claims. Those lacking merit will be eliminated by the United States officials charged with the task while the just claims will be promptly awarded the just amount found to be due. It is believed that when the money to be paid by Mexico is properly distributed in this manner each claimant will be fairly dealt with.

Furthermore, these claims are but one of several very important problems which exist in our present-day relations with Mexico. By accepting this settlement, which to my mind is entirely equitable, we would, I firmly believe, go a long way toward demonstrating our friendly and neighborly disposition and thus foster a spirit of cooperation which should help materially to further a solution of other important questions.

In support of the opinion that the proposed basis of settlement is eminently fair to the interested American claimants are the following additional facts:

First. This percentage of liability is to be computed on the basis of all the claims filed, regardless of class or quality, excepting only those cases already decided, and, therefore, while the percentage of liability agreed to be paid by Mexico is comparatively small, it represents, as a matter of fact, what is estimated to be the full value of the meritorious claims.

Second. The percentage of liability to be paid in this case, namely, about 2.65, compares very favorably with that found to be due in other adjudications. For instance, the liability found to be due the United States in the settlements of 1839 and 1863 with Mexico averaged 1.25 percent; the awards of the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission, established pursuant to the Treaty of Paris of 1898, to pass upon all claims against the Spanish Government, amounted to 0.021 percent of the amounts claimed and judgments rendered by the United States Court of Claims during the period 1920–32 amounted to approximately 0.6 percent of the amounts claimed. I have been advised that many letters have already been received by the Department of State expressing the gratification of individual claims that real progress in the settlement of their claims is now promised.

To sum up the advantages which will be brought about by the proposed arrangement, are:

- The removal of these contentious claims from the field of international relations;
- 2. The systematic and definite payment by Mexico, to begin in the near future instead of being postponed indefinitely;
- 3. The placing of the settlement of the claims of our nationals in the hands of officials of our own country.

I am, with assurances of appreciation of the opportunity of appearing before your committee,

Sincerely yours,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

The Honorable Key PITTMAN, United States Senate.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement.

It will be remembered that the Special Claims Commission was created in 1923. Since that time the procedure has been exceedingly discouraging. Nothing has been settled under that Commission in a period of 11 years. The whole method of adjustment was slow and impractical. The situation looked perfectly hopeless. So, when Mr. Daniels was appointed Ambassador to Mexico, as Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee I called his attention to the hopelessness of the attempted recovery under the Special Claims Commission, and stated that I thought it was worthy of his immediate study.

This letter indicates that the Ambassador has given a great deal of study to the question. The Ambassador appeared before the Foreign Relations Committee and made a very full and clear statement with regard to the whole matter. At my request he placed his statement in the form of a memorandum, which he has submitted and which has been read to the Senate.

These special claims against the Mexican Government amount to $411,000,000. There is no doubt whatever that a number of the claims are bona fide. It happens that those claims are the small ones. They are the claims, for instance, where settlers have suffered direct loss that may be very simply estimated. While there are many of those, the total is not large. On the other hand, claims have been filed that are grossly exaggerated as to amount, or even as to legal liability.

For instance, one claim is based on a United States patent, which patent I believe was also allowed in Mexico, on the theory that if there had not been a revolution the man would have earned one hundred or two hundred million dollars from his patent. It is purely a question of contingency that never could be determined.

When we come to the total of $411,000,000 claimed for damages to American citizens arising out of the revolutions commencing in 1910, we are compelled frankly to admit that many of the claims are grossly exaggerated. I happen to know personally of some which in my opinion are placed at | into account. The burden is thrown on our own Governa figure from 10 to 15 times what anyone would consider at all reasonable.

Now, the point is this: A total of $380,000,000 was claimed by Belgium, Germany, Italy, France, Great Britain, and Spain.

Those governments came to the conclusion that this process of bloc settlement was the most satisfactory, and they settled their claims on a basis of 2.65 percent of the total claims and are being paid their money. Those countries then adjudicated as between the claims of their own nationals.

As the Ambassador says in his letter, when we settled the claims of Mexico in 1860 and later, less than 2 percent was the figure on which we finally settled. Mexico naturally thought that that was a precedent, so far as we were concerned, but the Ambassador insisted that the present claims should be settled on the same basis as that used in the settlements with other foreign governments.

As to the amounts the legitimate claimants will get, the Secretary says that he thinks the total amount will be practically the amount actually due us. If that is the case, then the elimination of patently false claims and reduction of exaggerated claims will leave an amount for just claims, claims of those who were actually damaged to the extent claimed and whose property was destroyed, and where the damages, as I have said, can be actually ascertained, sufficent to enable them to recover a large portion of their money, if not all.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield. Mr. CUTTING. I call the attention of the Senator to two sentences in the letter of Ambassador Daniels, as follows:

When finally, after the A.B.C. Conference, Carranza was recognized, the continual warfare of Villa in the northern part of Mexico and of Zapata in another sector and roving bands of other men withholding allegiance from Carranza, the conditions were beyond the control of the recognized authorities.

Further on he said:

Upon the restoration of a responsible government, having behind it the will of the majority of the people, it was felt in Mexico that the killings and destruction of property were mainly by irresponsible bands or parties not responsible to government

Mr. President, as the Senator is aware, the United States has always taken the opposite view in that regard, and especially concerning the depredations committed by General Villa. I have studied this matter pretty carefully, although I have not my memoranda with me, and I know that former Ambassador Morrow took the same positionnamely, that under the Mexican precedents themselves there was a distinct responsibility for the actions of the Villa party in Mexico at the time of the depredations.

I hope the Senator can give me some assurance that the depredations made by the Villistas will be considered a legitimate part of the claims made in behalf of United States citizens. The Senator will remember in particular that an entire town in the State of New Mexico was wiped out by the raids of General Villa, as a consequence of which the United States sent an expeditionary force into Mexico, which, unfortunately, accomplished very meager results.

What I want to ask the Senator is whether we can be assured that those claims have not been dropped, or will not be dropped, if we shall ratify the treaty as it comes before us.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the paragraph the Senator read from Ambassador Daniel's letter gave the viewpoint of the Mexican Government. The Ambassador still holds as our Government has held and does now holdthat the Government of Mexico had to hold itself responsible to preserve order.

As to the Villa claims, there has been an effort in other special treaties to exclude certain revolutionary claims, particularly in dealing with what we call the "general claims." But in making up the total of the claims, which amounts to $411,000,000, the Villa claims and all other claims are taken | been invited to Mexico to aid in the development of that ment to determine as to what claims are legitimate and what are not legitimate. Therefore those who suffered from the Villa raids will have exactly the same opportunity as will those who suffered in other raids.

I do not think we can do anything else now, in view of what other governments have done, than to try this matter out

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I agree with the statement made by the Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relalations, that in view of the settlements which have been made between Mexico and Great Britain and other countries, we will have to take this settlement, in all probability, or we will get no settlement at all. I do think, however, that in all likelihood the result of this treaty will be that some of the claims, such as the Villa claims, will be eliminated; perhaps not entirely; they may be considered in part, but, in view of the attitude which Mexico takes, it is likely that, generally speaking, they will be eliminated. Nevertheless, Great Britain and the other countries having settled with Mexico, we are in a position where we cannot hope to secure better treatment than that which they have secured.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I do not desire to make any argument against the ratification of the treaty; I think there is a great deal to be said for it. The difficulty is, of course, that the Mexican Government is totally unable to pay anything but a small fraction of what we consider our just claims. I have every sympathy with the magnificent efforts being made by the present government in Mexico to restore order and to educate the people of their great country, and to raise them to a condition of prosperity such as they have never enjoyed in the past. I think they are doing a wonderful work along those lines, and certainly nothing we should do ought to be allowed to interfere with what they are doing.

Nevertheless, I hardly think it is fair to compare our claims against Mexico with those of Great Britain or of other countries. There is no other country which has been invaded by the bands of Mexican leaders as the United States has been.

I must say that the statement of the Senator from Idaho has given me a certain amount of apprehension lest the Government, in assessing the proportion to the different claimants, should place the Villista claims in a lesser category than those of other claimants. I simply want to make my own position clear, that I am confident that the Government will adopt the attitude announced by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and will give claims of this kind the same consideration that will be had for other claims.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if there were a possibility of our Government taking the position suggested by the Senator from New Mexico, to the effect that American nationals who have claims against Mexico growing out of the operations of Villa and other Mexicans, were to be placed in a different category from that occupied by American citizens whose claims are based upon wrongs sustained in other parts of Mexico, I should oppose this treaty. It is well known that many American citizens who had homes and property and interests in the northern States of Mexico—among them Sonora and Chihuahua-were robbed and plundered, and some of them killed during the operations by Villa, Zapata, and other Mexican military leaders and perhaps bandit leaders during the closing years of the administration of President Taft and also during the administration of President Wilson. Certainly there should be no discrimination against these American citizens. They are entitled to be placed in the same class as other American nationals who have claims against Mexico. Several thousand American citizens had homes and valuable real and personal property in the northern States of Mexico. They had converted desert lands into fertile fields and had built cities and towns and had added to the prosperity and the development of Mexico. As stated they were driven out during the revolutionary period after the Diaz regime. Many Americans had country. They had expended millions of dollars in the building of railroads, electric-light plants, and mills and smelters for the treatment of ores and in building up various industries in many parts of Mexico. They had acquired lands, paying for them full value, and had, at great expense, converted these lands into fertile fields, plantations, meadows, and pastures for the maintenance of the cattle and other livestock with which they were enriching the districts in which they lived. Thousands of Mexicans received employment at the hands of American citizens who were engaged in various commercial and industrial activities.

In 1920, as I recall, I offered a resolution in the Senate calling for an investigation of the conditions in Mexico. The resolution was adopted and a committee of three Senators named to carry out the terms of the resolution. The Democratic member of the committee was Senator Marcus A. Smith, of Arizona, now deceased. This committee spent weeks and months in the investigation and heard the testimony of scores of witnesses. The report of the committee stated that property belonging to American citizens, valued at more than $500,000,000, as I now recall, had either been destroyed or confiscated by Mexico and its nationals. May I repeat that the Americans who were living in Mexico and who made investments in that country were not trespassers. They had been invited, and indeed, urged to make investments in Mexico and to build homes and towns and cities, and to aid the Mexican Government and the Mexican people in the industrial and economic development of their country. It is not too much to say that these Americans made important contributions to the financial, industrial, and economic development of Mexico. As stated, thousands were driven out of Mexico and hundreds of them were killed and a large number subjected to indignities and ill treatment. My recollection is that the report of the committee referred to, proved that more than 450 Americans lawfully in Mexico, engaged in peaceful pursuits, were killed by Mexicans and more than a hundred and twenty-five American citizens who were in the United States were killed by Mexican nationals who fired across the boundary line.

It has been contended by some Americans that those who confiscated or destroyed their property were military forces of the Mexican Government-not bandits, but Mexican soldiers, serving under either a de facto or de jure government. There are many instances where American citizens who purchased lands in Mexico and improved the same were wholly deprived of their property, with no compensation whatever having been offered or paid to them. That citizens of the United States lawfully in Mexico have been abused, maltreated, and killed, no one can deny. That some of these wrongs were perpetrated by those in control of the Mexican Government, I think must be admitted. Undoubtedly there was banditry and roving, irregular military bands who preyed upon American citizens as well as upon Mexicans. Undoubtedly conditions in Mexico for a number of years following the regime of President Diaz were unsatisfactory. Property worth hundreds of millions of dollars was destroyed. The nationals of a number of countries were subjected to wrongs and indignities, and the property of thousands destroyed or confiscated. Revolutionary forces traversed most parts of Mexico, ravaging and plundering, and inflicting damages upon Mexican citizens as well as upon the nationals of our Government and citizens of other countries.

I think the evidence before the Commission to which I have referred demonstrates that appropriate steps were not taken in a number of instances by the Government of Mexico to protect American nationals who had interests in Mexico. Undoubtedly, brigands and irregular military forces and bandits were, in part, responsible for some of the destruction and confiscation of property belonging to American nationals and the nationals of other countries; but I think the facts warrant the statement that under the principles of international law, the Mexican Government must be held responsible for the greater part of the depredations committed and the consequent losses that ensued.

It is certain that the Mexican Government should be held liable for the death of many of the American citizens who were killed upon Mexican soil as well as upon American soil. I agree with the Senator from New Mexico in his reference to the efforts which are being made by those in authority in Mexico to effectuate reforms and to make life and property safe, and to develop a higher standard of living among the people. Mexico has had many sorrowful and tragic periods. She has had many serious and difficult problems to meet, and those who are familiar with her history must feel a profound sympathy for the Mexican people.

A great majority of the Mexican people are what might be classed as Indians. To develop them and to develop the industries of that important country has been a task of great magnitude. Mexico has produced statesmen of renown; jurists of world-wide fame; lawyers of eminence; painters, poets, and writers whose genius and achievements are known among all civilized nations. Speaking for myself, I have entertained for Mexico and her people a feeling of friendship and have been anxious for the happiness and welfare of the Mexican people.

May I be pardoned a personal allusion? At the Democratic convention in 1924, as a member of the committee on platform and resolutions, I drafted the plank dealing with the Republic to the south of us. I referred to the cordial relations which should exist between this Republic and Latin America. The concluding sentence in the platform declared that "* * God has made us neighbors; let justice keep us friends. * * *"

I have opposed some of the policies pursued by this Government in its dealings with the countries to the south of us and have insisted that our policies in dealing with these countries should be generous and liberal and guided by a sincere desire for the happiness and welfare of their people. I have opposed some of the chauvinistic claims of Americans in their interpretation of the Monroe Doctrine and insisted that the conditions now existing called for different treatment of this question. The Monroe Doctrine is not purely unilateral; it is, rather, multilateral, and it must be interpreted in the light of modern conditions and of what I believe to be the newer relationships between our Government and our neighbors to the south.

Mr. President, with respect to the treaty under consideration, I confess to considerable disappointment in its terms. I do not believe that it is entirely just and fair to American nationals who have valid claims against Mexico. I agree with the Senator from New Mexico that the formula agreed upon as a basis for the settlement of the claims of the nationals of European nations against Mexico should not be the guide in determining the claims of American nationals. The United States and Mexico are neighbors; the northern boundary of Mexico constitutes the southern boundary of a part of the United States for many hundreds of miles. American citizens, as I have indicated, had large investments in Mexico, and thousands of them had built homes and developed properties in Mexico at the express invitation and request of the Mexican Government.

Tens of thousands of Mexicans were either permanent or temporary residents in the United States, and they had property or other interests in our country. This situation developed relations and conditions quite different from those existing between Mexico and her nationals and the nationals of countries on the other side of the Atlantic. I do not think that the percentage agreed upon as the basis of determining the claims is just, nor do I believe that the amount suggested as a possible maximum of recovery—to wit, about $7,000,000—can be regarded as an equitable basis for the settlement of the claims of American citizens. As stated, hundreds of Americans were killed, and if their families were to receive but $10,000 each, six-sevenths of the amount anticipated to be paid by Mexico would be required; and if but $5,000 were paid to the families of those who were killed, it would require three-sevenths of the maximum amount which it is claimed is to be required at the hands of the Mexican Government.

Mr. President, I believe that the amount which would be paid American nationals is entirely inadequate. I agree with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Pittman] that the efforts during the past 12 years to adjust these claims, has been most unsatisfactory. Undoubtedly something should be done to end this unhappy condition. It would be most unsatisfactory for no settlement to be made or to adopt a procedure akin to that which we have followed in the past. Our Government has expended nearly $2,000,000 to meet the expenses of the commissions that have been dealing with these claims, and not a penny has been recovered as a result of these enormous expenditures.

It was most unfortunate in my opinion that one of the Commission selected proved to be so wholly unfitted for the position. He early exhibited antipathy toward our Government and toward American nationals and finally returned to his own country, refusing to participate or to take any part in meeting the obligations resting upon him. In my opinion the vacancy created should have been filled by a commissioner from some European country. I shall not elaborate this thought further than to say that the treaty provided a method by which the third member of the Commission might be selected from an environment where those having claims against Mexico might have felt a greater degree of assurance that fair and just judgments might be rendered.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. CUTTING. Unless I am very seriously mistaken, the gentleman whom the Senator is criticizing refused for a long time either to participate or to resign.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator has stated the facts correctly. His selection was most unfortunate and his conduct highly reprehensible.

Mr. President, I repeat that the treaty under consideration is a very great disappointment to me, as I know it will be to thousands of American citizens who for years have expected some indemnity for the wrongs which they suffered at the hands of Mexico and its nationals. Many hundreds of those who were driven from Mexico and whose property was confiscated or destroyed, suffered serious hardships as they endeavored to make new homes in the United States. A considerable number of them were unable to again build homes and to accommodate themselves to the conditions in the new environment into which they were thrust. Houseless and homeless, after years of hardship, many died in poverty and in despair.

Mr. President, I do not feel like taking upon myself the responsibility of attempting to defeat this treaty or to prevent its consideration. I can only say that I deeply regret that it falls far short of dealing justly with American citizens who have so grievously suffered at the hands of the Mexican Government and its nationals.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no amendment, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amend-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senate concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the adherence by the United States to Executive I (73d Cong., 2d sess.), convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States, signed at Mexico City on April 24, 1934, providing for the en bloc settlement of the claims presented by the Government of the United States to the commission established by the Special Claims Convention concluded September 10, 1923, instead of by international adjudication in each case as provided in that convention.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Twothirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution is agreed to, and the treaty is ratified.

CONVENTION FOR THE UNIFICATION OF CERTAIN RULES RELATING TO INTERNATIONAL TRANSPORTATION BY AIR

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive G.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive G (73d Cong., 2d sess.) a convention for the unification of certain rules relating to international transportation by air, signed at Warsaw, Poland, on October 12, 1929, and an additional protocol thereto relating to article 2 of the convention, which was read the second time, as follows:

[Translation]

Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules Relating to International Transportation by Air

The President of the German Reich, the Federal President of the Republic of Austria, His Majesty the King of the Belgians, the President of the United States of Brazil, His Majesty the King of the Bulgarians, the President of the Nationalist Government of China, His Majesty the King of Denmark and Iceland, His Majesty the King of Egypt, His Majesty the King of Spain, the Chief of State of the Republic of Estonia, the President of the Republic of Finland. the President of the French Republic, His Majesty the King of Great Britain, Ireland and the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India, the President of the Hellenic Republic, His Most Serene Highness the Regent of the Kingdom of Hungary, His Majesty the King of Italy, His Majesty the Emperor of Japan, the President of the Republic of Latvia, Her Royal Highness the Grand Duchess of Luxembourg, the President of the United Mexican States, His Majesty the King of Norway, Her Majesty the Queen of the Netherlands, the President of the Republic of Poland, His Majesty the King of Rumania, His Majesty the King of Sweden, the Swiss Federal Council, the President of the Czechoslovak Republic, the Central Executive Committee of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the President of the United States of Venezuela, His Majesty the King of Yugo-

Having recognized the advantage of regulating in a uniform manner the conditions of international transportation by air in respect of the documents used for such transportation and of the liability of the carrier, have nominated to this end their respective Plenipotentiaries, who, being thereto duly authorized, have concluded and signed the following Convention:

CHAPTER I. SCOPE—DEFINITIONS ARTICLE I

- (1) This Convention shall apply to all international transportation of persons, baggage, or goods performed by aircraft for hire. It shall apply equally to gratuitous transportation by aircraft performed by an air transportation enterprise.
- (2) For the purposes of this Convention the expression "international transportation" shall mean any transportation in which, according to the contract made by the parties, the place of departure and the place of destination, whether or not there be a break in the transportation or a transshipment, are situated either within the territories of two High Contracting Parties, or within the territory of a single High Contracting Party, if there is an agreed stopping place within a territory subject to the sovereignty, suzerainty, mandate or authority of another Power, even though that Power is not a party to this Convention. Transportation without such an agreed stopping place between territories subject to the sovereignty, suzerainty, mandate or authority of the same High Contracting Party shall not be deemed to be international for the purposes of this Convention.
- (3) Transportation to be performed by several successive air carriers shall be deemed, for the purposes of this Convention, to be one undivided transportation, if it has been regarded by the parties as a single operation, whether it has been agreed upon under the form of a single contract or of a series of contracts, and it shall not lose its international character merely because one contract or a series of contracts is to be performed entirely within a territory subject to the sovereignty, suzerainty, mandate, or authority of the same High Contracting Party.

ARTICLE 2

- (1) This Convention shall apply to transportation performed by the State or by legal entities constituted under public law provided it falls within the conditions laid down in Article 1
- (2) This Convention shall not apply to transportation performed under the terms of any international postal Convention.

CHAPTER II. TRANSPORTATION DOCUMENTS—Section 1—Passenger Ticket

ARTICLE 3

- (1) For the transportation of passengers the carrier must deliver a passenger ticket which shall contain the following particulars:
  - (a) The place and date of issue;
  - (b) The place of departure and destination;
- (c) The agreed stopping places, provided that the carrier may reserve the right to alter the stopping places in case of necessity, and that if he exercises that right, the alteration shall not have the effect of depriving the transportation of its international character;
  - (d) The name and address of the carrier or carriers;
- (e) A statement that the transportation is subject to the rules relating to liability established by this Convention.
- (2) The absence, irregularity, or loss of the passenger ticket shall not affect the existence or the validity of the contract of transportation, which shall none the less be subject to the rules of this Convention. Nevertheless, if the carrier accepts a passenger without a passenger ticket having been delivered he shall not be entitled to avail himself of those provisions of this Convention which exclude or limit his liability.

SECTION 2. BAGGAGE CHECK

- (1) For the transportation of baggage, other than small personal objects of which the passenger takes charge himself, the carrier must deliver a baggage check.
- (2) The baggage check shall be made out in duplicate, one part for the passenger and the other part for the carrier.
- (3) The baggage check shall contain the following particulars:
  - (a) The place and date of issue;
  - (b) The place of departure and of destination;
  - (c) The name and address of the carrier or carriers;
  - (d) The number of the passenger ticket;
- (e) A statement that delivery of the baggage will be made to the bearer of the baggage check;
  - (f) The number and weight of the packages;
- (g) The amount of the value declared in accordance with Article 22 (2);
- (h) A statement that the transportation is subject to the rules relating to liability established by this Convention.
- (4) The absence, irregularity or loss of the baggage check shall not affect the existence or the validity of the contract of transportation which shall none the less be subject to the rules of this Convention. Nevertheless, if the carrier accepts baggage without a baggage check having been delivered, or if the baggage check does not contain the particulars set out at (d), (f), and (h) above, the carrier shall not be entitled to avail himself of those provisions of the Convention which exclude or limit his liability.

SECTION 3. AIR WAYBILL ARTICLE 5

- (1) Every carrier of goods has the right to require the consignor to make out and hand over to him a document called an "air waybill"; every consignor has the right to require the carrier to accept this document.
- (2) The absence, irregularity, or loss of this document shall not affect the existence or the validity of the contract of transportation which shall, subject to the provisions of Article 9, be none the less governed by the rules of this Convention.

ARTICLE 6

- (1) The air waybill shall be made out by the consignor in three original parts and be handed over with the goods.
- (2) The first part shall be marked "for the carrier", and shall be signed by the consignor. The second part shall be marked "for the consignee"; it shall be signed by the consignor and by the carrier and shall accompany the goods. The third part shall be signed by the carrier and handed by him to the consignor after the goods have been accepted.

- (3) The carrier shall sign on acceptance of the goods.
- (4) The signature of the carrier may be stamped; that of the consignor may be printed or stamped.
- (5) If, at the request of the consignor, the carrier makes out the air waybill, he shall be deemed, subject to proof to the contrary, to have done so on behalf of the consignor.

ARTICLE 7

The carrier of goods has the right to require the consignor to make out separate waybills when there is more than one package.

ARTICLE 8

The air waybill shall contain the following particulars:

- (a) The place and date of its execution;
- (b) The place of departure and of destination;
- (c) The agreed stopping places, provided that the carrier may reserve the right to alter the stopping places in case of necessity, and that if he exercises that right the alteration shall not have the effect of depriving the transportation of its international character;
  - (d) The name and address of the consignor;
  - (e) The name and address of the first carrier;
- (f) The name and address of the consignee, if the case so requires:
  - (g) The nature of the goods;
- (h) The number of packages, the method of packing, and the particular marks or numbers upon them;
- (i) The weight, the quantity, the volume, or dimensions of the goods:
- (j) The apparent condition of the goods and of the packing;
- (k) The freight, if it has been agreed upon, the date and place of payment, and the person who is to pay it;
- If the goods are sent for payment on delivery, the price of the goods, and, if the case so requires, the amount of the expenses incurred;
- (m) The amount of the value declared in accordance with Article 22 (2);
  - (n) The number of parts of the air waybill:
- (o) The documents handed to the carrier to accompany the air waybill;
- (p) The time fixed for the completion of the transportation and a brief note of the route to be followed, if these matters have been agreed upon;
- (q) A statement that the transportation is subject to the rules relating to liability established by this Convention.

ARTICLE 9

If the carrier accepts goods without an air waybill having been made out, or if the air waybill does not contain all the particulars set out in Article 8 (a) to (i), inclusive, and (q), the carrier shall not be entitled to avail himself of the provisions of this Convention which exclude or limit his liability.

ARTICLE 10

- (1) The consignor shall be responsible for the correctness of the particulars and statements relating to the goods which he inserts in the air waybill.
- (2) The consignor shall be liable for all damages suffered by the carrier or any other person by reason of the irregularity, incorrectness or incompleteness of the said particulars and statements.

ARTICLE 11

- (1) The air waybill shall be prima facie evidence of the conclusion of the contract, of the receipt of the goods and of the conditions of transportation.
- (2) The statements in the air waybill relating to the weight, dimensions, and packing of the goods, as well as those relating to the number of packages, shall be prima facie evidence of the facts stated; those relating to the quantity, volume, and condition of the goods shall not constitute evidence against the carrier except so far as they both have been, and are stated in the air waybill to have been, checked by him in the presence of the consignor, or relate to the apparent condition of the goods.

ADTTOTE 19

(1) Subject to his liability to carry out all his obligations under the contract of transportation, the consignor shall have the right to dispose of the goods by withdrawing them at the airport of departure or destination, or by stopping them in the course of the journey on any landing, or by calling for them to be delivered at the place of destination, or in the course of the journey to a person other than the consignee named in the air waybill, or by requiring them to be returned to the airport of departure. He must not exercise this right of disposition in such a way as to prejudice the carrier or other consignors, and he must repay any expenses occasioned by the exercise of this right.

(2) If it is impossible to carry out the orders of the consignor the carrier must so inform him forthwith.

(3) If the carrier obeys the orders of the consignor for the disposition of the goods without requiring the production of the part of the airway bill delivered to the latter, he will be liable, without prejudice to his right of recovery from the consignor, for any damage which may be caused thereby to any person who is lawfully in possession of that part of the airway bill.

(4) The right conferred on the consignor shall cease at the moment when that of the consignee begins in accordance with Article 13, below. Nevertheless, if the consignee declines to accept the waybill or the goods, or if he cannot be communicated with, the consignor shall resume his right of disposition.

ARTICLE 13

(1) Except in the circumstances set out in the preceding article, the consignee shall be entitled, on arrival of the goods at the place of destination, to require the carrier to hand over to him the air waybill and to deliver the goods to him, on payment of the charges due and on complying with the conditions of transportation set out in the air waybill.

(2) Unless it is otherwise agreed, it shall be the duty of the carrier to give notice to the consignee as soon as the goods arrive.

(3) If the carrier admits the loss of the goods, or if the goods have not arrived at the expiration of seven days after the date on which they ought to have arrived, the consignee shall be entitled to put into force against the carrier the rights which flow from the contract of transportation.

ARTICLE 14

The consignor and the consignee can respectively enforce all the rights given them by Articles 12 and 13, each in his own name, whether he is acting in his own interest or in the interest of another, provided that he carries out the obligations imposed by the contract.

ARTICLE 15

(1) Articles 12, 13, and 14 shall not affect either the relations of the consignor and the consignee with each other or the relations of third parties whose rights are derived either from the carrier or from the consignee.

(2) The provisions of Articles 12, 13, and 14 can only be varied by express provision in the air waybill.

ARTICLE 16

(1) The consignor must furnish such information and attach to the air waybill such documents as are necessary to meet the formalities of customs, octroi, or police before the goods can be delivered to the consignee. The consignor shall be liable to the carrier for any damage occasioned by the absence, insufficiency, or irregularity of any such information or documents, unless the damage is due to the fault of the carrier or his agents.

(2) The carrier is under no obligation to enquire into the correctness or sufficiency of such information or documents.

CHAPTER III-LIABILITY OF THE CARRIER

ARTICLE 17

The carrier shall be liable for damage sustained in the event of the death or wounding of a passenger or any other bodily injury suffered by a passenger, if the accident which caused the damage so sustained took place on board the aircraft or in the course of any of the operations of embarking or disembarking.

ARTICLE 18

(1) The carrier shall be liable for damage sustained in the event of the destruction or loss of, or of damage to, any checked baggage or any goods, if the occurrence which caused the damage so sustained took place during the transportation by air.

(2) The transportation by air within the meaning of the preceding paragraph shall comprise the period during which the baggage or goods are in charge of the carrier, whether in an airport or on board an aircraft, or, in the case of a landing outside an airport in any place what sever landing outside an airport, in any place whatsoever.

(3) The period of the transportation by air shall not extend to any transportation by land, by sea, or by river performed outside an airport. If, however, such transportation takes place in the performance of a contract for transportation by air, for the purpose of loading, delivery or transshipment, any damage is presumed, subject to proof to the contrary, to have been the result of an event which took place during the transportation by air.

ARTICLE 19

The carrier shall be liable for damage occasioned by delay in the transportation by air of passengers, baggage, or goods.

ARTICLE 20

(1) The carrier shall not be liable if he proves that he and his agents have taken all necessary measures to avoid the damage or that it was impossible for him or them to take such measures.

(2) In the transportation of goods and baggage the carrier shall not be liable if he proves that the damage was occasioned by an error in piloting, in the handling of the aircraft, or in navigation and that, in all other respects, he and his agents have taken all necessary measures to avoid the damage.

ARTICLE 21

If the carrier proves that the damage was caused by or contributed to by the negligence of the injured person the Court may, in accordance with the provisions of its own law, exonerate the carrier wholly or partly from his liability.

ARTICLE 22

(1) In the transportation of passengers the liability of the carrier for each passenger shall be limited to the sum of 125,000 francs. Where, in accordance with the law of the Court to which the case is submitted, damages may be awarded in the form of periodical payments, the equivalent capital value of the said payments shall not exceed 125,000 francs. Nevertheless, by special contract, the carrier and the passenger may agree to a higher limit of liability.

(2) In the transportation of checked baggage and of goods, the liability of the carrier shall be limited to a sum of 250 francs per kilogram, unless the consignor has made, at the time when the package was handed over to the carrier, a special declaration of the value at delivery and has paid a supplementary sum if the case so requires. In that case the carrier will be liable to pay a sum not exceeding the declared sum, unless he proves that that sum is greater than the actual value to the consignor at delivery.

(3) As regards objects of which the passenger takes charge himself the liability of the carrier shall be limited to 5,000 francs per passenger.

(4) The sums mentioned above shall be deemed to refer to the French franc consisting of 65½ milligrams of gold at the standard of fineness of nine hundred thousandths. These sums may be converted into any national currency in round figures.

ARTICLE 23

Any provision tending to relieve the carrier of liability or to fix a lower limit than that which is laid down in this Convention shall be null and void, but the nullity of any such provision shall not involve the nullity of the whole contract, which shall remain subject to the provisions of this Convention.

ARTICLE 24

(1) In the cases covered by Articles 18 and 19 any action for damages, however founded, can only be brought subject to the conditions and limits set out in this Convention.

preceding paragraph shall also apply, without prejudice to the questions as to who are the persons who have the right to bring suit and what are their respective rights.

ARTICLE 25

- (1) The carrier shall not be entitled to avail himself of the provisions of this Convention which exclude or limit his liability, if the damage is caused by his wilful misconduct or by such default on his part as, in accordance with the law of the Court to which the case is submitted, is considered to be equivalent to wilful misconduct.
- (2) Similarly the carrier shall not be entitled to avail himself of the said provisions, if the damage is caused under the same circumstances by any agent of the carrier acting within the scope of his employment.

ARTICLE 26

- (1) Receipt by the person entitled to the delivery of baggage or goods without complaint shall be prima facie evidence that the same have been delivered in good condition and in accordance with the document of transportation.
- (2) In case of damage, the person entitled to delivery must complain to the carrier forthwith after the discovery of the damage, and, at the latest, within three days from the date of receipt in the case of baggage and seven days from the date of receipt in the case of goods. In case of delay the complaint must be made at the latest within fourteen days from the date on which the baggage or goods have been placed at his disposal.
- (3) Every complaint must be made in writing upon the document of transportation or by separate notice in writing dispatched within the times aforesaid.
- (4) Failing complaint within the times aforesaid, no action shall lie against the carrier, save in the case of fraud on his part.

ARTICLE 27

In the case of the death of the person liable, an action for damages lies in accordance with the terms of this Convention against those legally representing his estate.

ARTICLE 28

- (1) An action for damages must be brought, at the option of the plaintiff, in the territory of one of the High Contracting Parties, either before the Court of the domicile of the carrier or of his principal place of business, or where he has a place of business through which the contract has been made, or before the Court at the place of destination.
- (2) Questions of procedure shall be governed by the law of the Court to which the case is submitted.

ARTICLE 29

- (1) The right to damages shall be extinguished if an action is not brought within two years, reckoned from the date of arrival at the destination, or from the date on which the aircraft ought to have arrived, or from the date on which the transportation stopped.
- (2) The method of calculating the period of limitation shall be determined by the law of the Court to which the case is submitted.

ARTICLE 30

- (1) In the case of transportation to be performed by various successive carriers and falling within the definition set out in the third paragraph of Article 1, each carrier who accepts passengers, baggage or goods shall be subject to the rules set out in this Convention, and shall be deemed to be one of the contracting parties to the contract of transportation insofar as the contract deals with that part of the transportation which is performed under his super-
- (2) In the case of transportation of this nature, the passenger or his representative can take action only against the carrier who performed the transportation during which the accident or the delay occurred, save in the case where, by express agreement, the first carrier has assumed liability for the whole journey.
- (3) As regards baggage or goods, the passenger or consignor shall have a right of action against the first carrier, and the passenger or consignee who is entitled to delivery shall have a right of action against the last carrier, and

(2) In the cases covered by Article 17 the provisions of the | further, each may take action against the carrier who performed the transportation during which the destruction, loss, damage, or delay took place. These carriers shall be jointly and severally liable to the passenger or to the consignor or consignee.

> CHAPTER IV. PROVISIONS RELATING TO COMBINED TRANSPORTATION ARTICLE 31

- (1) In the case of combined transportation performed partly by air and partly by any other mode of transportation, the provisions of this Convention shall apply only to the transportation by air, provided that the transportation by air falls within the terms of Article 1.
- (2) Nothing in this Convention shall prevent the parties in the case of combined transportation from inserting in the document of air transportation conditions relating to other modes of transportation, provided that the provisions of this Convention are observed as regards the transportation by air.

CHAPTER V. GENERAL AND FINAL PROVISIONS ARTICLE 32

Any clause contained in the contract and all special agreements entered into before the damage occurred by which the parties purport to infringe the rules laid down by this Convention, whether by deciding the law to be applied, or by altering the rules as to jurisdiction, shall be null and void. Nevertheless for the transportation of goods arbitration clauses shall be allowed, subject to this Convention, if the arbitration is to take place within one of the jurisdictions referred to in the first paragraph of Article 28.

ARTICLE 33

Nothing contained in this Convention shall prevent the carrier either from refusing to enter into any contract of transportation or from making regulations which do not conflict with the provisions of this Convention.

This convention shall not apply to international transportation by air performed by way of experimental trial by air navigation enterprises with the view to the establishment of regular lines of air naviation, nor shall it apply to transportation performed in extraordinary circumstances outside the normal scope of an air carrier's business.

The expression "days" when used in this Convention means current days, not working days.

This Convention is drawn up in French in a single copy which shall remain deposited in the archieves of the Ministry for Foreign Affairs of Poland and of which one duly certified copy shall be sent by the Polish Government to the Government of each of the High Contracting Parties.

ARTICLE 37

- (1) This Convention shall be ratified. The instruments of ratification shall be deposited in the archieves of the Ministry for Foreign Affairs of Poland, which shall give notice of the deposit to the Government of each of the High Contracting Parties.
- (2) As soon as this Convention shall have been ratified by five of the High Contracting Parties it shall come into force as between them on the ninetieth day after the deposit of the fifth ratification. Thereafter it shall come into force between the High Contracting Parties which shall have ratified and the High Contracting Party which deposits its instrument of ratification on the ninetieth day after the
- (3) It shall be the duty of the Government of the Republic of Poland to notify the Government of each of the High Contracting Parties of the date on which this Convention comes into force as well as the date of the deposit of each ratification.

- (1) This Convention shall, after it has come into force, remain open for adherence by any State.
- (2) The adherence shall be effected by a notification addressed to the Government of the Republic of Poland, which shall inform the Government of each of the High Contracting Parties thereof.

(3) The adherence shall take effect as from the ninetieth day after the notification made to the Government of the Republic of Poland.

ARTICLE 39

- (1) Any one of the High Contracting Parties may denounce this Convention by a notification addressed to the Government of the Republic of Poland, which shall at once inform the Government of each of the High Contracting Parties.
- (2) Denunciation shall take effect six months after the notification of denunciation, and shall operate only as regards the party which shall have proceeded to denunciation.

ARTICLE 40

- (1) Any High Contracting Party may, at the time of signature or of deposit of ratification or of adherence declare that the acceptance which it gives to this Convention does not apply to all or any of its colonies, protectorates, territories under mandate, or any other territory subject to its sovereignty or its authority, or any other territory under its suzerainty.
- (2) Accordingly any High Contracting Party may subsequently adhere separately in the name of all or any of its colonies, protectorates, territories under mandate, or any other territory subject to its sovereignty or to its authority or any other territory under its suzerainty which have been thus excluded by its original declaration.
- (3) Any High Contracting Party may denounce this Convention, in accordance with its provisions, separately or for all or any of its colonies, protectorates, territories under mandate or any other territory subject to its sovereignty or to its authority, or any other territory under its suzerainty.

ARTICLE 41

Any High Contracting Party shall be entitled not earlier than two years after the coming into force of this Convention to call for the assembling of a new international Conference in order to consider any improvements which may be made in this Convention. To this end it will communicate with the Government of the French Republic which will take the necessary measures to make preparations for such Conference.

This Convention done at Warsaw on October 12, 1929, shall remain open for signature until January 31, 1930.

ANGEL ALBERTO GIRAUDY HERMINIO PORTELL VILÁ ALFREDO NOGUEIRA

Who, after having exhibited their full powers, which were found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following:

ARTICLE 1

Each one of the signatory states in harmony with the stipulations of the present convention assumes the obligation of surrendering to any one of the states which may make the requisition, the persons who may be in their territory and who are accused or under sentence. This right shall be claimed only under the following circumstances:

(a) That the demanding state have the jurisdiction to try and to punish the delinquency which is attributed to the individual whom it desires to extradite.

(b) That the act for which extradition is sought constitutes a crime and is punishable under the laws of the demanding and surrendering states with a minimum penalty of imprisonment for one year.

ARTICLE 2

When the person whose extradition is sought is a citizen of the country to which the requisition is addressed, his delivery may or may not be made, as the legislation or circumstances of the case may, in the judgment of the surrendering state, determine. If the accused is not surrendered, the latter state is obliged to bring action against him for the crime with which he is accused, if such crime meets the conditions established in subarticle (b) of the previous article. The sentence pronounced shall be communicated to the demanding state.

ARTICLE 3

Extradition will not be granted:

(a) When, previous to the arrest of the accused person, the penal action or sentence has expired according to the laws of the demanding or the surrendering state.

(b) When the accused has served his sentence in the country where the crime was committed or when he may have been pardoned or granted an amnesty.

(c) When the accused has been or is being tried by the state to which the requisition was directed for the act with which he is charged and on which the petition of extradition is based.

(d) When the accused must appear before any extraordinary tribunal or court of the demanding state (tribunal o juzgado de excepción del Estado requiriente). Military courts will not be considered as such tribunals.

(e) When the offense is of a political nature or of a character related thereto. An attempt against the life or person of the Chief of State or members of his family, shall not be deemed to be a political offense.

(f) When the offense is purely military or directed against religion.

ARTICLE 4

The determination of whether or not the exceptions referred to in the previous article are applicable shall belong exclusively to the state to which the request for extradition is addressed.

ARTICLE 5

A request for extradition should be formulated by the respective diplomatic representative. When no such representative is available, consular agents may serve or the governments may communicate directly with one another. The following documents in the language of the country to which the request for extradition is directed shall accompany every such request:

(a) An authentic copy of the sentence, when the accused has been tried and condemned by the courts of the demanding state.

(b) When the person is only under accusation, an authentic copy of the order of detention issued by the competent judge, with a precise description of the imputed offense, a copy of the penal laws applicable thereto, and a copy of the laws referring to the prescription of the action or the penalty.

(c) In the case of an individual under accusation as also of an individual already condemned, there shall be furnished all possible information of a personal character which may help to identify the individual whose extradition is sought.

ARTICLE 6

When a person whose extradition is sought shall be under trial or shall be already condemned in the state from which it is sought to extradite him, for an offense committed prior to the request for extradition, said extradition shall be granted at once, but the surrender of the accused to the demanding state shall be deferred until his trial ends or his sentence is served.

ARTICLE 7

When the extradition of a person is sought by several states for the same offense, preference will be given to the state in whose territory said offense was committed. If he is sought for several offenses, preference will be given to the state within whose bounds shall have been committed the offense which has the greatest penalty according to the law of the surrendering state.

If the case is one of different acts which the state from which extradition is sought esteems of equal gravity, the preference will be determined by the priority of the request.

ARTICLE 8

The request for extradition shall be determined in accordance with the domestic legislation of the surrendering state and the individual whose extradition is sought shall have the right to use all the remedies and resources authorized by such legislation, either before the judiciary or the administrative authorities as may be provided for by the aforesaid legislation.

ARTICLE S

Once a request for extradition in the form indicated in article 5 has been received, the state from which the extradition is sought will exhaust all necessary measures for the capture of the person whose extradition is requested.

ARTICLE 10

The requesting state may ask, by any means of communication, the provisional or preventive detention of a person, if there is, at least, an order by some court for his detention and if the state at the same time offers to request extradition in due course. The state from which the extradition is sought will order the immediate arrest of the accused. If within a maximum period of 2 months after the requesting state has been notified of the arrest of the person, said state has not formally applied for extradition, the detained person will be set at liberty and his extradition may not again be requested except in the way established by article 5.

The demanding state is exclusively liable for any damages which might arise from the provisional or preventive detention of a person.

ARTICLE 11

Extradition having been granted and the person requested put at the disposition of the diplomatic agent of the demanding state, then, if, within 2 months from the time when said agent is notified of same, the person has not been sent to his destination, he will be set at liberty, and he cannot again be detained for the same cause.

The period of 2 months will be reduced to 40 days when the countries concerned are conterminous.

ARTICLE 12

Once extradition of a person has been refused, application may not again be made for the same alleged act.

ARTICLE 13

The state requesting the extradition may designate one or more guards for the purpose of taking charge of the person extradited, but said guards will be subject to the orders of the police or other authorities of the state granting the extradition or of the states in transit.

ARTICLE 14

The surrender of the person extradited to the requesting state will be done at the most appropriate point on the frontier or in the most accessible port, if the transfer is to be made by water.

ARTICLE 15

The objects found in the possession of the person extradited, obtained by the perpetration of the illegal act for which extradition is requested, or which might be useful as evidence of same, will be confiscated and handed over to the demanding country, notwithstanding it might not be possible to surrender the accused because of some unusual situation, such as his escape or death.

ARTICLE 16

The costs of arrest, custody, maintenance, and transportation of the person, as well as of the objects referred to in the preceding article, will be borne by the state granting the extradition up to the moment of surrender and from thereon they will be borne by the demanding State.

- ARTICLE 17

Once the extradition is granted, the demanding State undertakes—

(a) Not to try nor to punish the person for a common offense which was committed previous to the request for extradition and which has not been included in said request, except only if the interested party expressly consents.

(b) Not to try nor to punish the person for a political offense, or for an offense connected with a political offense, committed previous to the request for extradition.

(c) To apply to the accused the punishment of next lesser degree than death if according to the legislation of the country of refuge the death penalty would not be applicable.

(d) To furnish to the state granting the extradition an authentic copy of the sentence pronounced.

ARTICLE 18

The signatory states undertake to permit the transit through their respective territories of any person whose extradition has been granted by another state in favor of a third, requiring only the original or an authentic copy of the agreement by which the country of refuge granted the extradition.

ARTICLE 19

No request for extradition may be based upon the stipulations of this convention if the offense in question has been committed before the ratification of the convention is deposited.

ARTICLE 20

The present convention will be ratified by means of the legal forms in common use in each of the signatory states, and will come into force, for each of them, 30 days after the deposit of the respective ratification.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Uruguay shall transmit authentic certified copies to the governments for the aforementioned purpose of ratification. The instrument of ratification shall be deposited in the archives of the Pan American Union in Washington, which shall notify the signatory governments of said deposit. Such notification shall be considered as an exchange of ratifications.

ARTICLE 21

The present convention does not abrogate or modify the bilateral or collective treaties, which at the present date are in force between the signatory states. Nevertheless, if any of said treaties lapse, the present convention will take effect and become applicable immediately among the respective states, if each of them has fulfilled the stipulations of the preceding article.

ARTICLE 22

The present convention shall remain in force indefinitely but may be denounced by means of 1 year's notice given to the Pan American Union, which shall transmit it to the other signatory governments. After the expiration of this period the convention shall cease in its effects as regards the party which denounces but shall remain in effect for the remaining high contracting parties.

ARTICLE 23

The present convention shall be open for the adherence and accession of the states which are not signatories. The corresponding instruments shall be deposited in the archives of the Pan American Union, which shall communicate them to the other high contracting parties.

In witness whereof, the following plenipotentiaries have signed this convention in Spanish, English, Portuguese, and French, and hereunto affix their respective seals in the city of Montevideo, Republic of Uruguay, this 26th day of December 1933.

RESERVATIONS

The delegation of the United States of America, in signing the present Extradition Convention, reserves the following articles:

Article 2 (second sentence, English text).

Article 3, paragraph d. Articles 12, 15, 16, and 18.

Reservation to the effect that El Salvador, although it accepts in general principle article XVIII of the Inter-American Treaty of Extradition, concretely stipulates the exception that it cannot cooperate in the surrender of its own nationals, prohibited by its political constitution, by permitting the transit through its territory of said nationals when one foreign State surrenders them to another.

Mexico signs the Convention on Extradition with the declaration with respect to article 3, paragraph f, that the internal legislation of Mexico does not recognize offenses against religion. It will not sign the optional clause of this convention.

The delegation from Ecuador, in dealing with the nations with which Ecuador has signed Conventions on Extraditions, accepts the stipulations herein established in all respects which are not contrary to said conventions.

Who, after having exhibited their full powers, which were found to be in good and due order, have agreed upon the following:

ARTICLE 1

The state as a person of international law should possess the following qualifications: (a) A permanent population: (b) a defined territory, (c) government, and (d) capacity to enter into relations with the other states.

ARTICLE 2

The federal state shall constitute a sole person in the eyes of international law.

ARTICLE 3

The political existence of the state is independent of recognition by the other states. Even before recognition the state has the right to defend its integrity and independence, to provide for its conservation and prosperity, and consequently to organize itself as it sees fit, to legislate upon its interests, administer its services, and to definite the jurisdiction and competence of its courts.

The exercise of these rights has no other limitation than the exercise of the rights of other states according to international law.

ARTICLE 4

States are juridically equal, enjoy the same rights, and have equal capacity in their exercise. The rights of each one do not depend upon the power which it possesses to assure its exercise, but upon the simple fact of its existence as a person under international law.

ARTICLE 5

The fundamental rights of states are not susceptible of being affected in any manner whatsoever.

ARTICLE (

The recognition of a state merely signifies that the state which recognizes it accepts the personality of the other with all the rights and duties determined by international law. Recognition is unconditional and irrevocable.

ARTICLE 7

The recognition of a state may be express or tacit. The latter results from any act which implies the intention of recognizing the new state.

ARTICLE 8

No state has the right to intervene in the internal or external affairs of another.

ARTICLE S

The jurisdiction of states within the limits of national territory applies to all the inhabitants.

Nationals and foreigners are under the same protection of the law and the national authorities and the foreigners may not claim rights other or more extensive than those of the nationals.

ARTICLE 10

The primary interest of states is the conservation of peace. Differences of any nature which arise between them should be settled by recognized pacific methods.

ARTICLE 11

The contracting states definitely establish as the rule of their conduct the precise obligation not to recognize territorial acquisitions or special advantages which have been suggested, no government need fear any intervention on the part of the United States under the Roosevelt administration. I think it unfortunate that during the brief period of this conference there is apparently not time within which to prepare interpreta-obtained by force whether this consists in the employment of arms, in threatening diplomatic representations, or in any other effective coercive measure. The territory of a state is inviolable and may not be the object of military occupation nor of other measures of force imposed by another State directly or indirectly or for any motive whatever even temporarily.

ARTICLE 12

The present convention shall not affect obligations previously entered into by the high contracting parties by virtue of international agreements.

ARTICLE 13

The present convention shall be ratified by the high contracting parties in conformity with their respective constitutional procedures. The Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Uruguay shall transmit authentic certified copies to the governments for the aforementioned purpose of ratification. The instrument of ratification shall be deposited in the archives of the Pan American Union in Washington, which shall notify the signatory governments of said deposit. Such notification shall be considered as an exchange of ratifications.

ARTICLE 14

The present convention will enter into force between the high contracting parties in the order in which they deposit their respective ratifications.

ARTICLE 15

The present convention shall remain in force indefinitely but may be denounced by means of 1 year's notice given to the Pan American Union, which shall transmit it to the other signatory governments. After the expiration of this period the convention shall cease in its effects as regards the party which denounces but shall remain in effect for the remaining high contracting parties.

ARTICLE 16

The present convention shall be open for the adherence and accession of the states which are not signatories. The corresponding instruments shall be deposited in the archives of the Pan American Union which shall communicate them to the other high contracting parties.

In witness whereof, the following plenipotentiaries have signed this convention in Spanish, English, Portuguese and French and hereunto affix their respective seals in the city of Montevideo, Republic of Uruguay, this 26th day of December 1933.

RESERVATIONS

The delegation of the United States of America, in signing the Convention on the Rights and Duties of States, does so with the express reservation presented to the plenary session of the Conference on December 22, 1933, which reservation reads as follows:

The delegation of the United States, in voting "yes" on the final vote on this committee recommendation and proposal, makes the same reservation to the 11 articles of the project or proposal that the United States delegation made to the first 10 articles during the final vote in the full Commission, which reservation is in words as follows:

The policy and attitude of the United States Government toward every important phase of international relationships in this hemisphere could scarcely be made more clear and definite than they have been made by both word and action especially since March 4. I have no disposition therefore to indulge in any repetition or rehearsal of these acts and utterances and shall not do so. Every observing person must by this time thoroughly understand that under the Roosevelt administration the United States Government is as much opposed as any other government to interference with the freedom, the sovereignty, or other internal affairs or processes of the governments of other nations.

In addition to numerous acts and utterances in connection with the carrying out of these doctrines and policies. President Roose-

In addition to numerous acts and utterances in connection with the carrying out of these doctrines and policies, President Roosevelt, during recent weeks, gave out a public statement expressing his disposition to open negotiations with the Cuban Government for the purpose of dealing with the treaty which has existed since 1903. I feel safe in undertaking to say that under our support of the general principle of nonintervention as has been suggested, no government need fear any intervention on the part of the United States under the Roosevelt administration. I think it unfortunate that during the brief period of this conference there is appearently not time within which to prepare interpretations and definitions of these fundamental terms that are embraced in the report. Such definitions and interpretations would enable every government to proceed in a uniform way without any difference of opinion or of interpretations. I hope that at the earliest possible date such very important work will be done. In the meantime in case of differences of interpretations and also the meantime in case of differences of interpretations and also until they (the proposed doctrines and principles) can be worked out and codified for the common use of every government, I desire to say that the United States Government in all of its international associations and relationships and conduct will follow scrupulously the doctrines and policies which it has pursued since March 4 which are embodied in the different addresses of President Roosevelt since that time and in the recent peace address of myself on the 15th day of December before this conference and in the law of nations as generally recognized and accepted.

The delegates of Brazil and Peru recorded the following private vote with regard to article 11: "That they accept the doctrine in principle but that they do not consider it codifiable because there are some countries which have not yet signed the Anti-War Pact of Rio de Janeiro of which this doctrine is a part and therefore it does not yet constitute positive international law suitable for codification."

SUPERVISION OF INTERNATIONAL TRADE IN ARMS

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Executive H (69th Cong., 1st sess.).

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive H (69th Cong., 1st sess.), a convention for the supervision of the international trade in arms and ammunition and in implements of war, signed at Geneva, Switzerland, June 17, 1925, which was read the second time, as follows:

Convention for the Supervision of the International Trade in Arms and Ammunition and in Implements of War

GERMANY, the UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, AUSTRIA, BELGIUM, BRAZIL, the BRITISH EMPIRE, CANADA, the IRISH FREE STATE AND INDIA, BULGARIA, CHILE, CHINA, COLOMBIA, DENMARK, EGYPT, SPAIN, ESTHONIA, ABYSSINIA, FINLAND, FRANCE, GREECE, HUNGARY, ITALY, JAPAN, LATTIA, LITHUANIA, LUKEMBURG, NICARAGUA, NORWAY, PANAMA, the NETHERLANDS, PERSIA, POLAND, PORTUGAL, ROUMANIA, SALVADOR, SIAM, SWEDEN, SWITZERLAND, the KINGDOM OF THE SERES, CROATS, and SLOVENES, CZECHOSLOVAKIA, TURKEY, URUGUAY AND VENEZUELA,

Whereas the international trade in arms and ammunition and in implements of war should be subjected to a general and effective system of supervision and publicity;

Whereas such a system is not provided by existing Treaties and Conventions;

Whereas in relation to certain areas of the world a special supervision of this trade is necessary in order to render more effective the measures adopted by the various Governments as regards both the import of such arms and ammunition and implements of war into these areas and their export therefrom; and

Whereas the export or import of arms, ammunition or implements, the use of which in war is prohibited by International Law, must not be permitted for such purpose;

Have decided to conclude a Convention and have accordingly appointed as their Plenipotentiaries:

[Here follow the names of the Plenipotentiaries.]

Who, having communicated their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed as follows:

CHAPTER I. CATEGORIES ARTICLE 1

For the purposes of the present Convention, five Categories of arms, ammunition and implements are established:

CATEGORY I. ARMS, AMMUNITION AND IMPLEMENTS OF WAR EXCLUSIVELY DESIGNED AND INTENDED FOR LAND, SEA OR AERIAL WARFARE

A—Arms, ammunition and implements exclusively designed and intended for land, sea or aerial warfare, which are or shall be comprised in the armament of the armed forces of any State, or which, if they have been but are no longer comprised in such armament, are capable of military to the exclusion of any other use, except such arms, ammunition and implements which, though included in the above definition, are covered by other Categories.

Such arms, ammunition and implements are comprised in the following twelve headings:

- 1. Rifles, muskets, carbines.
- 2. (a) Machine-guns, automatic rifles and machine-pistols of all calibres:
  - (b) Mountings for machine-guns;
  - (c) Interrupter gears.
- 3. Projectiles and ammunition for the arms enumerated in Nos. 1 and 2 above.

- 4. Gun-sighting apparatus including aerial gun-sights and bomb-sights, and fire-control apparatus.
- 5. (a) Cannon, long or short, and howitzers, of a calibre less than 5.9 inches (15cm.);
- (b) Cannon, long or short, and howitzers, of a calibre of 5.9 inches (15 cm.) or above;
  - (e) Mortars of all kinds;
- (d) Gun carriages, mountings, recuperators, accessories for mountings.
- 6. Projectiles and ammunition of the arms enumerated in No. 5 above.
- 7. Apparatus for the discharge of bombs, torpedoes, depth charges and other kinds of projectiles.
  - 8. (a) Grenades;
  - (b) Bombs;
- (c) Land mines, submarine mines, fixed or floating, depth charges;
  - (d) Torpedoes.
  - 9. Appliances for use with the above arms and apparatus.
  - 10. Bayonets.
  - 11. Tanks and armoured cars.
- 12. Arms and ammunition not specified in the above enumeration.
- B.—Component parts, completely finished, of the articles covered by A above, if capable of being utilised only in the assembly or repair of the said articles, or as spare parts.

CATEGORY II. ARMS AND AMMUNITION CAPABLE OF USE BOTH FOR MILI-TARY AND OTHER PURPOSES

- A.—1. Pistols and revolvers, automatic or self-loading, and developments of the same, designed for single-handed use or fired from the shoulder, of a calibre greater than 6.5 mm, and length of barrel greater than 10 cm.
- 2. Fire-arms designed, intended or adapted for non-military purposes, such as sport or personal defence, that will fire cartridges that can be fired from fire-arms in Category I; other rifled fire-arms firing from shoulder, of a calibre of 6 mm. or above, not included in Category I, with the exception of rifled fire-arms with a "break-down" action.
- 3. Ammunition for the arms enumerated in the above two headings, with the exception of ammunition covered by Category I.
  - 4. Swords and lances.
- B.—Component parts, completely finished, of the articles covered by A above, if capable of being utilised only in the assembly or repair of the said articles, or as spare parts.

CATEGORY III. VESSELS OF WAR AND THEIR ARMAMENT

- 1. Vessels of war of all kinds.
- 2. Arms, ammunition and implements of war mounted on board vessels of war and forming part of their normal armament.

CATEGORY IV

- 1. Aircraft, assembled or dismantled.
- 2. Aircraft engines.

CATEGORY V

- Gunpowder and explosives, except common black gunpowder.
- 2. Arms and ammunition other than those covered by Categories I and II, such as pistols and revolvers of all models, rifled weapons with a "break-down" action, other rifled fire-arms of a calibre of less than 6 mm. designed for firing from the shoulder, smooth-bore shot-guns, guns with more than one barrel of which at least one barrel is smooth-bore, fire-arms firing rimfire ammunition, muzzle-loading fire-arms.

CHAPTER II. SUPERVISION AND PUBLICITY ARTICLE 2

The High Contracting Parties undertake not to export or permit the export of articles covered by Category I, except in accordance with the following conditions:

- 1. The export shall be for a direct supply to the Government of the importing State or, with the consent of such Government, to a public authority subordinate to it;
- 2. An order in writing, which shall be signed or endorsed by a representative of the importing Government duly authorised so to act, shall have been presented to the competent authorities of the exporting country. This order shall state that the articles to be exported are required for delivery to the importing Government or public authority as provided in paragraph 1.

ARTICLE 3

Nevertheless, export for supply to private persons may be permitted in the following cases:

1. Articles covered by Category I exported direct to a manufacturer of war material for use by him for the requirements of his industry, provided their import has been duly authorised by the Government of the importing country;

2. Riffes, muskets and carbines and their ammunition exported for supply to rifle associations formed for the encouragement of individual sport and duly authorised by their own Government to use them, the import of which is not contrary to any other provisions of the present Convention. Such arms and ammunition shall be sent direct to the Government of the importing country for transmission by such Government to the associations for which they are supplied.

3. Samples of articles covered by Category I exported for demonstration purposes direct to a trade representative of the exporting manufacturer, such representative being duly authorised by the Government of the importing country to receive them.

In the above-mentioned cases, an order in writing, endorsed by the Government of the importing country or by its representative duly authorised so to act, must have been presented to the authorities of the exporting country. It shall contain all the information necessary to show that the order is properly made under this Article.

ARTICLE 4

Permission to export under Articles 2 and 3 shall be signified by a license. An export declaration, if filed with and approved by the competent authorities of the exporting country, may take the place of a licence.

Such licence or declaration must contain:

- (a) A description sufficient for the identification of the articles to which it relates, and giving their designation according to the headings in Category I, and their number or weight;
  - (b) The name and address of the exporter;
  - (c) The name and address of the importing consignee;
- (d) The name of the Government which has authorised

Each separate consignment which crosses the frontier of the exporting country, whether by land, water or air, shall be accompanied by a document containing the particulars indicated above. This document may be either the licence or export declaration or a certified copy thereof or a certificate issued by the Customs authorities of the exporting country, stating that the consignment is exported under licence or export declaration in accordance with the provisions of the present Convention.

ARTICLE 5

The articles covered by Category II shall only be exported under cover of an export document, which may be either a license issued by the competent authorities of the exporting country or an export declaration endorsed by or filed with them. If the legislation of the importing country requires the endorsement of a duly authorised representative of its Government, and if this fact has been notified by the said Government to the Government of the exporting country, then such an endorsement must have been obtained and submitted to the competent authorities of the exporting country before the export may take place.

Neither the license nor the export declaration shall entail any responsibility upon the Government of the exporting country as to the destination or ultimate use of any consignment.

Nevertheless, if the High Contracting Parties consider, on account of the size, destination or other circumstances of a consignment, that the arms and ammunition consigned are intended for war purposes, they undertake to apply to such consignment the provisions of Articles 2, 3 and 4.

ARTICLE 6

As a preliminary to a general system of publicity for armaments irrespective of their origin, the High Contracting Parties undertake to publish, within two months of the close of each quarter, a statistical return of their foreign trade during this quarter in the articles covered by Categories I and II. This return shall be drawn up in accordance with the specimen forms contained in Annex I to the present Convention and shall show under each heading appearing in Categories I and II in Article 1 the value and the weight or number of the articles exported or imported under a licence or export declaration, allocated according to country of origin or destination.

In all cases where the consignment comes from, or is sent to, a territory possessing an autonomous Customs system, such territory shall be shown as the country of origin or destination.

The High Contracting Parties further undertake, so far as each may be concerned, to publish within the same time-limits a return containing the same information in respect of the consignments of articles covered by Categories I and II to other territories placed under their sovereignty, jurisdiction, protection or tutelage, or under the same sovereignty, jurisdiction, protection or tutelage.

The first statistical return to be published by each of the High Contracting Parties shall be for the quarter beginning on the first day of January, April, July or October, subsequent to the date on which the present Convention comes into force with regard to the High Contracting Party concerned.

The High Contracting Parties undertake to publish as an annex to the above-mentioned return the text of the provisions of all statutes, orders or regulations in force within their territory dealing with the export and import of articles covered by Article 1, and to include therein all provisions enacted for the purpose of carrying out the present Convention. Amendments and additions to these provisions shall be likewise published in annexes to subsequent quarterly returns.

ARTICLE 7

The High Contracting Parties, in all cases covered by Category III, undertake to publish within two months of the close of each quarter a return for that quarter, giving the information detailed below for each vessel of war constructed, in course of construction or to be constructed within their territorial jurisdiction on behalf of the Government of another State:

(a) The date of the signing of the contract for the construction of the vessel, the name of the Government for which the vessel is ordered, together with the following

Standard displacement in tons and metric tons;

The principal dimensions, namely: length at water-line, extreme beam at or below water-line, mean draft at standard displacement;

(b) The date of laying the keel, the name of the Government for which the vessel is being constructed, together with the following data:

Standard displacement in tons and metric tons;

The principal dimensions, namely: length at water-line, extreme beam at or below water-line, mean draft at standard displacement;

(c) The date of delivery, the name of the Government to which the vessel is delivered, together with the following data with respect to the vessel at that date:

Standard displacement in tons and metric tons;

The principal dimensions, namely: length at water-line, extreme beam at or below water-line, mean draft at standard displacement;

As well as the following information regarding the armament installed on board the vessel at the date of delivery and forming part of the vessel's normal armament:

Number and calibre of guns;

Number and calibre of torpedo-tubes:

Number of bomb-throwers;

Number of machine-guns.

The above information concerning the armament of the vessel shall be furnished by means of a statement signed by the shipbuilder and countersigned by the commanding officer or such other representative fully authorised for the purpose by the Government of the State to whom the vessel is delivered. Such statement shall be transmitted to the competent authority of the Government of the constructing country.

Whenever a vessel of war belonging to one of the High Contracting Parties is transferred, whether by gift, sale or other mode of transfer, to the Government of another State, the transferor undertakes to publish within two months of the close of the quarter within which the transfer is effected the following information:

The date of transfer, the name of the Government to whom the vessel has been transferred and the data and information referred to in paragraph (c) above.

By the standard displacement in the present Article is to be understood the displacement of the vessel complete, fully manned, engined and equipped ready for sea, including all armament and ammunition, equipment, outfit, provisions and fresh water for crew, miscellaneous stores and implements of every description that are intended to be carried in war, but without fuel or reserve feed-water on board.

ARTICLE 8

Without prejudice to the provisions of Article 7, if the transport of any vessel of war is carried out otherwise than by such vessels's own motive power or towage, the vessel, whether assembled or in component parts, and the armament thereof will become subject also to the provisions of this Convention as if they were included in Category I.

ARTICLE 9

The High Contracting Parties undertake to publish, within six months of the close of each quarter, a return for that quarter of the export of aircraft and aircraft engines, giving quantities exported and their allocation according to country of destination.

ARTICLE 10

Subject to the provisions of Chapter III, the articles covered by Categories IV and V may be exported without formalities or restrictions,

ARTICLE 11

The High Contracting Parties undertake not to apply a more favourable regime to imports of articles referred to in Article 1 coming from territories of non-contracting States than that which they will apply to such imports coming from territories of contracting States, and to subject these imports, of whatever origin, to the same conditions of authorisation and, so far as possible, of publicity.

CHAPTER III. SPECIAL ZONES

ARTICLE 12

The High Contracting Parties agree that the provisions of this Chapter apply to the territorial and maritime zones hereinafter defined and referred to in the present Convention as the "special zones."

- 1. Land zone.
- (a) The whole of the continent of Africa, with the exception of Egypt, Lybia, Tunisia, Algeria, the Spanish possessions in North Africa, Abyssinia, and of the Union of South Africa together with the territory under its mandate, and of Southern Rhodesia.

This zone also includes the adjacent islands which are situated within 100 marine miles from the coast thereof and also Prince's Island (Principe) in the Bight of Biafra, St. Thomas (São Thomé), Annobon and Socotra, but does not include the Spanish islands situated to the north of the parallel of 26° North latitude.

- (b) The Arabian peninsula, Gwadar, Syria and Lebanon, Palestine and Transjordan, and Iraq.
  - 2. Maritime zone.
- A maritime zone, which includes the Red Sea, the Gulf of Aden, the Persian Gulf and the Gulf of Oman and is bounded by a line drawn from and following the latitude of Cape Guardafui to the point of intersection with longitude 57° East of Greenwich and proceeding thence direct

The above information concerning the armament of the to the point at which the eastern frontier of Gwadar meets

ARTICLE 13

The High Contracting Parties undertake not to export or to permit articles covered by Categories I, II, IV and V to be exported to places within the special zones, unless a licence has been issued in conformity with the conditions defined in Article 14.

An export declaration, if filed with and approved by the competent authorities of the exporting country, may take the place of a licence.

The High Contracting Parties also undertake, each in respect of any territory under its sovereignty, jurisdiction, protection or tutelage situated within the special zones, not to permit articles covered by the Categories above mentioned to be imported into such territory unless their import has been authorised by the authorities of the territory concerned. Such articles shall only be admitted into territory within the special zones at such ports or other places as the authorities of the State, colony, protectorate or mandated territory concerned shall designate for this purpose.

ARTICLE 14

The High Contracting Parties undertake not to issue the export licences nor to approve the export declarations required under Article 13 unless they are satisfied that the conditions stated in paragraph (a) or (b) hereof are fulfilled and also, as regards articles covered by Categories I and II, the conditions laid down in Articles 2, 3, 4 and 5.

(a) That, if an export is being made to territory under the sovereignty, jurisdiction, protection or tutelage of a High Contracting Party, articles covered by Categories I, II and IV to which the licence or export declaration applies are required for lawful purposes and that the authorities of the territory to which they are consigned are willing to admit them; and that, in the case of articles covered by Category V, a copy of the license or export declaration has been set to the authorities aforesaid before the export takes place.

(b) That, if an export is being made to territory which is not under the sovereignty, jurisdiction, protection or tute-lage of a High Contracting Party, articles covered by Categories I, II, IV and V are required for lawful purposes.

ARTICLE 15

The High Contracting Parties undertake to publish, in addition to the returns provided for in Article 6 and Article 9 in respect of articles covered by Categories I, II and IV, a return of articles covered by Category V exported to territory situated within the special zones. This return shall be published within the same time-limits and at the same intervals as those provided in the first paragraph of Article 6, and shall contain, as far as possible, the same particulars.

ARTICLE 16

The trade in articles covered by Categories I, II, IV and V within the special zones shall be placed under the supervision of officials of the authorities of the State, colony, protectorate or mandated territory concerned.

The admission and transit of and trade in such articles within the said zones shall also be subject to the provisions of Section I, §§ 1 and 2, of Annex II of the present Convention, to which provisions the High Contracting Parties undertake to conform.

An authorisation must be given by a duly authorised representative of the authorities aforesaid in each case before any such articles may be reconsigned to any place outside the territory to which they have been admitted.

ARTICLE 17

The manufacture, assembly and repair within the special zones of articles covered by Categories I, II, IV and V shall be subject to the provisions of Section I, § 3, of Annex II of the present Convention, to which provisions the High Contracting Parties undertake to conform.

ARTICLE 18

The High Contracting Parties undertake, each in respect of any territory under its sovereignty, jurisdiction, protection or tutelage situated within the special zones, not to permit the transit by land across such territory of articles covered by Categories I, II, IV and V when their destination is another territory also situated in the special zones, unless their transport to their destination is assured and the authorities of the latter territory have authorised their import.

The prohibition referred to in the above paragraph shall not apply to the transit of such articles through a territory situated in the special zones when their destination is territory of one of the High Contracting Parties not included in the said zones, provided that their transport to their destination is assured.

If, for the purposes of transport to a territory situated within the special zones, it is necessary to pass through a contiguous territory likewise situated within the said zones, the transit shall be permitted, subject always to the conditions laid down in the first paragraph hereof, at the request of the authorities of the importing territory, provided that such authorities guarantee that the articles in respect of which the request is made shall not at any time be sold, or otherwise transferred, contrary to the provisions of the present Convention. Nevertheless, if the attitude or the disturbed condition of the importing State constitutes a threat to peace or public order, permission for transit shall be refused to such State by the authorities of all such contiguous territories until this threat has ceased to exist.

ARTICLE 19

Subject to any contrary provisions in existing special agreements or in any future agreements, provided that in all cases such agreements otherwise comply with the provisions of the present Convention, the High Contracting Parties agree that in the special zones the authorities of the State, colony, protectorate or mandated territory concerned shall carry out within their territorial waters the supervision and police measures necessary for the application of the present Convention.

ARTICLE 20

The High Contracting Parties agree that within the special zones no native vessel, as hereinafter defined, of less than 500 tons (net tonnage) shall be allowed to ship, discharge or tranship articles covered by Categories I. II. IV and V.

A vessel shall be deemed to be a native vessel if she is either owned, fitted out or commanded by a native of any country bordering on the Indian Ocean west of the meridian of 95° East of Greenwich and north of the parallel of 11° South latitude, the Red Sea, the Persian Gulf, or the Gulf of Oman, or if at least one-half of the crew are natives of such countries.

The provisions of paragraph 1 hereof do not apply to lighters or barges or to vessels engaged exclusively in the coasting trade between different ports of the same State, colony, protectorate or mandated territory where warehouses are situated. The conditions under which articles covered by Categories I, II, IV, and V may be carried by such vessels are laid down in § 1 of Section II, of Annex II of the present Convention, to which the High Contracting Parties undertake to conform.

The provisions of this Article and of Section II, § 1, of Annex II do not apply:

(a) To arms, ammunition or implements carried on behalf of a Government either under an authorisation or accompanied by a duly authorised official of such Government; or

(b) To arms and ammunition in the possession of persons provided with a licence to carry arms on the condition that such arms are for the personal use of the bearer and are accurately described in such licence.

ARTICLE 21

The High Contracting Parties agree that, with the object of preventing all illicit conveyance within the special zones of articles covered by Categories I, II, IV, and V, all native vessels within the meaning of Article 20 must carry a manifest of their cargo or a similar document specifying the quantities and nature of the goods on board, their origin and destination. This manifest shall remain covered by the secrecy to which it is entitled by the law of the State to which the vessel belongs, and must not be examined during proceedings for the verification of the flag, unless the interested party consents thereto.

The provisions of this Article shall not apply to:

(a) Vessels exclusively engaged in the coasting trade between different ports of the same State, colony, protectorate or mandated territory; or

(b) Vessels engaged in carrying arms, ammunition and implements on behalf of a Government under the conditions defined in Article 20 (a) and proceeding to or from any point within the said zones; or

(c) Vessels only partially decked, having a maximum crew of ten men, and exclusively employed in fishing within territorial waters

ARTICLE 22

The High Contracting Parties agree that no authorisation to fly the flag of any of such High Contracting Parties shall be granted to native vessels of less than 500 tons (net tonnage) as defined in Article 20, except in accordance with the conditions prescribed in Section II, §§ 3 and 4, of Annex II of the present Convention. Such authorisation, which shall be in writing, shall be renewed every year and shall contain the particulars necessary to identify the vessel, the name, tonnage, type of rigging, principal dimensions, registered number and signal letters if any. It shall bear the date on which it was granted and the status of the official who granted it.

ARTICLE 23

The High Contracting Parties agree to communicate to any other High Contracting Party who so requests the forms of the documents to be issued by them under Articles 20 (a), 21 and 22 and Section II, § 1, of Annex II of the present Convention.

The High Contracting Parties further agree to take all necessary measures to ensure that the following documents shall be supplied as soon as possible to any other High Contracting Party who has requested the same:

(a) Certified copies of all authorizations to fly the flag granted under the provisions of Article 22:

(b) Notice of the withdrawal of such authorisations;

(c) Copies of authorisations issued under Section II, § 1, of Annex II.

ARTICLE 24

The High Contracting Parties agree to apply in the maritime zone the regulations laid down in Annex II, Section II, § 5, of the present Convention.

ARTICLE 25

The High Contracting Parties agree that any illicit conveyance or attempted conveyance legally established against the captain or owner of a vessel authorised to fly the flag of one of the High Contracting Parties, or holding the licence provided for in Section II, §1, of Annex II, of the present Convention, shall entail the immediate withdrawal of the said authorisation or licence.

ARTICLE 26

The High Contracting Parties who have under their sovereignty, jurisdiction, protection or tutelage territory situated within the special zones, undertake, so far as each is concerned, to take the necessary measures to ensure the application of the present Convention and, in particular, the prosecution and punishment of offences against the provisions thereof, and to appoint the territorial and consular officers or competent special representatives for the purpose.

They will communicate these measures to such High Contracting Parties as shall have expressed the desire to be informed thereof.

ARTICLE 27

The High Contracting Parties agree that the provisions of Articles 16 to 26 inclusive and Annex II of the present Convention establishing a certain regime of supervision in the special zones shall not be interpreted, as regards such High Contracting Parties as have no territory under their sovereignty, jurisdiction, protection or tutelage within or immediately adjacent to the said special zones, either as constituting an obligation to apply the regime defined in the above-mentioned provisions or as involving their responsibility with respect to the application of this regime.

However, the said High Contracting Parties shall conform to the provisions of Articles 22, 23 and 25, which relate to (net tonnage) may be authorised to fly the flag of such High Contracting Parties.

CHAPTER IV. SPECIAL PROVISIONS ARTICLE 28

Abyssinia, desirous of rendering as effective as possible the supervision of the trade in arms and ammunition and in implements of war, which is the subject of the present Convention, hereby undertakes, in the free exercise of her sovereign rights, to put into force, so far as concerns her own territory, all regulations which may be necessary to fulfil the provisions of Articles 12 to 18 inclusive of the said Convention relating to exports, imports and the transport of arms, ammunition and implements of war.

The High Contracting Parties take note of the above undertaking, and, being in full sympathy with the desire of Abyssinia to render as effective as possible the supervision of the trade in arms and ammunition and in implements of war, hereby undertake to conform to the provisions of the above-mentioned Articles so far as concerns Abyssinian territory, and to respect the regulations put into force, in accordance with the said undertaking, by Abyssinia as a sovereign State.

If a State, at present included in the special zones, should at the moment of its accession to the present Convention assume with respect to its own territory the same undertakings as those set forth in the first paragraph of this Article, and also, when such State possesses a sea-coast, those contained in Articles 19 to 26 inclusive in so far as the same are applicable, the High Contracting Parties hereby declare that they will consider such State as excluded from the said zones from the date that its accession becomes effective as specified in Article 41 and that they will accept as regards such State the obligations set forth in the second paragraph of the present Article, and also, when the State excluded possesses a sea-coast, the obligations of Articles 19 to 27 inclusive in so far as they are applicable.

The High Contracting Parties agree to accept reservations which may be made by Esthonia, Finland, Latvia, Poland, and Roumania at the moment of their signature of the present Convention and which shall suspend in respect to these States, until the accession of Russia to the present Convention, the application of Articles 6 and 9, as regards both export to and import into these countries by the High Contracting Parties. These reservations shall not be interpreted as preventing the publication of statistics in accordance with the laws and regulations in effect within the territory of any High Contracting Party.

ARTICLE 30

The High Contracting Parties who possess extra-territorial jurisdiction in the territory of another State party to the present Convention undertake in cases where the rules of this Convention cannot be enforced by the local courts as regards their nationals in such territory to prohibit all action by such nationals contrary to the provisions of the present Convention.

CHAPTER V. GENERAL PROVISIONS

ARTICLE 31

The provisions of the present Convention are completed by those of Annexes I and II, which have the same value and shall enter into force at the same time as the Convention itself.

The High Contracting Parties agree that the provisions of the present Convention do not apply:

(a) To arms or ammunition or to implements of war forwarded from territory under the sovereignty, jurisdiction, protection or tutelage of a High Contracting Party for the use of the armed forces of such High Contracting Party, wherever situated, nor

(b) To arms or ammunition carried by individual mem-

the conditions under which native vessels under 500 tons | High Contracting Party and required by them by reason of their calling, nor

(c) To rifles, muskets, carbines and the necessary ammunition therefor, carried by members of rifle clubs for the sole purpose of individual use in international competitions in marksmanship.

ARTICLE 33

In time of war, and without prejudice to the rules of neutrality, the provisions of Chapter II shall be suspended from operation until the restoration of peace so far as concerns any consignment of arms or ammunition or of implements of war to or on behalf of a belligerent.

ARTICLE 34

All the provisions of general international Conventions anterior to the date of the present Convention, such as the Convention for the Control of the Trade in Arms and Ammunition and the Protocol signed at St. Germain-en-Laye on September 10th, 1919, shall be considered as abrogated in so far as they relate to the matter dealt with in the present Convention and are binding between the Powers which are Parties to the present Convention.

The present Convention shall not be deemed to affect any rights and obligations which may arise out of the provisions either of the Covenant of the League of Nations or of the Treaties of Peace signed in 1919 and 1920 at Versailles, Neuilly, St. Germain and Trianon, or of the Treaty Limiting Naval Armaments signed at Washington on February 6th. 1922, or of any other treaty, convention, agreement or engagement concerning prohibition of import, export or transit of arms or ammunition or of implements of war; nor, without prejudice to the provisions of the present Convention itself, shall it affect any other treaty, convention, agreement or engagement other than those referred to in paragraph 1 of the present Article having as its object the supervision of import, export or transit of arms or ammunition or of implements of war.

ARTICLE 35

The High Contracting Parties agree that disputes arising between them relating to the interpretation or application of this Convention shall, if they cannot be settled by direct negotiation, be referred for decision to the Permanent Court of International Justice. In case either or both of the States to such a dispute should not be parties to the Protocol of December 16th, 1920, relating to the Permanent Court of International Justice, the dispute shall be referred, at the choice of the Parties and in accordance with the constitutional procedure of each State, either to the Permanent Court of International Justice or to a court of arbitration constituted in accordance with the Hague Convention of October 18th, 1907, or to some other court of arbitration.

ARTICLE 36

Any High Contracting Party may declare that its signature or ratification or accession does not, as regards the application of the provisions of Chapter II and of Articles 13, 14 and 15 of the present Convention, bind either all or any one of the territories subject to its sovereignty, jurisdiction or protection, provided that such territories are not situated in the special zones as defined in Article 12.

Any High Contracting Party which has made such a declaration may, subsequently, and in conformity with the provisions of Article 37, adhere entirely to the present Convention for any territories so excluded. Such High Contracting Party will use its best endeavours to ensure as soon as possible the accession of any territories so excluded.

Any High Contracting Party may also, as regards the application of the provisions of Chapter II and of Articles 13, 14 and 15 of the present Convention, and in conformity with the procedure laid down in Article 38, denounce the present Convention separately in respect of any territory referred Any High Contracting Party which shall have availed itself of the option of exclusion or of denunciation provided for in the preceding paragraphs undertakes to apply the provisions of Chapter II to consignments destined for terbers of such forces or by other persons in the service of a ritories in respect of which the option has been exercised.

ARTICLE 37

The High Contracting Parties will use their best endeavours to secure the accession to the present Convention of other States.

Each accession will be notified to the Government of the French Republic and by the latter to all the signatory or acceding States.

The instruments of accession shall remain deposited in the archives of the Government of the French Republic.

ARTICLE 38

The present Convention may be denounced by any High Contracting Party thereto after the expiration of four years from the date when it came into force in respect of that Party. Denunciation shall be effected by notification in writing addressed to the Government of the French Republic, which will forthwith transmit copies of such notification to the other Contracting Parties, informing them of the date on which it was received.

A denunciation shall take effect one year after the date of the receipt of the notification thereof by the Government of the French Republic and shall operate only in respect of the notifying State.

In case a denunciation has the effect of reducing the number of States parties to the Convention below fourteen, any of the remaining High Contracting Parties may also, within a period of one year from the date of such denunciation, denounce the Convention without waiting for the expiration of the period of four years mentioned above and may require that its denunciation shall take effect at the same date as the first-mentioned denunciation.

ARTICLE 39

The High Contracting Parties agree that, at the conclusion of a period of three years from the coming into force of the present Convention under the terms of Article 41, this Convention shall be subject to revision upon the request of one-third of the said High Contracting Parties addressed to the Government of the French Republic.

ARTICLE 40

The present Convention, of which the French and English texts are both authentic, is subject to ratification. It shall bear to-day's date.

Each Power shall address its ratification to the Government of the French Republic, which will at once notify the deposit of ratification to each of the other signatory Powers.

The instruments of ratification will remain deposited in the archives of the Government of the French Republic.

ARTICLE 41

A first proces-verbal of the deposit of ratifications will be drawn up by the Government of the French Republic as soon as the present Convention shall have been ratified by fourteen Powers.

The Convention shall come into force four months after the date of the notification of this proces-verbal by the Government of the French Republic to all signatory Powers.

Subsequently, the Convention will come into force in respect of each High Contracting Party four months after the date on which its ratification or accession shall have been notified by the Government of the French Republic to all signatory or acceding States.

In witness whereof, the above-mentioned Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Convention.

meration (number or weight).

Components parts, completely finished, of the articles covered by the above headings, if capable of being utilised only in the assembly or repair of the said articles, or as spare parts, should be entered separately, by weight, under each of the above headings or subheadings to which they belong. CATEGORY II. ARMS AND AMMUNITION CAPABLE OF USE BOTH FOR MILITARY AND OTHER PURPOSES

1. Pistols and revolvers, automatic or self-loading, and developments of the same, designed for single-handed use or fired from the shoulder, of a calibre greater than 6.5 mm. and length of barrel greater than 10 cm. (number).

2. Fire-arms designed, intended or adapted for non-military purposes, such as sport or personal defence, that will fire cartridges that can be fired from fire-arms in Category I. Other rifled fire-arms, firing from the shoulder of a calibre of 6 mm. or above not included in Category I, with the exception of rifled fire-arms with a "break-down" action (number).

3. Ammunition for the arms enumerated in the above two headings, with the exception of ammunition covered by Category I (number).

4. Swords and lances (number).

Component parts, completely finished, of the articles covered by the above headings, if capable of being utilised only in the assembly or repair of the said articles, or as spare parts, should be entered separately, by weight, under each of the above headings or sub-headings to which they belong.

ANNEX II

SUPERVISION WITHIN THE SPECIAL ZONES Section I. Supervision on Land

$ 1

All articles covered by Categories I, II, IV and V admitted into the territory of a State, colony, protectorate or mandated territory situated in the special zones, except such articles imported by individuals for their personal use under an authorisation issued by the authorities of the territory concerned, shall be deposited by the importer at his own expense and risk in a public warehouse maintained under the exclusive custody and permanent supervision of the authorities aforesaid or their officials, of whom at least one must be a member of their armed forces, and who shall keep an official record of such deposit.

Every withdrawal from a public warehouse must be authorized beforehand by such authorities. No such authorisation shall be given except for the purposes of transfer to another public warehouse or to a private warehouse duly approved by the said authorities or for delivery to individuals who have proved to the satisfaction of the said authorities that the articles are necessary to them for their personal use.

Articles required for the equipment of the national forces or for the defence of the territory are exempted from all formalities in connection with deposit in or withdrawal from a public warehouse.

No private warehouse for articles covered by Categories I. II. IV and V shall be allowed within the special zones unless authorised by the authorities of the State, colony, protectorate or mandated territory. Such warehouse must consist of enclosed premises, reserved for that purpose and having only one entry, which must be fitted with two locks, one of which can be opened only by officials of the author-

The person in charge of the warehouse shall be responsible for all such articles deposited therein and must account for them on demand by the authorities.

Such articles must not be withdrawn from the warehouse nor be transported or transferred without a special authorisation. The particulars entered on such authorisations shall be noted in a special register numbered and initialled.

Every arm imported under the provisions of § 1 by an individual for his personal use or transferred under the provisions of the same § from a public warehouse to a private warehouse or a private individual must be registered. A mark shall be stamped thereon if it does not already bear another mark or a number sufficient for identification. The

12. Arms and ammunition not specified in the above enu- | mark or number shall be noted in the license to carry arms issued by the authorities.

The manufacture or assembly within the special zones of articles covered by Categories I, II, IV and V is prohibited otherwise than in establishments instituted for the defence of the territory or maintenance of public order by the authorities of the territory concerned, or in the case of mandated territory by such authorities under the supervision of the mandatory Power.

The repair of such articles shall only be carried out in establishments instituted by the authorities or in private establishments which shall have been authorised for this purpose by the said authorities. Such authorisation shall not be granted without guarantees for the observance of the rules of the present Convention.

Section II. Maritime supervision

$ 1

Cargoes of articles covered by Categories I, II, IV and V shipped on board the lighters, barges or coasting vessels referred to in Article 20, paragraph 3, must be covered by a special licence issued by the authorities of the State, colony, protectorate or mandated territory in which such cargoes are shipped, and containing the particulars specified in § 2 hereof. All articles so shipped shall in addition be subject to the provisions of the present Convention.

8 2

Special licences referred to in § 1 of Section II of the present Annex shall contain the following particulars:

- (a) A statement of the nature and quantity of the articles in respect of which the licence is issued.
- (b) The name of the vessel on which the cargoes are to be shipped.
  - (c) The name of the ultimate consignee.
  - (d) The ports of loading and discharge.

It shall be certified on such licences that they have been issued in conformity with the provisions of the present Convention.

An authorisation to fly the flag of a High Contracting Party may only be granted by the authorities mentioned in paragraph (b) below, and subject to the three following conditions:

- (a) The owners must be nationals of the Power whose flag they claim to fly or companies who are nationals under the laws of that Power.
- (b) The owners must have furnished proof that they are bona fide owners of real estate in the territory of the authorities to whom the application for a license is addressed, or have given to such authorities sufficient guarantees for the payment of any fines to which they may become liable.
- (c) The owners and the captain of the vessel must have furnished proof that they enjoy a good reputation and, in particular, that they have never been convicted of illicit conveyance of arms or ammunition or implements of war.

All native vessels before they are authorised to fly the flag of a High Contracting Party shall have complied with the following regulations for the purpose of their identification at sea:

- (a) The initial letters of the port of registration of the native vessel, followed by the vessel's registration number in the serial port numbers, must be incised and painted in white on black ground on both quarters of each vessel in such a position as to be easily distinguishable from a distance.
- (b) The net tonnage of the native vessel shall also, if practicable, be incised and painted inside the hull in a conspicuous position.

$ 5

The regulations refered to in Article 24 of the present Convention are as follows:

1. When a warship belonging to one of the High Contracting Parties encounters within the maritime zone but outside territorial waters a presumed native vessel of under 500 tons burden (net tonnage),

(a) Flying the flag of one of the High Contracting Parties,

(b) Flying no flag, and the Commanding Officer of the warship has good reason to believe that the said vessel is flying the flag of any High Contracting Party without being entitled to do so, or is illicitly conveying articles covered by Categories I, II, IV and V, he may proceed to stop the vessel in order to verify the nationality of the vessel by examining the document authorising the flying of the flag, but no other document.

2. Any vessel which presents the appearance of native build and rig may be presumed to be a native vessel.

3. For the purpose of verifying the nationality of the suspected vessel, a boat commanded by a commissioned officer in uniform may be sent to visit the vessel after she has been hailed so as to give notice of such intention. The officer sent on board the vessel shall act with all possible consideration and moderation. Before leaving the vessel, the officer shall draw up a proces-verbal in the form and language in use in his own country. This proces-verbal shall state the facts of the case and shall be dated and signed by the officer.

Should there be on board the warship no commissioned officer other than the Commanding Officer, the above prescribed operations may be carried out by a warrant, petty or non-commissioned officer at the discretion of the Commanding Officer.

The captain or master of the vessel visited, as well as the witnesses, shall be invited to sign the proces-verbal and shall have the right to add to it any explanations which they may consider expedient.

4. In the cases referred to in paragraph 1 (a) hereof, unless the right to fly the flag can be established, the vessel may be conducted to the nearest port in the maritime zone where there is a competent authority of the Power whose flag has been flown and shall be handed over to such authority, but if such a port should be at such a distance from the point of detention that the warship would have to leave her station or patrol to escort the detained vessel thereto, the vessel may be taken to the nearest port where there is a competent authority of one of the High Contracting Parties of nationality other than that of the warship and handed over to such authority, and steps shall at once be taken to notify this fact to the competent authority representing the power concerned.

No proceeding shall be taken against the vessel or her crew until the arrival of the representative of the Power whose flag the vessel was flying or without authority from such representative.

Instead of conducting the suspected vessel to a port as laid down above, the Commanding Officer of the detaining warship may hand her over to a warship of the nation whose flag she has flown if the latter consents to take charge of her.

- 5. The procedure laid down in paragraph 4 may also be followed if, after the verification of the flag and in spite of the voluntary production of the manifest, the Commanding Officer of the warship continues to suspect the vessel of engaging in the illicit conveyance of articles covered by Categories I, II, IV and V.
- 6. In the cases referred to in paragraph 1 (b) hereof, if it is ascertained, as a result of the visit made on board the vessel that, whereas it flew no flag, it was also not entitled to fly the flag of a recognised State, the vessel may, unless the innocent nature of her cargo can be duly established to the satisfaction of the Commanding Officer of the warship, be conducted to the nearest point in the maritime zone where there is a competent authority of the Power to which the detaining warship belongs, and shall be handed over to such authority.
- 7. The authority before whom the suspected vessel has been brought shall institute a full enquiry in accordance with the laws and regulations of his country and in conformity with the procedure laid down in paragraph 8 below. | the vessel detained, shall be sent as soon as possel was shall institute a full enquiry in accordance to such of the High Contracting Parties as formity with the procedure laid down in paragraph 8 below. |

This enquiry shall be carried out in the presence of an officer of the detaining warship.

If, however, the presence of such officer is impracticable owing to the duties upon which the warship is engaged, an affidavit sworn by the Commanding Officer may in special cases be accepted by the authority holding the enquiry in place of the oral evidence of an officer of the warship.

8. (a) In the case of vessels referred to in paragraph 1 (a) above, if it is proved at this enquiry that the flag has been illegally flown, but that the vessel is entitled to fly the flag of a recognised State, she shall, if that State is one of the High Contracting Parties, be handed over to the nearest authority of that State. If such State is not a High Contracting Party, the vessel shall be disposed of by agreement between the State responsible for her detention and the State whose flag she is entitled to fly, and, pending such agreement, shall remain in the custody of the authorities of the nationality of the detaining warship.

(b) If it should be established that the use of the flag by the detained vessel was correct, but that the vessel was engaged in the illicit conveyance of articles covered by Categories I, II, IV and V, those responsible shall be brought before the courts of the State under whose flag the vessel sailed. The vessel herself and her cargo shall remain in charge of the authority conducting the enquiry. The illicit cargo may be destroyed in accordance with laws and regulations drawn up for the purpose.

(c) In the case of vessels referred to in paragraph 1 (b) above, if it be established that the vessel had the right to fly the flag of one of the High Contracting Parties but was engaged in the illicit conveyance of any of the articles covered by Categories I, II, IV, and V, the procedure laid down in the preceding paragraph should be followed.

- (d) In the case of vessels referred to in paragraph 1 (b) above, if it be established that the vessel was not entitled to fly the flag of any of the High Contracting Parties and was engaged in the illicit conveyance of any of the articles covered by Categories I, II, IV and V, the vessel and all cargo carried in addition to these articles shall be seized by such authorities and disposed of according to the national laws and regulations of the authorities before whom the vessel has been brought. The destruction of this cargo may be ordered according to the same laws and regulations.
- (e) If the authority entrusted with the enquiry decides that the detention and diversion of the vessel or other measures imposed upon her were irregular, he shall assess the amount of the compensation which he considers to be due.
- 9. If the decision and assessment of the said authority are accepted by the detaining officer and the authorities to whom he is subject, the amount awarded shall be paid within six months from the date of the said assessment.
- 10. If the detaining officer, or the authorities to whom he is subject, contest the decision or the amount of the compensation assessed, the dispute shall be submitted to a Court of Arbitration consisting of one arbitrator appointed by the Government whose flag the vessel was flying, one appointed by the Government of the detaining officer, and an umpire chosen by the two arbitrators thus appointed. The two arbitrators shall be chosen, as far as possible, from among the Diplomatic, Consular or Judicial officers of the High Contracting Parties. These appointments must be made with the least possible delay. Any compensation awarded shall be paid to the persons concerned within six months at most from the date of the award of the court.
- 11. The Commanding Officer of a warship who may have stopped a vessel flying a foreign flag shall in all cases make a report thereon to his Government, stating the grounds on which he acted. An extract from this report, together with a copy of the proces-verbal, drawn up by the officer, warrant officer, petty or non-commissioned officer sent on board the vessel detained, shall be sent as soon as possible to the Government whose flag the detained vessel was flying and to such of the High Contracting Parties as may have expressed the desire to receive such documents.

[American Delegation to the International Conference on the Traffic in Arms Held at Geneva May 4 to June 17, 1925]

WASHINGTON, December 16, 1925.

The Honorable The SECRETARY OF STATE,

Washington.

SIR: The undersigned, appointed by the President as Chairman of the American Delegation to the International Conference held at Geneva May 4 to June 17, 1925, to consider the conclusion of a convention for the supervision of the international trade in arms and ammunition and in implements of war, has the honor to submit the following report on behalf of the Delegation, which was composed as follows:

Honorable Theodore E. Burton, Chairman, Honorable Hugh S. Gibson, Vice Chairman, Rear Admiral Andrew T. Long, Mr. Allen W. Dulles.

Brigadier General Colden L'H Ruggles.

The delegates of the United States of America, after preliminary conferences held in Washington and at Geneva. met at Geneva on May 4, 1925, with representatives of fortythree other States, including: Germany, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, the British Empire, Canada, the Irish Free State and India, Bulgaria, Chile, China, Colombia, Denmark, Egypt, Spain, Esthonia, Abyssinia, Finland, France, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Japan, Latvia, Lithuania, Luxemburg, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, the Netherlands, Persia, Poland, Portugal, Rumania, Salvador, Siam, Sweden, Switzerland, the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes, Czechoslovakia, Turkey, Uruguay and Venezuela.

In the forty-five days of its sessions the Conference drew up a convention to regulate the international trade in arms and war material, a certified copy of which is appended. This instrument was signed on behalf of the United States by the Chairman and the Vice Chairman, and by the representatives of twenty-one other States, as indicated below:

SIGNATORIES TO THE CONVENTION 1

Germany (Allemagne) United States of America Austria Brazil British Empire India Chile Spain (Espagne) Esthonia Abyssinia (Ethopie) Finland

France

Hungary Italy Japan Latvia Luxemburg Poland Roumania Salvador Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes Czechoslovakia (Tchécoslovaquie) In the consideration of the work of the American Delegation to the Arms Traffic Conference of Geneva, it is important briefly to indicate the reasons for the holding of this Conference and to outline the preparatory work which served as a basis for the deliberations of the various delegates assembled.

During the Paris Peace Conference of 1918-1919 there was elaborated and signed at Saint Germain-en-Laye on September 10, 1919, by representatives of the United States and by those of twenty-two other Powers a convention to regulate the trade in arms and war material, known as the Saint Germain Convention. This Convention was not submitted to the Senate nor ratified by the United States for the reasons set forth in a communication of September 12. 1923, from the Secretary of State, the Honorable Charles E. Hughes, to the Council of the League of Nations, in replying to a communication from the Acting President of the Council of the League, which quoted a resolution of the Assembly of the League to the effect that:

The Assembly considers it highly desirable that the Government of the United States should express the objections which it has to formulate to the provisions of the Convention of Saint Germain as well as any proposals which it may care to make as to the way in which these objections can be overcome."

Secretary Hughes in his communication of September 12 stated that "the Government of the United States is in cordial sympathy with efforts suitably to restrict traffic in arms and munitions of war" and referred to the steps taken by the Executive under legislative authorizations of 1898, 1912, and 1922 for the regulation of the trade in war material with other countries in this hemisphere and with countries where the United States exercised extraterritorial jurisdiction. Secretary Hughes pointed out, however, that the Saint Germain Convention, while not undertaking to restrict the purchase of arms by countries signatory thereto, would prohibit such sale to States not parties to the Convention, and that under such provisions this Government might be required to prevent shipments of military supplies to such Latin-American countries as had not signed or adhered to the Convention, however desirable it might be to permit such shipments, merely because they were not signatory powers and might not desire to adhere to the Convention.

The Secretary of State further pointed out that the provisions of the Convention relating to the League of Nations were so intertwined with the whole Convention as to make it impracticable for this Government to ratify, in view of the fact that it is not a member of the League of Nations.

In acknowledging Secretary Hughes' communication the Acting President of the Council of the League of Nations, on December 14, inquired whether the Government of the United States, having indicated that it was "in cordial sympathy with efforts to restrict traffic in arms and munitions of war" was prepared to cooperate with the Temporary Mixed Commission, the organ of the League which then was considering questions of disarmament, in the preparation of a draft convention, or conventions, for the purpose of controlling this trade.

This inquiry having been answered in the affirmative, the American Minister to Switzerland, Mr. Grew, and later Mr. Gibson, met informally with the Temporary Mixed Commission of the League of Nations, which drew up a draft of a convention for the control of the international trade in arms which was intended as a basis for the consideration of this subject by an international conference which it was proposed later to convoke. The documentary material covering these preliminary conversations which were held at Geneva and Paris in February, March and July, 1924, is fully set forth in the appended publication (Annex 1).

Subsequently, the Council of the League of Nations on October 7th communicated to the Secretary of State an invitation to attend the International Conference in question. The text of this invitation is quoted herewith:

"SIR, At its meeting held on September 30th, the Council adopted the following Resolution:-

"'On the proposal of the Assembly the Council decides to authorise the Secretary-General to submit to the Governments of the States Members and non-Members of the League of Nations the draft Convention relating to the Control of the International Trade in Arms, Munitions and Implements of War drawn up by the Temporary Mixed Commission, and to request these Governments to inform him, before the Council meets in December, whether they are prepared to take part in a Conference to be convened in April or May, 1925, for the purpose of discussing the draft Convention

"'The Secretary-General will communicate to the various Governments the report of the Temporary Mixed Commission, the minutes of that Commission and the Minutes of the Permanent Advisory Commission relating to the discussion of Article 9, together with the minutes of the present meeting of the Council, in order that the representatives of the Governments on the International Conference may have the requisite information to enable them to come to a decision on the problems raised on this question during the present

"In execution of this decision, I have the honour to enclose herewith the draft Convention on the control of the International Trade in Arms, Munitions and Implements of War which was drawn up by the Temporary Mixed Commission (Document A 16. 1924 IX, Annex IV).

"The next meeting of the Council is to be held on December 8th, 1924, and I should be grateful if you would kindly inform me, if possible before that date, whether the United States Government would be prepared to take part in an International Conference to be held in April or May, 1925, for the purpose of discussing this draft and concluding a Convention on the control of the International Trade in Arms, Munitions and Implements of War. The exact date of this Conference will be fixed by the Council at its December session.

"In accordance with paragraph 2 of the Council's Resolution I am also enclosing herewith the report of the Temporary Mixed Commission for the reduction of armaments and the report of the 3rd Committee of the Assembly.

"The report of the Temporary Mixed Commission contains that part of the Minutes of the Commission which relates to Article 9 (Document A. 16. 1924 IX. Annex V).

relates to Article 9 (Document A. 16. 1924 IX. Annex V).
"Further information relating to the preparations for the Conference will be forwarded to you as soon as possible.

"I have the honour, etc.

(signed) Eric Drummond, Secretary-General."

To the foregoing communication the following reply was made, on December 7, by the American representative in Switzerland under instructions from the Department of State:

"I beg to inform you that I have been instructed by my Government to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of October 7, 1924 transmitting the text of a resolution adopted by the Council of the League of Nations with respect to the holding of an international conference of the States members and non-members of the League of Nations April or May, 1925, for the purpose of considering the conclusion of a convention with respect to the international trade in arms, munitions and implements of war. In this communication you inquire whether my Government would be prepared to take part in such a conference.

"In reply I take pleasure in referring to the communication addressed to you on August 29 in which it was stated that my Government would be disposed to give favorable consideration to an invitation to participate in an appropriate international conference of the powers for the aforementioned purpose. My Government still holds this attitude and is agreeable to the suggestion that the time of holding the Conference should be in April or May, 1925."

THE GENEVA CONFERENCE

The attitude of the American Government toward the control of traffic in arms and the program and policy of the American Delegation was clearly set forth in the following statement of the Chairman of the American Delegation, of May 5, the day after the opening of the Conference:

"In accepting the invitation to be represented at this Conference, the Government of the United States cordially welcomes the opportunity to collaborate in the present movement. The people of the United States earnestly desire to give substantial evidence of their sincere interest in aiding in any constructive effort directed toward the maintenance of peace, and it is hoped that such efforts will be promoted by the proper control of the International trade in arms through the suppression of illicit trade in war material and by securing the fullest and most accurate publicity as to the extent and character of this trade. It is with this intention and with this spirit that the American Delegation will take part in the discussions of the Conference, in the hope of contributing towards attaining concrete results.

"As an evidence of our sincere desire to contribute to the inauguration of an era of continuing peace and to aid in preventing the horrors of war, the Government of the United States, in 1921, took steps to convene the Washington Conference, the results of which are known to the world. In addition to the definite achievements of this Conference, it is believed that the spirit which actuated the delegates at that meeting was a striking indication of the intent of the Powers participating to continue the work initiated there.

"As regards the specific object of the present Conference, namely the control of the traffic in arms, our Government has in recent years followed the policy of counselling its nationals against engaging in such trade with the troubled areas of the world where military arms might be particularly used for purposes of disturbing the peace. Further, under the authority of existing legislation, our Presidents have, from time to time, imposed absolute or partial restrictions on the exportation of arms from the United States to certain areas where such measures appeared to be particularly necessary. In addition, the flotation of foreign loans in the United States for the purpose of purchasing armament has been consistently and, it is believed successfully, discouraged.

"In the forthcoming discussions of the Draft Convention which has been placed before the Conference as a basis for its deliberations, we shall offer certain constructive suggestions and modifications which, it is felt, might appropriately be embodied in the proposed Convention and which might assist in achieving the objects of the Conference. One of the most important of these suggestions, which I shall present in detail on a more appropriate occasion, concerns additional measures to deal with the traffic in poisonous gases with the hope of reducing the barbarity of modern warfare.

"The Delegation of the United States realises that it is important to consider the problem of the traffic in arms not only from the point of view of the producing but from that of the non-producing States. No program has yet been adopted which is effective for general disarmament and it is clear that the trade in arms cannot be eliminated. Nevertheless a solution may be reached which will assure to sovereign States the means of securing what may be necessary to their national defense and the maintenance of internal peace and order and which will, at the same time, properly control the international trade in arms.

"I desire to express my appreciation of the excellent remarks of Mr. Dupriez<sup>2</sup> and I also wish to express my thanks to M. Matsuda<sup>2</sup> for his expression of friendship to the United States. Let that expression be indicative of the mutual confidence and good will which should exist between the two nations on either side of the Great Pacific—Japan and the United States of America.

"In conclusion, let me say that it is with optimism that we enter upon the work of this gathering, in the hope that by friendly consultation something may be accomplished worthy of the best efforts of the delegates here assembled and which may substantially promote the cause of peace."

The details respecting the organization of the Conference, the questions considered, the positions taken by the various delegates, together with the proceedings of the various committees and subcommittees, are fully set forth in the attached publication (Annex 2). While it is therefore unnecessary, and would only result in repetition, to review the entire work of the Conference in this statement, a brief indication of the scope of the Convention, of the special problems met by the Conference, and of the American interests involved may not be out of place.

SCOPE OF THE CONVENTION

(1) In Articles 1 to 5 of the Convention provision is made for the supervision of the international trade in arms, munitions and implements of war with a view to keeping such trade within the proper channels. This control of the trade is to be exercised by each sovereign state within its own territory according to its own laws enacted or to be enacted to make the Convention effective.

(2) A system of publicity is provided for the international trade in the implements of war comprised in Categories One and Two, that is,—arms exclusively designed for war and those susceptible of use both in war and for peaceful purposes. Provision is also made for publicity for the trade in aircraft and aircraft engines and for publicity of the most detailed character in connection with the sale or transfer of any vessel of war.

(3) Provision is made for special control with regard to the shipment to, and the disposition of arms within, certain areas of the world where, experience has shown, there is particular need for close supervision of the arms traffic. These areas include Central Africa and the territory formerly a part of the Ottoman Empire but now detached from Turkey as defined in Article 12 of the Convention.

SPECIAL PROBLEMS

During the deliberations of the Conference, certain special problems arose which merit brief explanations.

(1) The Conference recognized that the trade in war vessels could not, from its nature and the place of such vessels in international law, be dealt with on the same basis as trade in rifles or ammunition. With a view to meeting this situation, the American Delegation proposed and found ready acceptance for the suggestion that the regime outlined in Article XVI of the Washington Treaty of February 6, 1922, limiting naval armament, should be adopted. According to this regime as outlined in Article 7 of the Convention, the High Contracting Powers undertake to supply full information with regard to the construction within their territory of a ship of war for delivery to any foreign Power.

(2) The problem which the Conference had to face with respect to the trade in airplanes was of a slightly different character in view of the recognized commercial uses of airplanes, as well as the practical difficulty of distinguishing between an airplane adapted for war purposes and an airplane adapted for the ends of peace. It was felt, therefore. that a provision (article 9) stipulating that full publicity should be given to the foreign trade in aircraft and aircraft engines would meet the situation, without interfering with legitimate commerce.

- (3) At an early stage in the Conference it became clear that the States bordering on Russia had a special problem to face in connection with the publicity of their military purchases. The Soviet regime declined to be represented at the Geneva Conference and has indicated no interest whatever in adherence to the Arms Traffic Convention. The States bordering on Russia represented at the Conference are for the most part States which are dependent upon imports for the supply of the military equipment which they consider necessary for their national defense. The border States considered that an obligation on their part to publish full statistics of their importations while Russia was under no obligation to give similar publicity to its importation would be detrimental. For this reason therefore, the Conference agreed to incorporate in the Treaty a provision (Article 29) freeing certain States bordering on Russia from the obligation of publicity pending the adhesion of Russia to the Convention.
- (4) Throughout the Conference the delegates of the socalled "Producing States" were constantly reminded that the problem which the Non-Producing States had to face was of a different character than that of the Producing States and that the former could not properly acquiesce in any treaty provisions which would prejudice their right to secure the arms necessary for their national defense. In considering this situation the American Delegation was also impressed by the fact that any regime of control which restricted the right of the Non-producing Powers to purchase arms abroad might have the unfortunate result of forcing States at present non-producers of arms to introduce on a large scale the manufacture of arms and war material. Many a State might thus become more or less of an armed camp and the result would be detrimental to the cause of peace. Therefore, there have been introduced into the Convention no provisions which prevent a State from securing arms for its national defense from other countries under certain safeguards and guarantees and with the publicity which should act as a preventative against the undue accumulation of imported arms in any given country.

- (5) It was brought to the attention of the Conference that in States where extraterritorial rights were exercised there would be obvious difficulties in enforcing the provisions of the Convention as against foreigners enjoying such extraterritorial rights. This situation unless corrected might result in opening to foreigners, enjoying extraterritorial privileges in certain countries, the opportunity of engaging uncontrolled in an illicit trade. For these reasons Article 30 was included in the Convention, according to which the "High Contracting Parties who possess extraterritorial jurisdiction in the territory of another State party to the present Convention undertake in cases where the rules of this Convention can not be enforced by the local courts as regards their nationals in such territory to prohibit all action by such nationals contrary to the provisions of the present Convention."
- (6) The question of the control of the trade in arms in time of war presented a particularly difficult problem. It is a recognized principle of international law that a neutral State is under no obligation to prevent the shipment of arms from its territory on behalf of a belligerent; provided, of course, as specified in the laws of the United States, that the territory of the neutral State shall not be used as a base for fitting out military expeditions. On the other hand, it is contrary to the obligations of neutrality, as recognized in the laws of the United States as well as in the law and practice of nations, for a State itself either directly or indirectly, to supply arms to a belligerent. Under the regime outlined in the Convention the approval of the Government of the exporting country is normally required in the case of the shipment of arms in Category One. If such approval were also required in time of war the neutrality of a power formally approving the shipment of arms to a belligerent might be called in question. If therefore the Convention were applicable in its entirety in time of war, the result might be that it would be rendered impossible to permit shipments of arms to a belligerent although such shipment might otherwise be unobjectionable, and although the country in question might not desire to intervene to prevent

In view of these considerations it was the unanimous opinion of the delegates assembled that it would be unwise to endeavor to apply with respect to belligerents the articles of the Convention which involved the approval of the exporting government as a necessary prerequisite to a shipment. Consequently the following article (Article 33) was introduced into the Convention.

"In time of war and without prejudice to the rules of neutrality the provisions of Chapter 2 shall be suspended from operation until the restoration of peace so far as concerns any consignment of arms or ammunition or implements of war to or on behalf of a belligerent."

AMERICAN INTERESTS INVOLVED

- (1) The United States has for some time given full publicity to the statistics of its foreign trade, including publicity of its trade in war material. The American Delegation therefore felt that it would be according to American traditions of publicity and frankness to agree to continue such publicity and that it would be in our interest that other countries should likewise make public their trade in arms.
- (2) The method of supervision provided for in the Convention for the trade in arms is adapted to meet the special conditions existing in the United States. In particular it should be noted that the forms now used for export declarations are specifically recognized in the Convention and it is provided that these forms may, under certain safeguards, be employed to secure the requisite control and publicity. Thus the necessity for the creation of elaborate boards of control for the issuing of licenses in individual cases of shipments of arms is obviated.
- (3) The Convention does not provide for the control of the international trade in arms by any international body. Each country is to exercise its control within its own jurisdiction and according to its own laws, without dictation, advice or interference by any international commission.

(4) In connection with the provision for the enforcement of a strict control of the arms trade within certain areas of Africa and Asia, the American Delegation, while recognizing the reasons for such a control and agreeing that shipments from the United States to the areas in question should be under strict supervision as far as their clearance from the United States was concerned, proposed and secured the insertion in the Convention, in Article 27, of a provision that would relieve the United States from any responsibility with respect to the application of this regime in territorial or maritime zones beyond the jurisdiction of the United States.

(5) The present Convention, superseding as it would the applicable provisions of the Brussels Act of 1890 and the unratified Saint Germain Convention, helps to clarify the situation and defines the conditions under which arms shipments from this country may properly be permitted. Its provisions would in no way conflict with the control which may now be exercised with respect to the export of arms to certain countries under existing provisions of American law

CONCLUSIONS

The delegates at the Conference impressed upon the American Delegation their view that any international convention for the control of the trade in arms would be ineffective unless adhered to by the United States, one of the important arms producing powers. With a view to facilitating American adherence, the Conference did not press for the inclusion of any provision for the supervision or control of the arms trade by an international commission, recognizing that such control would be inacceptable to this Government. Further, the various proposals advanced from time to time by the American Delegation received the full and sympathetic consideration of the Conference and in every case where American principles and interests were involved, solutions which the American Delegation considered acceptable were adopted. The American Delegation desire to record their recognition of this attitude and, in submitting this treaty, to state that in their opinion the success or failure of the entire Convention will be in no small measure dependent upon the attitude assumed by the American Government in the matter.

While registering this view, the American Delegation would point out that in their opinion the adherence of all the important arms-producing powers, and not only that of the United States, is essential to the realization of the objects of the Convention. For the United States to ratify and to make the Convention effective prior to the ratification by other arms-producing powers would only result in placing a premium upon non-ratification by certain producing powers, since they would then be free to sell arms to other powers without control and without publicity. If, therefore, the Convention meets with the approval of the Senate, and if the legislation which will be necessary to make it effective in the United States is assured, the delegates of the United States consider that the deposit of ratifications on the part of the United States should be conditioned upon the deposit of ratifications by the other great producing powers of the world. The American Delegation would not of course suggest any delay in the submission of the Convention to the Senate or its consideration by that body, but considers that in the event of Senatorial approval the deposit of ratifications, which would make the Convention binding upon the United States if thirteen other Powers deposit ratifications, should only take place when among the ratifying powers are included the other principal arms-producing states.

The American Delegation appreciates that the present Convention does not specifically provide for any restriction in the volume of the trade in arms, although the control of this trade should indirectly result in such restriction through the reduction of the illicit traffic in war material. It is felt, however, that pending the realization of a definite disarmament program it would be futile, and possibly harmful, as indicated above, to attempt the arbitrary restriction of the trade in war material, which would place the non-producing powers at the mercy of the producing power, force production by all powers and, far from accomplishing the purposes of disarmament, might tend toward the increase of the military establishment of certain powers.

In addition to the Convention itself, there is also appended (Annex 3) a copy of the Protocol of signature and a copy of the Final Act (Annex 4) which describes the calling of the Conference and includes two declarations of the delegates assembled. Neither of these documents call for ratification. In addition, there was signed at Geneva a declaration relating to the inclusion of the territory of Ifni (in Spanish Morocco) in the special zones. This declaration was not signed on behalf of the United States, and it is not felt that it calls for action at this time on the part of this Government.

In conclusion, the American Delegation desire to express their appreciation of the invaluable assistance rendered by the Secretary of the American Delegation, Mr. Alan F. Winslow, and by the Technical Advisers, Mr. Charles E. Herring, Commercial Attaché at the Embassy in Berlin, Major George V. Strong and Major Earl J. Atkisson of the War Department, and Commander Herbert F. Leary, Assistant Naval Attaché at the Embassy in London.

The Delegation also take this occasion to record their appreciation of the effective and impartial manner in which the proceedings of the Conference were directed by its President, M. Carton de Wiart, former Prime Minister of Belgium, and in the latter's absence, by the Vice President of the Conference, Mr. Guerrero, of Salvador. The Delegation also desire to pay tribute to the efficient services rendered by the Secretary-General of the Conference, M. Madariaga, and by the other members of the Secretariat General of the Conference.

Respectfully submitted.

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 14th instant that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 2347) to amend the Inland Waterways Corporation Act, approved June 3, 1924, as amended.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WALSH:

A bill (S. 3796) to increase the efficiency of the United States Navy, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. DAVIS (for Mr. REED):

A bill (S. 3797) to admit to the United States, and to extend naturalization privileges to, certain alien veterans of the World War; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 3798) to provide for the taking over by the Government of the out-standing capital stock of all Federal Reserve banks; to substitute United States Treasury notes for outstanding gold certificates, silver certificates, Treasury notes of 1890, Federal Reserve notes, Federal Reserve bank notes, national currency, and national bank notes; and to regulate the value of money in pursuance of article I, section 8, paragraph 5, of the Constitution of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. GORE introduced a joint resolution (S.J.Res. 142) amending subsection (b) of section 19 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That subsection (b) of section 19 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, approved May 12, 1933 (title I, Public, No. 10, 73d Cong.), is amended by adding the words at the end of said subsection, as follows: "And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized to permit postponement, for an additional period of not exceeding 90 days, of the payment of taxes covered by any return under this title of processors of hogs whose average slaughter during the calendar year 1933 did not exceed 5,000 hogs per month."

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES-THE LIQUOR QUESTION

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask permission, out of order, to introduce a joint resolution and have it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution (S.J.Res. 144) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the liquor traffic, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by conventions in three-fourths of the several States:

" ARTICLE -

"Section 1. Congress shall have power in its discretion to en-act uniform laws restricting or prohibiting the traffic in alcoholic beverages in the United States and in all territory subject to its jurisdiction.

jurisdiction.

"Sec. 2. The following powers are reserved to the several States: To impose restrictions on the traffic in alcoholic beverages in aid of those enacted by Congress; to prohibit the traffic in such beverages irrespective of legislation by Congress; or in the absence of legislation by Congress, plenary power to prohibit or regulate the traffic in such beverages within their respective areas.

"Sec. 3. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of alcoholic beverages in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

"Sec. 4. The twenty-first article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"Sec. 5. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within 7 years from the date of submission thereof to the States by the Congress."

REASONS FOR THE PROPOSAL.

REASONS FOR THE PROPOSAL

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the 6 months which have passed since the repeal of the eighteenth amendment have shown beyond question that the liquor problem is a national one requiring the cooperation of the Federal and State Governments for its most effective solution. Mr. Choate, Director of the Federal Alcohol Control Administration, has declared that we are "living in a fool's paradise" so far as the liquor question is concerned. Arrests for public intoxication and traffic accidents attributable to drinking have rapidly increased. Many of the States have not barred the saloon, as was promised when repeal was proposed. Bootlegging has not been reduced. The Federal Government has been compelled to increase the appropriation for its sup-

The proposed amendment provides greater flexibility than was afforded by the eighteenth amendment, since it provides that Congress shall have power to restrict or prohibit the traffic in alcoholic beverages in its discretion. Under this grant of power Congress could establish a uniform plan of regulation effective in all States desiring to sanction liquor sales; it could enact national prohibition applicable to the entire country; or it could refuse to pass any legislation at all, in which event the States would be free to adopt any system of prohibition or regulation they saw fit, as at present.

Any State desiring to adopt or retain prohibition could do so, or it could enact legislation in aid of the plan of regulation provided by Congress. It could not, however, adopt any system of license or regulation in conflict with that provided by Congress, should Congress enact a law for that purpose. The existence of such power in the Federal Government would make it possible for Congress to regulate the liquor traffic wherever legalized, to bar the return of the saloon, and to establish any method of control or regulation experience may show to be the best and public sentiment to demand.

EFFECT UPON ENFORCEMENT

Should Congress not enact any legislation under this proposal, the mere possibility that it might do so would tend to induce the States to better enforce their own regulations. Under this amendment the Federal Government could do away with the incongruous and conflicting regulations now possible with 48 varieties of State legislation. It would at the same time enable those States and communities which desire to retain prohibition to do so or to enact additional safeguards to any plan of regulation enacted by Congress.

OFFERS A COMMON GROUND

It offers a common ground on which wets and drys may meet to formulate and try out constructive solutions of the liquor problem. Personally, I believe that the eighteenth amendment provided the best settlement. Recognizing, however, the difficulties surrounding readoption of that amendment in anything like the near future, realizing the frightful toll the liquor traffic is taking from humanity under existing conditions and its continued defiance of the law, I deem it my duty to present what I believe to be a method by which the American people may meet the situation in a far more satisfactory way than is possible at present. That method is offered at this time in order that it may be in shape for discussion and action in connection with the com-

This resolution repeals the present twenty-first amendment but retains the second section of that amendment providing protection to States desiring to remain dry from importation for personal use under the commerce clause. If passed, it would require ratification by conventions within 7 years.

PUERTO RICAN IMPORT DUTY ON COFFEE

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the War Department has just sent to me as Chairman of the Senate Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs a communication transmitting a letter from the Governor of Puerto Rico setting forth that the courts of Puerto Rico have held one of the laws dealing with the processing taxes to be unconstitutional. They have asked that the breach be corrected by the passage of a bill because the taxes have actually been collected. I ask that the communications from the War Department and the Governor of Puerto Rico be printed in the RECORD so that Senators may, even in the closing days, understand why speed is necessary in dealing with this matter.

There being no objection, the communications were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, June 15, 1934.

Hon. Millard E. Tydings, Chairman Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs,

United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I am enclosing herewith a copy of a self-explanatory letter received from the Governor of Puerto Rico, with its enclosure consisting of a proposed draft of a bill to-ratify joint resolution no. 59 of the Puerto Rican Legislature, approved May 5, 1930.

It is requested that you introduce the enclosed bill in the Congress with a view to securing its enactment at the present session. The Governor points out that the proposed legislation is of an emergency nature and that it is necessary for the protection of the administration's program of rehabilitation as regards the coffee industry of Puerto Rico. I urgently recommend its enactment at the present session. Sincerely yours,

HENRY H. WOODRING, Acting Secretary of War.

JUNE 15, 1934.

Hon. George H. Dern,

Secretary of War, Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. Secretary: I am enclosing herewith a draft of a bill to ratify Joint Resolution No. 59 of the Puerto Rican Legislature, approved May 5, 1930, imposing a 10-cent import duty on coffee imported into Puerto Rico. The enactment of this bill at the present session of Congress as an emergency matter is necessary to protect a vital portion of the administration's program for the rehabilitation of Puerto Rican industries.

rehabilitation of Puerto Rican industries.

The coffee industry is one of the basic industries of Puerto Rico. The 10-cent tax levied by the joint resolution of 1930, which has heretofore been regularly collected, is necessary to protect the industry, particularly during the present period of recovery from the effects of the hurricane. The levy of the tax is in accord with the intention of Congress as evidenced by the enactment of section 319 of the Tariff Act of 1930, enacted June 15 of that year, which specifically authorized the Legislature of Puerto Rico to impose tariff duties upon coffee imported into Puerto Rico, including coffee grown in a foreign country and imported into Puerto Rico from the United States.

Unfortunately the Puerto Rican act—Joint Resolution No. 59 was enacted and approved by the Governor on May 5, 1930, a month and 12 days before the approval of the act of Congress and consequently the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals has now held, in a decision handed down within the past few days (June 12, 1934), that the act of the Puerto Rican Legislature is invalid and void because at the time it was passed Congress had cays (June 12, 1934), that the act of the Puerto Rican Legislature is invalid and void because at the time it was passed Congress had not yet given that legislature the power to enact such legislation. Therefore it is necessary to have the Puerto Rican act ratified. The bill herewith submitted is drawn to follow substantially the language used in the act of Congress of June 5, 1920 (c. 253, 41 Stat. 1025), ratifying an export tax theretofore attempted to be imposed by the Philippine Legislature. That ratifying act was upheld by the United States Supreme Court in the case of Rafferty v. Smith, Ball & Co. (257 U.S. 226, 232).

The vital necessity for this legislation at the present term of the Congress arises especially from the fact that cooperatives have been formed of the coffee raisers through the Farm Credit Administration for the purpose of extending to them the aid necessary to preserve the industry. This could not be extended if the cheap coffee from Brazil were thrown into the country, thus reducing the price of the Puerto Rican product to a point where little of that could be sold except at the depreciated value on which the Farm Credit Administration would not be willing to extend the loan.

I urgently request that you transmit this to the chairmen of the appropriate committees of Congress, with the request that the enactment of this legislation be secured at the present session. Sincerely yours,

Sincerely yours,

BLANTON WINSHIP Governor of Puerto Rico.

Mr. TYDINGS introduced a bill (S. 3799) for an act to ratify Joint Resolution No. 59 of the Legislature of Puerto Rico, approved by the Governor May 5, 1930, imposing an import duty on coffee imported into Puerto Rico, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

AMENDMENT OF EMERGENCY FARM MORTGAGE ACT-AMENDMENT

Mr. BORAH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 142) amending subsection (b) of section 19 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF THE BANKING ACT-

Mr. KEAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3748) to amend certain sections of the Banking Act of 1933 and the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

FINANCING OF HOME CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR-AMENDMENT

Mr. KEAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3794) to encourage improvement in housing standards and conditions, to provide a system of mutual mortgage insurance, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

INVESTIGATION OF LOAN ACTIVITIES OF FEDERAL LAND BANK, ST. LOUIS, MO.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas submitted the following resolution (S.Res. 272), which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Resolved, That a special committee of three Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, is authorized and directed to investigate the loan activities of the Federal Land Bank of St. Louis, Mo., with a view to determining whether such land bank, in granting loans, has unjustly discriminated against persons States areas or communities.

bank, in granting loans, has unjustly discriminated against persons, States, areas, or communities.

For the purpose of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-third Congress and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

The committee shall report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations.

Mr. FLETCHER, subsequently, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which the foregoing resolution was referred, reported it without amendment and moved that it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, which motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL CLERICAL ASSISTANCE TO SENATORS

Mr. CLARK submitted the following resolution (S.Res. 273), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That whenever, during the recess of the present Congress, a Senator shall file with the Chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate a statement showing the necessity for an additional clerical assistant to enable him to discharge the duties of his office in the District of Columbia, such Senator may appoint one assistant clerk to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at $1,800 per annum until the Seventy-fourth Congress is convened.

INVESTIGATION OF FEDERAL LAND BANKS AND REGIONAL AGRICUL-TURAL CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. CUTTING and Mr. HATCH submitted the following resolution (S.Res. 274), which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Resolved, That the Senate hereby authorizes and appoints the regular Agricultural and Forestry Committee of the Senate to be designated as a special committee for the purpose of making full and complete investigations of the business, operations, and affairs of the various Federal land banks of the United States for the period beginning March 4, 1923, and a complete and full investigation of the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation since its incention; but it further.

inception; be it further

Resolved, That said committee shall report to the Senate not later than the 5th day of January 1935 the result of its investigation, together with such recommendations as it deems advisable; and be it further

Resolved, That the said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the Senate is sitting, has recessed, United States, whether or not the Senate is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman and shall be served by any person designated by him. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee, or subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared refused to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; be it further and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental general and emergency appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1934, and June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

Mr. ADAMS obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, as this is an important bill, I think we should have a quorum present, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Hebert	Pope
Ashurst	Couzens	Johnson	Reynolds
Austin	Cutting	Kean	Robinson, Ark.
Bachman	Davis	King	Robinson, Ind.
Bailey	Dickinson	La Follette	Russell
Bankhead	Dieterich	Lewis	Schall
Barbour	Dill	Logan	Sheppard
Barkley	Duffy	Lonergan	Shipstead
Black	Erickson	Long	Smith
Bone	Fess	McCarran	Steiwer
Borah	Fletcher	McGill	Stephens
Brown	Frazier	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	George	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Gibson	Metcalf	Thompson
Byrd	Glass	Murphy	Townsend
Byrnes	Goldsborough	Neely	Tydings
Capper	Gore	Norbeck	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hale	Norris	Wagner
Carey	Harrison	Nye	Walcott
Clark	Hastings	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Connally	Hatch	Overton	Wheeler
Coolidge	Hatfield	Patterson	White
Copeland	Hayden	Pittman

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, respecting House bill 9830, the deficiency appropriation bill, in accordance with the request of the Department of Justice, I now offer certain amendments prepared by that Department. After investigation, I opine that I should move to suspend the rule. Therefore I ask that the clerk read at the desk the notice of a motion to suspend the rule; and I inquire if the amendments should be read at this time or will their presentation now with the notice be sufficient?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate can waive the reading of the amendments if it desires to do so.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that that be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona asks unanimous consent that the reading of the amendments, as to which he gives notice of a proposal to suspend the rules be waived. Is there objection?

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that the notice be read.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, would not it be better if the Senator should ask unanimous consent to waive the rule and then offer the amendments at the proper point in the consideration of the bill?

Mr. ASHURST. Diligence requires me to present them at the earliest moment, and, if the Senator will permit, I ask that the notice be read.

Mr. McNARY. That is so, too; but I feel that my suggestion would expedite the matter much quicker than the Senator's, but he may go ahead.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the notice. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND THE BULES

Pursuant to the provisions of rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Scales; be it further

**Resolved**, That the committee appointed by this resolution is hereby authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate $25,000 for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the investigation provided for in this resolution.

**Deficiency Appropriations**

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 9830) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1934, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental general and emergency appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1934, and June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, the following amendments:

On page 35, after line 2, insert the following:

"Salaries, Department of Justice: For an additional amount for salaries, Department of Justice, including the same objects specified under this head in the Department of Justice Appropriation Act, 1935, $335,860: *Provided**, That of this amount $245,460 shall be available only for transfer in addition to transfers authorized Pursuant to the provisions of rule XL of the Standing Rules of by existing law to any other appropriation or appropriations under the Department of Justice not to exceed 25 percent of the appropriation to which transfer is made, when approved by the Director of the Budget."

On page 35, after line 21, insert the following:

"For an additional amount for traveling and miscellaneous expenses, Department of Justice, including the same objects specified under this head in the Department of Justice Appropriation Act. 1935. $25,000."

On page 36, after line 10, insert the following:

"DIVISION OF INVESTIGATION

"For an additional amount for salaries and expenses, Division of Investigation, for the detection and prosecution of crimes, including the same objects specified under this head in the Department of Justice Appropriation Act, 1935, and including also the purchase at not to exceed $7,000 each, exchange, maintenance, upkeep, and operation of armored automobiles; purchase, nance, tupkeep, and operation of armored automobiles, purchase, exchange, maintenance, and upkeep of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, to be used only on official business; and not to exceed $91,190 for personal services in the District of Columbia; to be immediately available, $1,896,990.

"DIVISION OF ACCOUNTS

"Salaries and expenses, Division of Accounts: For an additional amount for personal services and expenses of the Division of Accounts in the District of Columbia, fiscal year 1935, $22,570.

"ENFORCEMENT OF ANTITRUST AND KINDRED LAWS

"For an additional amount for enforcement of antitrust and "For an additional amount for enforcement of antitrust and kindred laws, including the same objects specified under this head in the Department of Justice Appropriation Act, 1935, and including also additional personal services in the District of Columbia, to be immediately available, $140,800."

"United States penitentiary, McNeil Island, Washington: The amount which may be expended for salaries and wages of all officers and employees from the appropriation 'United States penitentiary, McNeil Island, Wash., maintenance, 1935', is increased from $173,190 to $189,190."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senate consent to waive the reading of the amendments?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think, in fairness to the Senate, if the Senate is going to be expected to consider the amendments, they should be read. I have no knowledge of

Mr. ASHURST. The amendments came to me from the Department of Justice. It will be remembered that, through the able efforts of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], a number of so-called "antigangster" bills were introduced and are now laws. I myself had the honor of introducing a number of those bills. Most of them have become laws. The Senate Committee on the Judiciary reported all these bills favorably, and I now take occasion to thank the members of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary for the able support they gave these bills, but it would be useless and ridiculous; it would be what the lawyers call a brutum fulmen, a harmless thunderbolt, to pass these bills and then refuse to give the Department the appropriations to carry out, implement, and effectuate their purposes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator again?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Are these amendments which the Senator proposes subject to a point of order?

Mr. ASHURST. I doubt if they would be subject to a point of order, because the Bureau of the Budget has sent, so I am advised, its approval of the amendments, but, out of abundant caution-because there is no use to be softmouthed about it-I do not want to be placed into a position where it may be said, "You should have submitted a motion to suspend the rules." The able Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar], a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I am advised, is against these amendments. He is present and can state whether he is against the amendments or not.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. KING. As I understand, these amendments are for the purpose of giving larger appropriations to the Department of Justice?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. Notwithstanding the fact that in the appropriation bill passed some time ago there was a very large appropriation for the Department of Justice, including a very considerable appropriation for the law-enforcing agencies which are under the control of that Department.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona that the reading of the amendments be waived?

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to waiving the reading since the Senator from Arizona has made the explanation.

Mr. ASHURST. It may be that I have done the distinguished Senator from Tennessee an injustice.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not desire to do so, but I was informed that he was opposed to these amendments, and that is what has driven me to offer the notice of motion to sus-

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, these amendments were presented to the committee. They provide for a deficiency 15 days before the new fiscal year begins. The Congress of the United States has already appropriated for the Department of Justice, and here is a deficiency being asked for in advance. We are asked for an additional appropriation. My recollection is that the combined amount is some $3,000,-000, which is out of all proportion to the work provided for in the bills which have been passed in relation to the suppression of crime.

My judgment is that if there are some amounts which should be added it might be well to add them, but to propose this enormous amount to be handed over to the Department of Justice at this time, it seems to me, is very unwise.

Mr. VANDENBERG subsequently said: Mr. President, while discussion of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] may not be germane to the immediate debate, I do not want the comment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] to pass at the moment without prompt challenge, lest it affect the ultimate consideration of the amendment.

I know of no finer service being rendered at the present time in the United States than by the law enforcement agencies of the Department of Justice under the very able direction of the Assistant Attorney General, Joseph B. Keenan. I think the work being done in that Department in cooperation with legal authorities in the assault upon crime is a major contribution to the social stability of the United States. When the Senator from Tennessee refers to $3,000,000 as an "enormous sum", as related to the far greater enormity of the crime problem in the United States, I think his relationships are somewhat distorted.

I am perfectly sure, knowing the Senator from Tennessee as I do, that when the facts are presented, as they will be presented, he will readily yield to the importance of implementing the Department of Justice to do its full job in respect to the crime situation in the United States.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Arizona that he permit the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Adams] to proceed at this time with the committee amendments?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona ask unanimous consent for the waiving of the reading of the amendments at this time?

Mr. ASHURST. I make that request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, committee amendments to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I desire to inquire as to the method of procedure. As I understand, the able Senator from Arizona is about to present an amendment to the pending deficiency bill.

Mr. ASHURST. That is correct. Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator has obtained unanimous consent that his motion to suspend the rules need not be read.

Mr. ASHURST. I obtained unanimous consent that the amendments need not be read at this time, but the notice of intention to suspend the rule has been read.

Mr. JOHNSON. I want to understand the method of procedure. Here is a bill which is an appropriation bill, but which contains as well legislative provisions. Am I not

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if the Senator is directing his question to me, I will state that I do not know of any legislative provision reported; but I will also say that I have no doubt about the amendments offered by the Senator from Arizona being in order.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am inquiring because there may be other amendments to be offered. If it is possible to have a determination of whether or not the amendments may be offered, in view of the fact that the door has been opened thus far to legislative amendments, I want to obtain it.

I recall some years ago when Vice President Marshall was in the chair-I may be in error in this and so I state it tentatively-he ruled, when an appropriation bill came to us wherein already there were legislative provisions, that the door had been opened and, the door having been opened, all of us could enter. That is exactly the situation which I want to see if we can settle now, in order that, if we have amendments legislative in character, we may not be put to the necessity and to the difficulty of presenting a motion to suspend the rule.

Mr. BYRNES. Let me say to the Senator from California that I do not know of any legislative provision which has been added to the bill by the Senate committee. The amendments referred to by the Senator from Arizona are on an entirely different footing. They have been estimated for by the Director of the Budget, they are authorized, and I know of no point of order which could be successfully made against the amendments offered by him.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the question propounded by the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson] is an important one. I understand the Senator from California has quoted tentatively the decision of Vice President Marshall. I was present when that decision was made. I, like the Senator from California, am speaking from recollection and I may be wrong. My impression is that the very fact that an appropriation bill has legislative provisions in it does not give carte blanche to offer legislative amendments; but a legislative provision already in the bill is subject to a legislative amendment if it is material to that part of the bill. It does not mean that any amendment could be offered to the appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the philosophy of the rule and has examined the precedent to which the Senator from California referred. The rules of the House and of the Senate provide that a legislative provision may not be added as an amendment to an appropriation bill. Sometimes in the House a special rule is brought in and legislation is placed on an appropriation bill. When such a bill comes to the Senate and the Senate has it under consideration and reaches the legislative provision. any amendment germane to that legislative provision is in order; but unless it is germane it is not in order. That is the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand the Chair, it is in order notwithstanding the fact that it may be a legislative provision.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct, provided it is germane.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, may I ask who decides the question of germaneness, the Chair or the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ordinarily, the Chair may decide a point of order or he may submit it to the Senate. Every ruling of the Chair is subject to supervision of the Senate. However, paragraph 4 of rule XVI provides that if the question of germaneness of an amendment is raised, it must be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate. The present occupant of the chair is willing to take his responsibility, but the rule expressly provides that the Senate shall pass upon the matter of germaneness in the first instance.

The clerk will state the first amendment to the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Title I-General appropriations, legislative establishment", on page 2, after line 2, to insert:

SENATE To pay to Eula W. Kendrick, widow of Hon. John B. Kendrick, late a Senator from the State of Wyoming, $8,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 6, to

To pay to Augusta M. Dale, widow of Hon. Porter H. Dale, late a Senator from the State of Vermont, $8,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill on the calendar to which the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] objected yesterday, but to which no one now has any objections. I have seen the Senator from West Virginia this morning, and he has authorized me to state that he has no objection. I refer to Order of Business 1191, House bill 5736, an act for the relief of Shelby J. Beene, Mrs. Shelby J. Beene, Leroy T. Waller, and Mrs. Leroy T. Waller.

I ask unanimous consent that that bill may be taken up and disposed of at this time without displacing the business before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In order to consider the bill referred to by the Senator from Louisiana, it will be necessary to lay aside temporarily the bill before the Senate.

Mr. LONG. Not by unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In order to transact business in the Senate where a pending measure is under consideration, it must be temporarily laid aside, or it will be displaced by whatever other business is taken up.

Mr. LONG. I do not think it will be necessary by unanimous consent. There will be no objection to the bill just being passed out of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is telling the Senator what the rules of the Senate are as he interprets them. The rule of the Senate is that where a measure is pending before the Senate, and it is not temporarily laid aside, it is displaced when other business is taken up, whether by unanimous consent or by vote of the Senate.

If the Senator from Louisiana desires to ask unanimous consent to lay aside temporarily the business before the Senate in order to consider another bill, the Chair will put the question.

Mr. LONG. If the Senator from Colorado would not object-

Mr. ADAMS. I wish the Senator from Louisiana would allow us to go ahead with the appropriation bill unless there is some great emergency. Certainly there is no great emergency in this case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard. The clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, after line 9, to insert:

For expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, including compensation to stenographers of committees, at such rate as may be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but not exceeding 25 cents per 100 words, fiscal year 1935, $100,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for services, personal, professional, or otherwise, in excess of the rate of $3,600 per annum: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for per diem and subsistence expenses except in accordance with the provisions of the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926, approved June 3, 1926, as amended.

Printing and binding: For an additional amount for printing and binding, including the same objects specified under this head in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1935, $34,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General Accounting Office", on page 14, line 22, after the figures "$1,000,000", to strike out the colon and the proviso "Provided, That persons employed hereunder may be appointed for temporary service without regard to civil-service rules and regulations", so as to make the paragraph read:

To enable the General Accounting Office to employ personnel To enable the General Accounting Office to employ personnel to examine and settle claims and to audit and settle the accounts of receipts and expenditures of governmental agencies, including governmental corporations created after March 3, 1933, and to make current the audit of Postal Money Order and Postal Savings Accounts, including rent in the District of Columbia, printing and binding, office equipment and supplies, traveling expenses and other necessary contingent and miscellaneous expenses, fiscal warrs 1934 and 1935 $1,000.000 years 1934 and 1935, $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 15, to insert:

NATIONAL ARCHIVES

For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to establish a National Archives of the United States Government, and for other purposes", approved June —, 1934, fiscal year 1935, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 5, to insert:

SECURITIES EXCHANGE COMMISSION

For the purpose of administering the provisions of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and the Securities Act of 1933 (including, among other things, expenditures for personal services and rent at the seat of government and elsewhere, for law books and books of reference, newspapers and periodicals, and for paper, printing, and binding), fiscal year 1935, $300,000.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] concerning the appropriation on page 15, line 13, of $300,000 for the Securities Exchange Commission. May I ask the Senator whether $300,000 is the amount estimated?

Mr. ADAMS. That is the amount estimated by the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In view of the work the Commission will be called upon to do, and considering the expenditures of other commissions which have less responsibility con-

The next amendment was, under the heading, "Inde- | ferred upon them, it seems to me that this is a very small appropriation.

> Mr. ADAMS. That may be true: but, as the Senator knows, we are restricted to the estimate which came from the Bureau of the Budget, namely, to $300,000,

> Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator from Colorado is a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency and is very familiar with the details of the act which was passed. Perhaps he has some opinion as to whether or not this is an adequate amount; but it seems to me it would be a great mistake to have passed a very important piece of legislation, such as the Securities Exchange Act, and then not to provide a sufficient amount for its administration.

> I desire to say further that the members of this Commission not yet having been appointed, of course, there is no one to defend it and to lay its problems before the Bureau of the Budget. It is in a different position than an existing commission which has an opportunity to present its case to the Bureau.

> Mr. ADAMS. The Senator will realize that this appropriation merely goes to the first of the year; and it was deemed by the Director of the Budget, and also by the committee upon consideration, that that amount would enable the Commission to get into operation.

> Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Surely.

Mr. BYRNES. In addition to the money appropriated in this deficiency bill, the Securities Act authorizes the President to transfer unexpended funds now in the hands of the Federal Trade Commission for the enforcement of the 1933 act.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Can the Senator tell me how much that is?

Mr. BYRNES. No, I cannot; but I know that this amount will certainly be adequate, together with the funds the President can transfer from the Federal Trade Commission, to permit this organization to continue into the next Congress, when they will have an opportunity to come to the Congress and advise us of the scope of the organization and of the necessities.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is my understanding that there was not a very large unexpended balance, but I have not definite information to that effect. That is the reason why I asked the Senator whether or not he had such information.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I remember that in one of the bills passed at this session we appropriated, as I recall, $350,000 additional to the Federal Trade Commission by reason of the enforcement of that act.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Was that at this session?

Mr. BYRNES. At this session of Congress. I am interested in the enforcement of this act.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I know the Senator is.

Mr. BYRNES. And I have not the slightest doubt that this amount, together with the amount which is available for transfer, is ample to carry the organization until such time as they can determine what their needs are, and then we can intelligently provide those needs.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that, in my opinion, there would have to be a very substantial balance remaining to the credit of the Federal Trade Commission for the enforcement of the Securities Act in order to supplement $300,000 to the point where it would provide a sufficient fund to make the activities of this Commission effective.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is my understanding that about $500,000 is available for transfer from the Federal Trade Commission to the new Securities Exchange Commission. Was that the question of the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Those who are best informed about the probable activities of the new Commission are of the opinion that not less than one and a half million dollars in excess of what is being here authorized should be appropriated, in addition to the funds being transferred from the Federal Trade Commission to the new Commission; or rather, that a total of one and a half million dollars in addition to the $500,000 would be a modest estimate for the budget of the new Commission for the first fiscal year.

In reaching that estimate comparison has been made in round numbers of the annual appropriations for the Federal Radio Commission, $666,835; the Federal Trade Commission. $1,242,730; the Interstate Commerce Commission, $5,430,970; the Tariff Commission, $840,898; the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection, $1,337,752; the Bureau of Fisheries, $1,252,556; the Bureau of Mines, $1,197,926; and the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, $2,198,838.

At this time, so far as I heard his remarks, which, however, was only in part, I desire to record my judgment in support of what has been said by the Senator from Wisconsin on the basis of these figures, and in view of estimates which have been made to me by those who are presumed to be the best qualified to speak.

Mr. ADAMS. Are the Senator's figures based on an annual basis or a semiannual basis?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is my understanding that they are based on an annual calculation.

Mr. ADAMS. Then $800,000 is now available, according to the Senator's statement, until the first of the year, which is 6 months, which would be at the rate of $1,600,000.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In other words, the Senator's view is that we shall have $800,000 available between now and the time Congress next meets?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; according to the Senator's figures.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If we are making the appropriation for 6 months only, probably the Senator's conclusion, though less than the moderate calculation I presented, has some warrant.

Mr. ADAMS. That is all the appropriation is for.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is my understanding, however, as the title of the bill in a measure indicates, that we were dealing with an appropriation for the next fiscal year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "District of Columbia", on page 16, after line 4, to insert:

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION

Salaries: For an additional amount for salaries, Public Utilities Commission, including the same objects specified under this head in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1935, $36,823.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 9, to

ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE CONTROL BOARD

For an additional amount for the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, including the same objects specified under this head in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1935, $18,408.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Contingent and Miscellaneous Expenses", on page 16, line 20, after the figures "1933", to strike out "$1,193" and insert "$1,583"; so as to read:

Judicial expenses: For an additional amount for judicial expenses, including witness fees, and expert services in District cases before the Supreme Court of said District, for the fiscal years that follow:

For 1933, $1,583; For 1934, $574.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Settlement of Claims", on page 21, line 14, after the word "in" to insert "Senate Document No. 184 and ", and in line 16, after the name "Congress" to strike out "$46,346.87" and insert "$47,585.32"; so as to read:

For the payment of claims approved by the Commissioners under and in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to settle claims and suits against the District of Columbia to settle claims and suits against the District of Columbia", approved February 11, 1929 (45 Stat. 1160), as amended by the act approved June 5, 1930 (46 Stat. 500), and reported in Senate Document No. 184 and House Documents Nos. 329 and 366, Seventy-third Congress, $47,585.32.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Forest Service", on page 26, line 18, after the figures "1935" to strike out "$152,000" and insert "$225,000"; so as to read:

Forest-fire cooperation: For an additional amount for cooperation with the various States or other appropriate agencies in forest-fire prevention and suppression, including the same objects specified under this head in the Agricultural Department Appropriation Act of 1935, $225,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 28, to insert:

BUREAU OF PUBLIC ROADS

For the construction of roads within the grounds of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Foundation at Monticello, near Charlottesville, Va., fiscal year 1935, $30,000.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, referring to the first amendment on line 28, I desire to suggest that I think this is a very doubtful policy, but I shall not make the point of order against the legislation.

This amendment provides for the construction out of public funds of a public highway on property which does not belong to the United States. I think we are entering here upon a dangerous policy, and one under which we ought to proceed with caution. I do not think I shall make the point of order, however.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, in a general way I have the same general conviction suggested by the Senator from Iowa; but in this particular case, while it might serve as a precedent, and I should be very regretful if it should, I think the item is a most worthy one.

There has been, as the Presiding Officer knows and every Senator knows, a very abiding desire to see Monticello completely restored. The work which has been done under the board of governors is very outstanding, and all of that work has been done thus far without the slightest expenditure on the part of the Government. I had hoped that the Government would take steps to complete the restoration, so that the Federal Government might have a part in this particular project.

Those who are familiar with this famous home will recall that it is located on an elevation of about 600 yards above the surrounding country, and is approached by a winding roadway, almost 2 miles long, through the woods. It is that piece of road proposed to be improved through the appropriation in this amendment, and it is such a national monument, with such national significance, and all thus far having been done without the slightest expenditure on the part of the Government, that I do not think anybody would object to this expenditure being made, although it ought not to be used as a precedent.

I should like to see an appropriation of something like $100,000 to build the north wing, the group of houses which as yet have not been restored. The south wing has been completely restored, the part next to the famous garden laid out by Thomas Jefferson himself. Everything has been preserved in the finest possible shape except the one group of houses in the north wing, and if it had not been for the depression I had intended to introduce a bill to have the Federal Government make a contribution toward the completion of this great monument.

While I join the Senator from Iowa in suggesting caution against inaugurating any such movement as this, in this particular case I think it is very worth while, because without doubt this is the most outstanding mansion in connection with any great American that we have, either in Virginia or in any other State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of Commerce", on page 28, after line 5, to insert:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

Contingent expenses, Department of Commerce: For an additional amount for the same objects specified under this head in the Department of Commerce Appropriation Act, 1935, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 15, to insert:

BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE

Investigation of foreign-trade restrictions: For an additional amount for salaries and expenses, including the same objects specified under this head in the Department of Commerce Appropriation Act, 1935, $45,210, of which amount not to exceed $44,712 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 22, to insert:

Customs statistics: For an additional amount for salaries and expenses, including the same objects specified under this head in the Department of Commerce Appropriation Act, 1935, $11,580.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 2, to insert:

Allowance for quarters, Foreign Commerce Service: For an additional amount for the same purposes specified under this head in the Department of Commerce Appropriation Act, 1935, $57,060.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 12, to insert:

EUREAU OF FISHERIES

Propagation of food fishes: For an additional amount for the same objects specified under this head in the Department of Commerce Appropriation Act, 1935, to be expended in the Columbia River Basin, $9,650.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 17, to insert:

Inquiry respecting food fishes: For an additional amount for the same objects specified under this head in the Department of Commerce Appropriation Act, 1935, to be expended in the Columbia River Basin, of which amount not to exceed $11,615 may be expended for salaries of permanent employees, $24,140.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of the Interior", on page 30, after line 1, to insert:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

Division of Investigations: Not to exceed $10,000 of the appropriation "Salaries and expenses, Division of Investigations, Department of the Interior, 1935", shall be available to meet unforeseen emergencies of a confidential character, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall make a certificate of the amount of such expenditure as he may think it advisable not to specify, and every such certificate shall be deemed a sufficient voucher for the sum therein expressed to have been expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Reclamation Service", on page 32, after line 13, to insert:

Sale of unproductive lands: For the appraisal and sale of vacant public lands within Federal irrigation projects designated under the act of May 25, 1926 (44 Stat. 636), as temporarily unproductive or permanently unproductive in accordance with the provisions of the act of May 16, 1930 (46 Stat. 367), fiscal years 1934 and 1935, $5,000 payable from the reclamation fund: Provided, That expenditures from this appropriation shall be reimbursable from the sales revenues, and that the Commissioner of Reclamation shall have charge of and attend to the appraisal and sale of such lands, and the fiscal agents of the Bureau of Reclamation shall be accountable under their official bonds for the proceeds of such sales.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 19, to insert:

OFFICE OF EDUCATION

Federal Board for Vocational Education: Further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories: For carrying out the provisions of section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories", approved May 21, 1934 (Public, No. 245, 73d Cong.), fiscal year 1935, $3,084,603;

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, it is desired that the committee amendment in lines 21 and 23 on page 33 be amended by striking out surplus language as follows: "Further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories", that language being a duplication.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Colorado what is to be the effect of the amendment? Will it reduce the vocational work?

Mr. ADAMS. It simply is to strike out surplus language, which is a duplication.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I wanted to ask the Senator about the amendment at the bottom of page 32. Does that have anything to do with the marginal lands about which we have been talking?

Mr. ADAMS. Not a thing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. King in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado to the committee amendment on page 33.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 4, to insert:

Salaries and expenses, further development of vocational education: Salaries and expenses: For carrying out the provisions of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories", approved May 21, 1934 (Public, No. 245, 73d Cong.), fiscal year 1935, $60,000.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I offer a similar amendment to the committee amendment on page 34, lines 5 and 6, to strike out the following surplus language, "salaries and expenses, further development of vocational education."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of Justice", on page 35, after line 1, to insert:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Payment of rewards: For payment of rewards for the capture of anyone charged with violation of criminal laws of the United States or any State or the District of Columbia and/or for information leading to the arrest of any such person, as authorized by the act approved June 6, 1934, fiscal year 1935, to be immediately available, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 18, to insert:

For an additional amount for printing and binding for the Department of Justice and the courts of the United States, fiscal year 1932, $293.74.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 21, to

For rent of buildings and parts of buildings in the District of Columbia, fiscal year 1935, $36,683.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "United States Supreme Court", on page 36, line 19, after the word "service" to strike out "$28,700" and insert "$25,830", and, in line 24, after the words "in all" to strike out "$43,700" and insert "$40,830"; so as to read:

United States Supreme Court Building and Grounds: For custody and maintenance for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, as authorized by the act entitled "An act to provide for the custody and maintenance of the United States Supreme Court Building and the equipment and grounds thereof", approved May 7, 1934, as follows:

Domestic care under the marshal: For personal services, exclusive of any librarian service, $25,830; for supplies and materials, uniforms and equipment for employees, telegraph and telephone, advertising, transportation, repairs, and such other miscellaneous and incidental expenses as may be necessary to the duties imposed upon the marshal by such act, $15,000; in all, $40,830.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to recur to the amendment on page 32 and ask the Senator from Colorado the meaning of the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I must be frank with the Senator. I will have to ask some other member of the committee to make the explanation.

Mr. BORAH. I will let it be passed over for the present. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to have the vote by which the amendment was agreed to reconsidered?

Mr. BORAH. I shall not ask now that it be reconsidered. I simply desire to have an explanation. If I do not get the explanation, I may ask for a reconsideration later. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Marshals, district attorneys, clerks, and other expenses of United States courts", on page 37, line 22, after the figures "1930", to strike out "$4,037.45" and insert "$4,105.75"; in line 23, after the figures "1931", to strike out "$6,977.37" and insert "$7,065.37"; and in line 24, after the figures "1932", to strike out "$13,937.92" and insert "$14,258.52", so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 2, to Permanent Association of International Road Congresses: Not to exceed $3,500 of the appropriation "Cooperative construction of rural post roads, administrative expenses", Department of Agriculture, is made available to pay the quotas of the United States in the Permanent Association of International Road Congresses, as authorized by the public resolution approved June 18, 1926 (U.S.C., Supp. VII, title 22, sec. 269), for the calendar years 1932, 1933, and 1934.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 11, to insert:

Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany: For expenses of determining the amounts of claims against Germany by the Mixed Claims Commission established under the agreement concluded between the United States and Germany on August 10, 1922, and subsequent agreement between those Governments, for the determination of the amount to be paid by Germany in satisfaction of the financial obligations of Germany under the treaty concluded between the Governments of the United States and Germany on August 25, 1921, including the expenses which under the terms of such agreement of August 10, 1922, are chargeable in part to the United States, and the preparation of a final report by the American Commissioner and the orderly arrangement for preservation and disposition of the records of the Commission; and the expenses of an agency of the United States to perform all necessary services in connection with the preparation of claims and the presentation thereof before said Mixed Claims Commission, and the preparation of a final report of the agent and the orderly arrangement for preservation of the records of the agency and the disposition of property jointly owned by the two Governments, including salaries of an agent and necessary counsel and other assistants and employees, rent in the District of Columbia, employment of special counsel, translators, and other technical experts, by contract, without regard to the provisions of any statute relative to employment, and for contract stenographic reporting services without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 41, sec. 5), law books and books of reference, printing and binding, contingent expenses, traveling expenses, press-clipping service, for all necessary and appropriate expenses in connection with proceedings under the act entitled "An Act to amend the Act approved July 3, 1930 (46 Stat., 1005), authorizing Commissioners or members of international tribunals to administer expenses of determining the amounts of claims against Germany by the Mixed Claims Commission established under the agreeoaths, and so forth", approved June 7, 1933, including stenographic transcripts of the testimony of witnesses, and such other expenses in the United States and elsewhere as the President may deem proper, including payment for services rendered and reimbursement for expenditures incurred subsequent to December 31, 1933, fiscal year 1935, to be immediately available, $57,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 2, to insert:

General and Special Claims Conventions, United States and Mexico: For the expenses of the settlement and adjustment of claims of the citizens of each country against the other under a convention concluded September 8, 1923, as extended, and of citizens of the United States against Mexico under a convention concluded September 10, 1923, as extended, and the protocol and convention signed April 24, 1934, between the United States and Mexico, including the expenses which, under the terms of the above agreements, are chargeable in part to the United States, the expenses of an agency of the United States to perform all necessary services in connection with the preparation of American claims and the defense of the United States in cases presented by Mexico, and of a general claims commissioner to act as a joint appraiser in appraising the claims, and for the expenses of the joint committee in determining the proper classification of claims which have heretofore been filed as both general and claims which have heretofore been filed as both general and claims and employees and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, law books and books of reference, printing and binding, contingent expenses, contract stenographic reporting services, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 41, sec. 5), the employment of special counsel, translators, and other technical experts. by contract, without regard to the title 41, sec. 5), the employment of special counsel, translators, and other technical experts, by contract, without regard to the provisions of any statute relative to employment, traveling expenses, the reimbursement of other appropriations from which payments may have been made for any of the purposes herein specified, and such other expenses in the United States and elsewhere as the President may deem proper, fiscal year 1935, to be immediately available, $170,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 9, to

Inter-American highway: To meet such expenses as the President in his discretion may deem necessary to enable the United States to cooperate with the several Governments, members of the Pan American Union, in connection with the survey and construction of the proposed inter-American highway, $5,000,000, to remain available until expended.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the amendment for the inter-American highway, commencing on line 10 and ending at line 15, is not authorized by legislation and therefore cannot be attached as an amendment to this appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask the Senator from Colorado whether this has been estimated for. Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the item referred to was duly estimated for by the Director of the Budget.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I suggest that there is no law under which we can make an appropriation for such purposes, and that if the Director of the Budget has certified this to the Congress, he has gone completely beyond his authority. There is no provision whereby we can spend the taxpayers' money for highway purposes in the various Provinces of Mexico. I make the point of order that this is not authorized by legislation, and under such a provision we would be entering into the construction of highways outside of the jurisdiction of our own country, and the amendment has not place in this appropriation bill. It is not based upon a treaty.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I read the message which accompanied the request made of the committee? It is dated the White House, June 13, 1934, and is as follows:

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE:

I have the honor to transmit herewith, with recommendation for its inclusion in the bill making appropriation to supply de-ficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June all neighbors are selected to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and prior fiscal years, and to provide supplemental emergency appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1934, and June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, a proposed provision of legislation so as to make available the funds necessary to cooperate with the several governments, members of the Pan American Union, in connection with the survey and construction of a proposed inter-American highway. It is necessary that the proposed provision of legislation be inserted in the bill herein referred to if the United States is to cooperate with the several governments referred to governments referred to.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I desire to suggest that the very best argument in favor of my contention is the Budget officer's statement. He says that it is legislation which he wants so that there may be cooperation. Of course, if this money is appropriated, cooperation can be gotten with the South American governments in spending it, but such action will not be based upon any treaty; it will not be based upon any agreement; it will not be based on anything which will justify or warrant Congress in making this appropriation. There is no question that if we approve the suggestion and build this road we could enter into an agreement to build one on the eastern coast of the Panama Canal and in other sections of that country.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. DILL. If we are going to build a road to Panama, I think we should build one to Alaska.

Mr. DICKINSON. I am in favor of that in preference to the present suggestion.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, because of the fact that the merits of the amendment have been referred to, and because of the statements made, I desire to make a very short statement as to the language of the amendment and the reasons for it. About 4 or 5 years ago the Congress made an appropriation of $50,000 to make a survey of the proposed highway. The Central American governments, members of the Pan American Union, have been cooperating in the construction of this highway, a great part of it has been constructed, and, as the result of recent conferences between representatives of this Government and the Central American governments, the United States Government was requested as its part of the inter-American highway to make a contribution, the proposal being that the contribution by the Government of the United States should be not in cash but in materials purchased by this Government from our own manufacturers.

It is believed by the State Department that it is essential that we make this contribution in order to promote the good feeling which now fortunately exists between the Central American Governments and this Government. The State Department has written to the committee a very strong endorsement of the provision, setting forth the route proposed and the benefit to be derived by this Government from the construction of this highway.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it. Mr. RUSSELL. Has the Chair ruled on the point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not yet ruled on the point of order. The Chair recognizes the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I have nothing more to say about the merits of the proposal at this time.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. Is this proposal based upon any treaty? Mr. BYRNES. It is not based upon any treaty of which I

Mr. DICKINSON. Is it based upon any legislation which has been passed by Congress?

Mr. BYRNES. No; not so far as I am aware. I do not have before me the original act authorizing the survey and the appropriation of $50,000, nor have I read that act. Therefore, I am not able to say that it did authorize the construction of the highway.

Mr. DICKINSON. Then, according to the statement of the Senator from South Carolina, there is absolutely no authorization legislatively for this expenditure, and there is no way by which the Congress can make this appropriation unless it goes outside of its powers.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, Senators will recall that the original recommendation was first made by James G. Blaine in 1881, when he was Secretary of State. In the famous message by Garfield on closer union with South America there were made three recommendations. One was that all difficulties between our country and the South American and Central American countries should be adjusted by arbitration. The second was that there should be created what is known as the "Union of the Pan American Republics", now called the "Pan American Union." The third was that in time there should be built, if possible, either a railroad or a highway from North America into South America. All are familiar with the carrying into effect of the first two recommendations. The Pan American Union is now established with headquarters in Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair inquire of the able Senator from Ohio whether there was any legislation or any resolution with reference to the agreements?

Mr. FESS. There was not, except the treaties which effectuated the Pan American Union.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are those treaties still in effect?

Mr. KING. They are. Mr. President, I think that while the purpose is a good one, there is not any doubt but what this proposal is to do that which is contrary to law. It is a thing we have wanted to do, but so far as I know, there is no legislation which authorizes this step, which has been in the minds of the public for many years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair make an inquiry of the Senator from Ohio in order that he may be advised before ruling? In the light of the Senator's statement that, should this proposed legislation be adopted, it would be contrary to law, of what law would it be violative?

Mr. FESS. My opinion is that there could not be anything of this sort except in the form of treaty, and there is no treaty covering this subject of which I know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no treaty and if there is no law, how could what is proposed be in contravention of any law?

Mr. FESS. It would simply fall, because there is no authority.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President. I have a slight acquaintance with this matter and rather positive views as to the preliminary stages. I regret the absence of the able Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] who discussed this matter with me, and at whose suggestion I offered it. It was accepted without debate. I do not know of any treaty which has ever been entered into between the United States and South American countries looking to the construction or the survey of a road to Panama. I recall that about 4 years ago we passed a bill of that nature permitting the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of State to negotiate with and cooperate with the Pan American Union for the construction of a road from the southern borders of Arizona to Panama. That survey was made under that statute in cooperation with the Pan American Union. There was appropriated a sum sufficient to carry on this project from Panama down to the South American States. It was not all expended. It is now proposed to use that unexpended balance to continue this great highway along the North American coast, which we now have to the Gulf and along the Atlantic States, down through Mexico to Panama and from Panama to the South American States, making it the longest highway in the world, uniting South America, Central America and North America.

The purpose of this amendment is to expend that sum which has not been heretofore used. It is expending an old sum heretofore appropriated by Congress, and in no sense, if I understand the rule, is it subject to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I should like to be heard on the point of order. It seems to me that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] has somewhat confused paragraph 2 of rule XVI with paragraph 1. Of course, if this were general legislation, it would obviously be subject to a point of order under paragraph 2 of rule XVI; but it does seem to me that a reading of paragraph 1 of rule XVI clearly indicates that this amendment is not subject to a point of order. If the Chair will bear with me, I should like to read it:

All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or—

Here is the phrase under which it seems to me this appropriation is clearly in order—or unless the same-

Referring either to a new item or an increase-or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law.

Obviously the Committee on Appropriations itself is a standing committee of the Senate, and it is my interpretation of the last clause of that rule that this committee has the right to add any item of appropriation, just as any other standing committee would have that right, and that it is not subject to a point of order under the rule.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, before the Chair rules, I wish to say a word to two. I was familiar with the $50,000 authorization for a survey and for negotiations. It was in line with the program of the Pan American Union and the cooperation of South American countries in matters of this kind, but under no circumstances has there been, and in none of the legislation was there, any authorization for the construction of a highway. It was purely a question of negotiations and surveys, the accumulation of data, and so forth. Here we are extending that authorization to the construction of a highway and proposing to appropriate $5,000,000 of the taxpayers' money for the purpose of carrying out that project. That is the reason why I say if we will turn back to the old authorization of $50,000, if we will turn back to the law with reference to this Pan American project, it will be found that under no circumstances has it ever been suggested that we were authorized to construct a highway out of the money of the taxpayers of this

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, it was explained in the Committee on Appropriations that the purpose of this appropriation was to buy $5,000,000 worth of machinery which would be given to certain Central American countries. That being the purpose of this appropriation, it seems to me that this is legislation. I do not know of any treaty or law which provides for furnishing machinery; and that was the explanation given in the committee yesterday.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I am very curious to ascertain whether the statement which has just been made by the Senator from Wyoming is the understanding of the other members of the Appropriations Committee. The query is, Is this $5,000,000 to be appropriated to buy machinery to give to South American countries? That is the statement which has just been made.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the appropriation is made, as stated by the State Department in a communication to the committee, for the purpose of cooperating with Central American countries in the construction of this highway. That is what it is to be used for.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. I believe the Senator from South Carolina was present at the meeting of the committee, and I should like to ask if the statement was not made to the committee that the purpose of this appropriation was to buy machinery to be given to Central American countries?

Mr. BYRNES. I do not know that it is correct to say "to be given to Central American countries." It is to be our contribution to the construction of that highway.

Mr. CAREY. The statement was made that we were to buy machinery for the construction of that highway.

Mr. BYRNES. Substantially the statement is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I submit, first, that we have not any right to do any such thing; and I submit, secondly, that if we have $5,000,000 to "blow in" in Central America we might better "blow" that money in in the United States of America.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the statement has been made upon the floor that the State Department regarded this appropriation as being essential in order to promote good feeling and friendship to this country on the part of South American countries. I wonder what the reaction of the Senator from California is to our sad experience in the past in connection with the buying of the good feeling of foreign nations, and whether it is not better to deal with all nations in an upright and honorable manner and in a spirit of cooperation rather than to attempt to purchase their friendship, which will not last long after the money is spent.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, if the Senator is addressing me, I think that if we pay $5,000,000 for somebody's goodwill, the goodwill will not be worth a rap, in the first place; the price is so cheap that they would not have any regard to it in their dealings with us, in the second place; and, in the third place, we should not expend 15 cents in such a direction.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am suffering under some confusion as to the facts rather than as to the construction of the rule. When this matter came up—and I regret the Senator from Arizona [Mr. Hayden] is not present—I offered an amendment to spend the remaining portion of the $50,000 for a survey. In this bill it seems that $5,000,000 is added for construction purposes. I wish the Senator from Arizona could be here, and on that I am so insistent that I will suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Thompson
Townsend McKellar Brown Frazier Bulkley George Gibson McNary Metcalf Bulow Byrd Glass Murphy Goldsborough Neely Norbeck Byrnes Capper Caraway Gore Vandenberg Hale Harrison Wagner Walcott Norris Carey Nye O'Mahoney Walsh Wheeler Hastings Connally Hatch Overton Coolidge Hatfield White Patterson Hayden

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Adams] who is in charge of the pending appropriation bill.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a joint resolution which ought to be passed before the Congress adjourns. It has the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Treasury Department. I have conferred with the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess], who was in charge on the other side of the Chamber in the absence of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary], and I have conferred with the Senator from Oregon himself.

The resolution does this and nothing else. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, upon a proper showing made, to grant an extension not exceeding 90 days in the collection of the processing tax on hogs slaughtered by concerns which slaughter not more than 5,000 hogs per month. The processing tax is proving very burdensome to the smaller concerns because it is now $2.25 per hundred. The processing tax began at 50 cents, stepped up to $1, then to $1.50, and then to $2.25. The larger packing concerns, in anticipation of the higher tax, slaughtered on an enormous scale. The smaller concerns have to operate from day to day. They are now paying $2.25 per hundred and are obliged to compete with the larger concerns which paid only 50 cents. The small concerns provide a local market for the farmer and provide some competition with the larger concerns.

I think there should be no serious objection to the proposal. I have the assurance of the leaders of the House that if it shall pass the Senate it will in all probability pass the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair state to the Senator from Oklahoma that there is an amendment pending against which a point of order has been raised, and the Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order.

Mr. GORE. Very well; I shall bring the matter up later. Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I hurriedly entered the Chamber upon summons in the belief that the amendment pending is one which I offered. I find that the amendment which I offered was to the road bill. It took care of the survey only from Panama to the Central American States without any appropriation for construction purposes. My argument is based upon that theory.

I further find my position strengthened by the act to which I made reference, the one passed in April 1929, authorizing the survey. The amendment incorporated in the bill has in part the purpose to enlarge the appropriation. I submit the matter to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair inquire of the Senator from Oregon whether he regards the proposed amendment as in contravention of existing law or of any treaty? The Chair has not been advised that it is,

Mr. McNARY. The whole question does not rest upon the survey. Particularly that comes within the rules and precedents of the Senate. The only question involved is whether there is authority by treaty or otherwise to authorize an appropriation of $5,000,000 for whatever use may be made of it—to give it away as a gratuity or to use it for the purpose of affording funds for the object in mind.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, before the Chair rules I invite his attention to the wording of the act with reference to the $50,000 and the survey, as follows:

ence to the $50,000 and the survey, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000 to enable the Secretary of State to cooperate with the several governments, members of the Pan American Union, when he shall find that any or all of such States having initiated a request or signified a desire to the Pan American Union to cooperate, in the reconnaissance surveys to develop the facts and to report to Congress as to the feasibility of possible routes, the probable cost, the economic service and such other information as will be pertinent to the building of an inter-American highway or highways, to be expended upon the order of the Secretary of State, including the additional cost incident to the assignment by the President of personnel in the Government service, as now authorized, additional compensation of such personnel for foreign service, compensation of employees, transportation and subsistence or per diem in lieu of subsistence. (notwithstanding the provisions of any other act), stenographic or other services by contract if deemed necessary, and such other expenses as may be deemed necessary by the Secretary of State in furtherance of the projects described.

That is merely a resolution to cooperate with the coun-

That is merely a resolution to cooperate with the countries in the matter of determining the information. There is no authorization for the construction of highways. There is absolutely no authority given by which we could pretend that we have an excuse to appropriate money out of the Public Treasury at the expense of the American taxpayer for this purpose.

Let me suggest with reference to the Budget estimate signed by the Budget Director that the fact that there is no law is best evidenced by the fact that it is not cited in his letter. It is pretended because we have the signature of the Budget Director that there is authorization to make an appropriation, although there is no authorization of law.

The Chair has asked, what law does it contravene or what law is against it? Have we reached the point where we are going to appropriate money out of the Public Treasury because there is no law against it? There is only one way we can appropriate money, and that is when we have a law authorizing the appropriation. It is not the privilege of Congress to appropriate money out of the Public Treasury without an authorization. The only way we could make the payment would be to have some authorization from Congress for the construction and cooperation in the maintenance of an international highway such as is proposed.

The fact that there is no law on the statute books against appropriating the money is a slim excuse for the Senate to take the stand that we may appropriate money because we have the signature of the Budget Director, which says that he approves it. As a matter of fact, it is our business, as protectors of the American taxpayers, if the Budget Director sends an estimate which is not authorized by law, to see that it is not honored.

I am not interested in the highway. I care little what the decision of the Chair is, except that I believe in the fundamentals of our Government, and that before we are entitled to appropriate money out of the Public Treasury we have to have some authorization for doing it.

The Appropriations Committee is not authorized to put an amendment on the bill for any amount of money unless there is an authorization. The rules of the House and the rules of the Senate both prohibit us from putting on a bill any such amendment for an appropriation which is not authorized by law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not called upon to announce a policy or to approve or disapprove the policy either of the committee or of the Congress or of either branch of Congress.

The argument of the Senator from Iowa goes rather to the question of policy than to the question of a proper interpretation of the rule. The Senator has invited attention to an act of Congress approved March 4, 1929. I am not quite clear as to the interpretation which the Senator places upon it, but if the Senator contends that it is a restriction upon the authority of the Senate to pass a measure of the nature of the amendment under consideration, the present occupant of the Chair is compelled to disagree with him.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] I believe properly interpreted the rule by which the Chair must be guided. There is no law or treaty, so far as the Chair has been advised, which would be contravened by the enactment of the proposed amendment. Therefore the Chair resorts to rule XVI for guidance in passing upon the question involved. The amendment comes under this provision of the rule, the pertinent part of which is as follows:

Or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law.

The appropriation is initiated by a standing committee of the Senate. It has been approved, as the Chair is advised, by the Budget Director and an estimate has been submitted by him.

Under the interpretation the Chair places upon the rule, the Chair is constrained to overrule the point of order.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I am compelled to appeal from the decision of the Chair for the reason that I think the question is so far-reaching. It is a question of appropriating money out of the Public Treasury without any authorization of law. I want to see whether or not the Senate wishes to approve that sort of procedure. The statement of the Chair itself is that there is no authorization of law for the appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa desires to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina moves to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I desire to have the yeas and nays on that motion. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of no quorum is made. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams Barbour Brown Caraway Barkley Bulow Ashurst Carey Austin Black Byrd Byrnes Capper Bachman Bone Connally Coolidge

McKellar Schall Couzens Hale McNary Metcalf Sheppard Shipstead Cutting Harrison Murphy Neely Norris Smith Hastings Hatch Hatfield Dickinson Stephens Thomas, Okla. Thomas, Utah Dieterich Hayden Hebert Nye O'Mahoney Dill Duffy Thompson Erickson Overton Patterson Townsend Tydings Kean King La Follette Fess Fletcher Pittman Vandenberg Logan Lonergan Frazier Pope Reynolds George Walcott Long McCarran Robinson, Ark. Robinson, Ind. Walsh Wheeler Glbson Goldsborough McGill Russell White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators having answered to the call of the roll, a quorum is present.

The question before the Senate is as follows:

On page 52 of the pending bill, lines 10 to 15, an amendment has been offered making an appropriation of $5,000,000, to remain available until expended. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] raised the point of order as to the validity of this added appropriation of funds upon this bill. The Chair overruled the point of order, and the Senator from Iowa appealed from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, a point of order. I understood that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr.

BYRNES] moved to lay the appeal on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will come to that. He desired to advise Senators who have recently come into the Chamber of the existing condition.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] moved to lay the appeal upon the table. The question now is, Shall the motion of the Senator from South Carolina prevail, and the appeal be laid upon the table?

Mr. DICKINSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HEBERT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I am obliged to withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. King's name was called). The present occupant of the Chair asks permission to be excused from voting upon this motion.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed] to the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WALCOTT. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. McApoo]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I refrain from voting. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. METCALF (after having voted in the negative). Has the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Tydings] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted. Mr. METCALF. Then, not knowing how the Senator from Maryland would vote if present, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. McAdoo] is absent because of illness, and that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Bailey], the Senator from Washington [Mr. Bone], the Senator from Florida [Mr. Trammell], the Senator from New York [Mr. Copeland], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuys], the Senator from Utah [Mr. King], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Duffy] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. HEBERT. I announce the general pair of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Keyes] with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuys].

I also announce the general pair of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Steiwer] with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Duffy]. The Senator from Oregon is detained on business of the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr.

McNaryl, who has been temporarily called from the Chamber on business of the Senate. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I transfer my pair with him to the Senator from Florida [Mr. Trammell], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, I see that the honorable Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings] is present now, so I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 52, nays 24, as follows:

	YE	AS-52
Adams Ashurst Bachman Bankhead Barkley Black Brown Bulkley Bulow Byrd Byrnes Caraway Clark	Connally Coolidge Cutting Dieterich Erickson Fletcher Frazier George Gibson Glass Harrison Hatch Hayden	La Follette Logan Lonergan Long McGill McKellar Murphy Neely Nye Overton Pittman Pope Reynolds	Robinson, Ark, Russell Sheppard Shipstead Smith Stephens Thomas, Okla. So Mr. Dickinson's appeal from the decision of the Chair was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 9145) to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic to be held at Rochester, N.Y., August 14, 15, and 16, 1934, and at the national convention of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, to be held at Colorado Springs, Colo., during the first week in July, and at the annual convention of the Thirtieth Division of the American Expeditionary Forces, to be held at Asheville, N.C., on September 28, 29, and 30, 1934; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Vinson of Georgia, Mr. Drewry, and Mr. Britten were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 9830) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental general and emergency appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1934, and June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, there is now pending before the Senate for adoption the following amendment, on page 52, starting at line 10, reading as follows:

JUNE 15

Inter-American highway: To meet such expenses as the President in his discretion may deem necessary to enable the United States to cooperate with the several Governments, members of the Pan American Union, in connection with the survey and construction of the proposed inter-American highway, $5,000,000, to remain available until expended.

I desire to suggest that there is no possible justification for that expenditure at the present time. We are not obligated under the law to make it; there is no treaty negotiation whereby it can be justified. If we are to start in with the construction of highways beyond the borders of the United States they will lead in all directions from the United States, and those who believe we are to get a real benefit from this sort of a program are entirely in error.

I wish to suggest something in reference to the efficiency of this matter. The Presiding Officer has admitted that there is no treaty authorization, that there is absolutely no legislation authorizing this expenditure, and I submit that there is no way by which the expenditure can be justified under existing law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The Chair will ask that there be order in the Senate.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I should think those Democratic Senators who voted in the affirmative on the question just decided, when they were in effect voting to approve an expenditure of $5,000,000 without any authority of law, ought to do something to divert their minds from a project of this kind.

The Budget Director has sent an estimate to Congress, and I wish to read the estimate in order to have it all in the RECORD. The confession on the face of it is that there is no authorization of law for this expenditure. It is the worst indictment for lack of efficiency I have seen since I have been a Member of the Senate.

I read first the message from the President:

To the President of the Senate.

I ask the present occupant of the chair [Mr. ASHURST], Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, versed in the law, to listen to this:

SR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, with recommendation for its inclusion in the bill "Making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental general and emergency appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1934, and June 30, 1935, and for other purposes", a proposed provision of legislation. provision of legislation-

This is signed by Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, and he says in this communication that he proposes this legislation. Yet the Senate, by a record vote, has said that it is not legislation, when Senators voted to overrule the point of order, in making which I insisted that it was legislation on an appropriation bill. Here is the confession of the Democratic occupant of the White House that it is legislation. I quote further-so as to make available the funds necessary to cooperate with the several governments, members of the Pan American Union, in connection with the survey and construction of a proposed inter-American highway.

Of course, for those who have plenty of money and want an international highway, this might be a good thing, but it is a bad thing for the taxpayer and it is a bad thing to get started in this country of ours, because these roads will run in all directions from the boundary lines, both north and south. Sooner or later it will be proposed that there be built a road to Alaska, and there is four times the reason for building a road to Alaska that there is for building one to Panama. Yet we are asked to start this program with a $5,000,000 appropriation.

I continue to quote:

It is necessary that the proposed provision of legislation be inserted in the bill herein referred to if the United States is to cooperate with the several governments referred to.

Respectfully,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

In other words, here is the bold statement of the President himself that this is legislation. Yet the Senate, with a Democratic majority voting almost solidly, have reached the conclusion that it is not legislation. Either they are right, or the President is right. I do not know which is right.

Let us see what the Budget Director says:

BUREAU OF THE BUDGET,

Bureau of the Budger, Washington, June 13, 1934.

SR: I have the honor to submit for your consideration the following draft of a proposed provision of legislation for inclusion in the bill making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental general and emergency appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1934, and June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, so as to make available the funds necessary to cooperate with the several governments, members of the Pan American Union, in connection with the survey and construction of a proposed inter-American highway:

Page 63, line 5, after the word "and", insert "to meet such expenses as the President in his discretion may deem necessary to enable the United States to cooperate with the several governments, members are the president of the proposed inter-American highway:

to enable the United States to cooperate with the several governments, members of the Pan American Union, in connection with the survey and construction of the proposed inter-American highway, and."

It is necessary that the foregoing provision of legislation be inserted in the bill herein referred to if the United States is to cooperate with the several governments referred to.

Very truly yours,

L. W. Douglas, Director.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. If I may venture to say so, it seems to me that the Senator is discussing a point of order which has already been decided and voted on by the Senate, and that he is in a measure trying to make a partisan issue out of a proposition which is not a partisan issue; and that if he will get off that vein there are some of us over here who would like to vote against this proposal who do not want to sit and listen to a court decision after the court has decided

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Virginia that I think we ought to have the history of this matter of record here. That is why I wanted to put the Budget estimate in the RECORD.

Mr. GLASS. I suggest to the Senator that he cannot get anywhere in undertaking to make a partisan question out of a purely business proposition. He is undertaking to say that the President of the United States has said this is legislation, notwithstanding the fact that the Senate has voted that it is not legislation. What does that amount to? I would vastly rather take the opinion, for example, of the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] on a question of that kind than the opinion of the President of the United States and of the Director of the Budget combined. That question has been settled. Now, let us vote on the question whether we shall make this appropriation or not.

Let me suggest to the Senator, if I may, because I am very much older than he is, though I do not look it, that when he undertakes to make a partisan issue out of this he is about to lose his contention. He speaks of "you Democrats over there" voting for this thing. How does the Senator know we are going to vote for it?

Mr. DICKINSON. I am not contending the Senator will

Mr. GLASS. I voted against it in the committee, and, if the Senator will just desist, I will have an opportunity to vote with him on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. DICKINSON. I wish to suggest that I do not believe this matter can be passed over without some comment on the merits of the question.

Mr. GLASS. I readily admit that.

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not know whether it is going to be the policy of the present administration to send up Budget estimates for which there is no authorization. Naturally, it may be their desire to direct the legislation. Whether this is considered partisan or not is immaterial to me; but I am concerned as to the policy and its effect on what we are going to do so far as appropriations in the future are concerned.

I have about concluded my statement, so far as the RECORD is concerned, on this particular item, except that I want to make one other suggestion. The subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations struck out this provision, or refused to put it in as an amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. That action was taken because at the time when the matter was presented to the subcommittee there was no Budget estimate.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is a fine confession, and it is exactly what I wanted the Senator to say. Why? Because he immediately went down and got a Budget estimate, and it was sent up, so as to be brought before the full committee, and then the amendment was put in there solely for the reason that there was a Budget estimate for it; but there was not a solitary member of that committee who tried to satisfy himself with regard to the legality or the authorization for the appropriation. And, as a matter of fact, it has now been confessed here that there is no legislation which permits this appropriation.

Mr. HAYDEN. That was confessed from the beginning, Mr. President. No one at any time asserted that there was authority of law for this appropriation; but it would not be in order upon an appropriation bill unless there was a Budget estimate, and it would not be in order unless reported from a standing committee of the Senate. A Budget estimate having been received and the amendment having been reported from a standing committee of the Senate, it was in order, and the Chair ruled correctly and the Senate voted correctly in sustaining the Chair.

Mr. DICKINSON. It was put in as legislation when, according to the rules of the Senate, we are not presumed to put legislation on an appropriation bill. The rule that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] suggests is the rule with reference to the increases of appropriations and additions to appropriations, but does not apply to legislation. The Appropriations Committee is not a legislative committee and is not presumed to legislate.

Let me now refer to the merits of this proposal. Why do we now want to spend $5,000,000 for this purpose? The point was made by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Carey] that we are going to spend $5,000,000 with which to buy materials in this country to be sent down into the South American countries. Why should we be sending $5,000,000 worth of material down there as a gift? They would probably rather have the money. I think there is no question but what they would rather have the money. I do not know who is going to administer this law so as to assure that we are going to have the material bought here rather than the money spent down there. I do not know what favoritism is going to be shown in the matter of the purchase or the sale of the material. In other words, it is entering into a program all along the line which in my judgment is ill-advised and which, in my judgment, will lead us into trouble in the

I am just wondering how the taxpayers of this country are going to view this proposal which puts the camel's nose under the tent, and which initiates a program under which they are to be told "We are going to spend your money not only for all the highways we can build in the United States "-and we do have an efficient system of highways in the United States, and we do have an efficient contribution from the public Treasury, thanks to the efficiency and the skill of the Senator from Arizona and the other Members of both Houses who have been interested in public highway improvement at public expense-"but we are going to go beyond the borders of our own country and are going to build some nice highways down in Mexico for the use of the people of other countries."

Of course some of us may be down there once in a while; there may be some friend down there who wants to come here to talk to the Secretary of State; there may be a representative of our Government who wants to go back and forth from his post of duty down there; but mostly this road will be used by the people of the other countries.

Since when have we gotten so generous that we can take our taxpayers' money, with the amount in the Treasury running now below $2,000,000,000 when about the 1st of January the balance in the Treasury was over $5,000,000,000? What assurance have we that the tax funds are going to be of such amount that we can take this $5,000,000 and give it to someone to play with in the construction of a highway down in Mexico? In my judgment, this amendment should be defeated.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I believed the provision was subject to a point of order. I voted against laying the appeal on the table. But that is water over the dam. The Senate has decided otherwise.

I can see how men might disagree very easily on that question. We have now reached the merits of the question.

I agree with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass] that there is absolutely no partisanship in it. There ought to be none. Some of the remarks of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] make it embarrassing for one to oppose this amendment on its merits.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, with the Senator from Iowa making a partisan issue of it, a question of Republicanism or Democracy, it makes it very embarrassing for some of us on this side of the Chamber to vote on the merits of the question.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, either way, Mr. President, I am opposed to its merits at this time.

Mr. GORE. The Senator means its demerits.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I mean its merits, because I think it has some merit.

If we were under ordinary conditions at the present time and we were not faced with the emergency and necessity for scrutinizing every item of appropriation and cutting it to the bone, I would be glad to consider the advisability of our helping to build this road. I concede it would be nice to have it. Even then it would be a question as to whether we ought to pay money to build a road in another country, although we have dominions in a country to the south where the road would go, and there would be some reason why we should make some contribution to the building of the road.

But, Mr. President, the condition in which we find ourselves financially, it seems to me, ought to settle this question on its merits, at least for the present. Five million dollars spent at this time for the building of this road on the part of our Government, it seems to me, would be a donation or a contribution, if Senators want to put it that way, which is not justified under the present circumstances.

I find no fault with the officials of the Government who feel differently, or if it be the President, then the President, if he thinks it ought to be done now. I simply do not agree with those who believe that way. Believing as I do I want to vote against this particular amendment.

Mr. President, I have felt that the way the debate is going I could not well vote either way on it without explaining why I did so.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to say only a few words. I am in entire accord with what has been said by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] with reference to the statements made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] as to this amendment. This proposal does not permit of any partisanship. It originated in 1929, and the act was approved by President Coolidge. That act authorized this Government to cooperate with the members of the Pan American Union in this proposal, and it appropriated $50,000 for a survey, and directed a report to the Congress as to the construction of this highway. Pursuant to that act of Congress representatives of this Government entered into conferences with the Governments of Central America.

The State Department in requesting this appropriation states that after consultation with the Central American Governments and only upon a showing that they have worked out a satisfactory plan for the construction of the highway and are making appropriate efforts and expenditures on their own part to construct the highway, will there be cooperation by us, and that cooperation will not be in the nature of a cash advance or a loan, but, by agreement, will take the form only of a donation of material, of machinery and of structures to assist in the construction of the highway.

The portion of the road to be first undertaken is from Laredo, Tex., to Mexico. The State Department is of the opinion that just at this time it would be exceedingly unfortunate if, after this Government has entered into conferences on this subject and promised cooperation, it should fail to cooperate. The Department believes, on the other hand, that if, pursuant to our agreement with the other countries, we shall provide this fund we will be contributing highway materials which are manufactured in this country; American workmen will be helped, and that the foreign trade of the United States will be promoted by our cooperation in this matter. I hope that the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield for a query?

Mr. BYRNES. I do not. I yield the floor.

Mr. DILL obtained the floor.

Mr. DICKINSON. Will the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. DICKINSON. I just want to suggest to the Senator from South Carolina that if we can make this appropriation in this form and under these conditions, there is no use in the Senator from Arizona [Mr. Hayden] securing authorizations for appropriation for public highways any more. All he need to do is, without any authorization, just to get a Budget estimate and have it sent up here and add it to the bill.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, if the Government of the United States is going to embark upon the appropriation of money for the building of highways outside its territorial limits, if it is going to contribute toward the building of a highway into a foreign land or through a foreign country, I think we should consider the need of a highway to Alaska. If we shall appropriate for the building of a highway to Alaska we will be building a connecting link between two parts of this country, and, furthermore, we will be building through a country that has been a friendly neighbor for more than a century, a country that is composed of people like our own, who go back and forth across the border, as do our people.

If we are going to spend $5,000,000 on a highway through Mexico and Latin America, I think it only proper that we spend an equal amount on a highway through Canada to reach our northern extremity, Alaska.

Mr. President, this subject has been discussed in the northwestern part of the United States at great length. There are many organizations in that section which have spent considerable money in making studies of it. We believe it is highly desirable. I have been the recipient of many appeals in favor of such a highway. The Canadians have agreed that the highway is necessary and have shown a spirit of willingness to cooperate. I have not pressed any such proposal in the Congress, for the reason that I did not know that those in charge of the Government were inclined to spend money to build a highway outside the borders of this country, but since that seems to be the desire and purpose of the officials of the Government, I think we ought to carry in this appropriation a provision for an equal amount of money looking to the survey and construction of a highway through Canada into Alaska.

For that reason, Mr. President, I want to offer an amendment to the particular pending amendment. I am compelled to offer it now, because if the pending amendment shall once be adopted I cannot offer an amendment to it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I understand a survey has already been made for such a highway as the Senator suggests.

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And it has been decided definitely to be feasible; that it would facilitate travel back and forth between this country and Alaska and would be the means, probably, of colonizing that great Territory and increasing its population tremendously, which might be a method of relieving the unemployment situation in this country. Therefore, I am in entire accord with what the Senator has said.

Mr. DILL. Not only that, but it would have a military aspect of great value to this country.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is true.

Mr. DILL. With conditions in the Far East as they are. if trouble should ever develop there, Alaska would probably be the point of attack from that part of the world; and a highway of this kind would be of invaluable benefit in time of trouble with a foreign foe in the Far East. I ask that the amendment may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 52, line 15, after the figure "$5,000,000", it is proposed to insert:

and, under the same terms and conditions, to be expended in cooperation with the Government of the Dominion of Canada in connection with the survey and construction of the proposed Alaska highway from the United States to Alaska, $5,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I understand, the effect of the two amendments would be to appropriate $10,000,000. If the Senator from Washington should offer his amendment as a substitute for the amendment now pending. I would consider it rather favorably, but I cannot at this time vote for an appropriation of $10,000,000 in order to build roads outside the territory of the United States. I should. however, be very glad to have an opportunity to vote separately on the proposal.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I feel compelled, as chairman of the subcommittee, to raise the point of order against this amendment that there is no authorization of any kind to support it. In doing so, I also invite the attention of the Senator from Washington to the fact that on page 93 of the bill there is contained an appropriation of $1,500,000 for highways in Alaska.

Mr. DILL. The amendment offered by me does not provide for highways in Alaska but for a highway to Alaska.

Mr. ADAMS. I was merely pointing out that Alaska was not being entirely overlooked.

Mr. DILL. If the Senator will yield, he might as well call attention to the appropriation for highways in the States. When he calls attention to the appropriation to be spent in Alaska, it is a proposal to spend money in a Territory controlled by this Government; but the committee amendment provides for the spending of money in foreign lands and not in any country controlled by our own Government.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. ADAMS. I was simply raising the point of order against the amendment that there were no authorization and no Budget estimate back of it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I wish to say that I am entirely in accord with and expect to vote for the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Dill], and I also have high hope of favorable action on the appropriation provided in this bill for the expenditure of $5,000,000 for the purpose of carrying forward the program which has been outlined for the construction of a highway to the Central American countries through Mexico. I shall support that amendment. I trust sincerely that a $5,000,000 appropriation will be made for the construction of a highway reaching southward to the Central American countries through our sister Republic of Mexico. and that, in addition thereto, $5,000,000 will be appropriated by the Congress for the construction of a roadway leading northward to Alaska.

We all know that good roads are the handmaidens of modern civilization. We all know that good roads have done more for this country than has any other single factor which can be recalled to the mind of any Member of this body. We all unquestionably recognize that America's phenomenal development has been attributable to the fact that we, above all countries in the world, have gone forward more rapidly in road construction than has any nation on earth; and we know that we could not have made this unusual progress had it not been that we have brought communities closer

I am not, however, for the amendment of the Senator from Washington for the reason he stated a moment ago that the construction of the road therein provided for would place us in a position more effectively to defend ourselves if we should have trouble with countries of the Orient. Insofar as my judgment goes. I doubt if we shall ever have any serious difficulty with the countries of the Orient.

When I refer to "countries of the Orient," of course, I bear preeminently in mind Japan. Japan in conflict with this country would be like a feeble mouse in the claws of a cat. We are always talking about "trouble with Japan," while at this hour over in Russia there are about 700 airplanes and great military forces. Some day-probably it will not be far removed-there will be difficulty between Russia and Japan, and when that difficulty comes we will not need to give any more thought to Japan.

However, I am interested in building highways southward from the border, and in building highways northward from this country into Alaska, because I recognize that we should make as friendly as possible our relations with our neighbors on the south and our neighbors on the north.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I vield.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks human nature has changed in the last 2,000 years? Rome used to build roads through foreign countries, but she had to fight for the privilege of doing so. Does the Senator now think that foreign countries will invite us to build roads through their territory?

Mr. REYNOLDS. As a matter of fact foreign countries are now inviting us to build roads through their territoryfor instance, our neighbors on the south. We have been extended a very generous invitation to construct modern highways through their territory.

In view of the fact that we have gone as far as we have, I think we should make now an appropriation of $5,000,000 for the construction of highways to the south and of $5,000,000 for the construction of highways to the north. Why? There is no money we could spend that would be so beneficial to us from the standpoint of diplomacy and the creation of friendship as these two items of $5,000,000 each.

In addition it would be a benefit to the people of America for the reason that year after year our people have made expenditure of millions upon millions of dollars by way of visiting the countries of continental Europe. I for one am desirous of creating within the minds of the people of our land the idea, before venturing abroad beyond the seas to view the sights, historic, natural, and otherwise, that they should first see America and after they have seen America they should see the beautiful natural sights to the north and the historic beauties to the south.

I, therefore, hope that we may add to the greatest industry in the world. That industry is not the steel industry, not the railroad industry, not the beef or slaughterhouse industry, not the automobile industry. The greatest industry on earth is the tourist industry. This would add to the tourist industry of America as well as of our sister countries to the north and south, and would create for us a warmer bond of friendship.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair presumes to ask | the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Adams] under what rule the able Senator is making the point of order?

Mr. ADAMS. Under paragraph 1 of rule XVI.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, if the amendment had been offered by myself from the floor without the action of the Senate in making the pending committee amendment in order, I would concede that the point of order was well taken: but the Presiding Officer ruled, and the Senate sustained him, that no legislation was necessary to authorize the particular amendment to be in order. Having made it in order, it seems to me an amendment of the same kind and to the same effect, except changing the wording somewhat, is in order. The point of order of the Senator from Colorado does not lie for that reason.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What has the able Senator from Colorado to say in reply to that statement?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Washington provides an entirely new item of appropriation. It is not authorized by law. It is not authorized by treaty. It does not come from a select or standing committee. It is not authorized by the Budget. It is not in any way brought within the provisions of paragraph 1 of rule XVI, which must be done in order to make it in order.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, it may be that the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. Dill] is subject to the point of order, but before the decision is made by the Chair I should like to offer, if I may, a little information to my brethren of the Senate about the subject matter of the amendment.

I feel that if we are to vote on the amendment at all, we should have some understanding of the nature of the proposal involved.

The road in question has already partly been built. It extends from Vancouver, British Columbia, along the west coast of British Columbia to southeastern Alaska, the Juneau and Skagway districts of Alaska. I believe 200 or 300 miles of the road is in good condition. The Canadian Government-that is to say, the British Columbian Government-has been actively seeking the cooperation of the State of Washington with a view of putting behind the proposal a great body of public opinion.

The road will go through what is one of the most beautiful scenic parts of the western world. Some Senators, I know, have visited western British Columbia, and I think they will agree with me that there is no place in America with more charming scenery.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask what is the distance from the northern boundary of the United States to the southern boundary of Alaska on the route over which the road would be built?

Mr. BONE. I can only answer the Senator from Tennesee from memory. It is my understanding that there is about 1,200 miles of the route to be built in British Columbia. My colleague will correct me if I am in error.

The road would run through Prince Rupert in British Columbia, which is one of the prominent Canadian seaports on what is known as the inner water passage to Alaska. When the road is completed it would connect continental United States with its greatest Territory. It would make possible the passage of automobile and truck traffic directly from the American border at Blaine, Wash., through to southeast Alaska. It is a tremendous undertaking, but the route has been surveyed in a preliminary way and part of the road has already been built. It would be really an artery of the United States rather than a purely Canadian road. I suggest this because the matter may come up later, and at this moment I think it well to have an understanding in the minds of the Senators as to what it really is, because it vitally affects our own national and economic interests.

When the road is built it will form a valuable connecting link between the United States and Alaska. Western British Columbia is sparsely settled. In fact, north of Prince Rupert the inhabitants are so scattered that it is almost like mended by the Department of the Interior; it has been the interior of Alaska, so the road would not have the same practical value to British Columbia as it would to the United States. It is simply a method by which traffic may be siphoned from the northern part of the United States into Alaska without the necessity of going by boat.

A number of Senators have visited Alaska by way of the inner-water passage and they know what it is. The road would follow in a general way the contours of the inner passage to Alaska. I feel that the money would be well spent, because when the road is completed, although on Canadian soil, it would literally and practically be an American road.

With respect to national defense, which has been adverted to by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] and my colleague [Mr. Dn.L], that is a matter which Senators in their own judgment must determine. I think the road would be highly desirable from a military standpoint. But that is beside the real question involved. The arts of peace are much more impressive and important. I believe the money would be well spent if the Congress should determine that it is to be spent. It would cement our Canadian brethren to us in deeper and more enduring bonds of friendship.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule. Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, before the Chair rules, I desire to say a word. There is a saying that if we open a hole for one cat to go through, two may go through. When we permit the construction of one project we open the way for the construction of similar projects. If we permit the construction of one barn on a public project, two barns

In the Senate itself a number of years ago, as the present occupant of the Chair will recall, there was presented an amendment providing an appropriation of some three or four million dollars for flood relief in New Hampshire and Vermont. It came to the floor of the Senate. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] offered an amendment for flood relief in Kentucky and Tennessee, and there was an addition of three or four million dollars on account of the projects being similar.

I invite the attention of the Chair that this is not an amendment to the appropriation bill. It is an amendment to an amendment already held in order by the Chair. Therefore, anything that is germane and that has to do with a similar project of a similar nature and of a similar kind is germane to the amendment. This is not an amendment to the appropriation bill. It is an amendment to the amendment which the Chair just previously held in order and which the Senate itself has held in order by voting to lay the appeal on the table. Therefore I contend that the rule cited by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Adams] does not apply in this instance.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I am in entire accord with everything that has been said by the Senator from Washington with regard to the advisability of building this road.

We have a large investment in Alaska, and we must keep up that investment. As we all know, the country has suffered until the present time from a lack of road transportation. The proposed road would run north or northwest along the entire coast of Alaska, probably, up to the Seward Canal. As has already been stated, it would open up in Alaska the grandest scenery in this country, in my opinion.

Tourist travel in Alaska is restricted today by reason of having to travel entirely by water. While the accommodations are very good, they do not constitute adequate transportation. If this road were completed through Alaska, it would undoubtedly mean that thousands of tourists every year would visit that country by automobile. They would leave money there. They would aid in the revenue. It would be a great thing. It would make a tremendous playground for the people of this country.

I simply state that in passing because I feel it my duty to urge that there is not a similarity between this amendment and the amendment to which it is offered. The former amendment was estimated for by the Budget; it was recompassed on by a standing committee, and was offered by a committee. So, in my opinion, the former amendment was in order, and in my opinion the present amendment unfortunately is subject to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is prepared to rule, and is willing to accept the responsibility following the ruling; but under rule XX the Chair may submit a point of order to the Senate if any Senator requests that the point be submitted to the Senate.

No Senator requesting the submission of the point of

Mr. DICKINSON. In view of the fact that the Senate passed on the other point of order, I request that it pass on this point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Is the point of order made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Adams] tenable, and is it well taken? [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" appear to have it. [A pause.] The "noes" have it. The Senate decides that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask for a division.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, do I understand that the Chair ruled that the point of order was not well taken? The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair submitted the point of order to the Senate. The Senate decided that the point of order was not well taken.

Mr. CONNALLY. With all respect to the Chair, I think the Senate voted under a misapprehension.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well. In the absence of objection, the Chair will again put the question.

Mr. GLASS. I call for the yeas and nays on the point of order.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will now endeavor to state the question.

The Senator from Washington proposes an amendment, which will be stated by the clerk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 15, page 52, after "$5,000,000", it is proposed to insert:

And, under the same terms and conditions, to be expended in cooperation with the Government of the Dominion of Canada in connection with the survey and construction of the proposed Alaska highway from the United States to Alaska, $5,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The able Senator from Colorado [Mr. Adams] makes the point of order that under rule XVI this amendment has not been authorized by any existing law or treaty; that it has not been reported by any standing committee; that it is not estimated for.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, this is an amendment to the amendment of $5,000,000; is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. FESS. While I am opposed to the amendment, it certainly is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has so decided, and the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I suppose, then, anything could be put on as an amendment to an amendment, under the statement of the Senator.

Mr. DICKINSON. Anything that is germane.

Mr. CONNALLY. Anything at all. Those who desire to sustain the committee will vote "yea", and those opposed will vote "nay"; is that the idea?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. DILL. Let us get that clear. Those who are opposed to the point of order being approved, those who want to overrule the point of order, will vote "nay"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those who are of opinion that the point of order is well taken will vote "yea." Those who are of opinion that the point of order is not well taken will vote "nay."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I understand, the record now stands that the original amendment was held to be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was.

Mr. BORAH. And this is an amendment to the original amendment which was held to be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate held the amendment to the amendment to be in order, and the Chair made the announcement; whereupon Senators, exercising their right, asked for a roll call, and that question is now about to be decided by a roll call.

Mr. SMITH. And those who vote "yea" will vote that it is in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those who vote "yea" will vote to sustain the point of order, and thus reject the amendment.

Mr. SMITH. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WALCOTT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from California [Mr. McAdoo]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I refrain from voting.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed] to the Senator from New York [Mr. Copeland] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LONG. How is the junior Senator from Wisconsin IMr. Duffyl recorded? I desire to vote the opposite way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recorded in

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recorded in the affirmative.

Mr. LONG. How am I recorded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the negative.

Mr. LONG. That is right.

Mr. HEBERT (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis]. I find that he is out of the Chamber, and therefore I am forced to withdraw my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

I desire to announce the general pair of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Keyes] with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuys].

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. McAdoo] is detained from the Senate by illness, and that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Brown], the Senator from New York [Mr. Copeland], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuys], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. Trammell] are necessarily detained.

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 34, as follows:

So, the Senate decided the amendment of Mr. Dill to the amendment of the committee to be out of order.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment, on page 52, line 15, to strike out the figure "5" and to insert in lieu thereof the figure "1", so that it will read "inter-American highway, $1,000,000, to remain available until expended."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho to the committee amendment. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it. The ayes have it, and the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am very much interested in the adoption of the pending amendment. My State borders the greatest Latin American country which is interested in the proposed highway.

I may say to Senators, for their information, that about the 1st of next January, or perhaps prior to that time, a very fine highway will be completed from Laredo, Tex., to the City of Mexico. The Mexican Government is constructing that highway, and none of the money proposed to be appropriated under this amendment, as I understand it, will be expended for that purpose. I make this statement in order to assure Senators that the Federal Government is not going to be called upon to bear the expense of the proposed highway all the way to Central America.

With the opening of the Mexican highway to the city of Mexico, thousands and thousands of tourists will travel over that pathway to Central and South America, and I believe that this appropriation will give stimulus to the building up of fine, cordial relations, and commercial intercourse, with Latin America, and I hope the Senate will agree to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended. The Senator from Iowa demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when his name was called). transfer my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] to the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the following Senators, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the Senator from Utah [Mr. King], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuys], are necessarily detained from the Senate.

I regret to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. McApoo] is detained from the Senate on account of

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Keyes] with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuys];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] with the Senator from California [Mr. McApoo]; and

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Shipstead] with the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND].

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 38, as follows:

ESTABLISHMENT OF A NATIONAL ARCHIVES

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8910) to establish a National Archives of the United States Government, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. Barkley, Mr. McKellar, and Mr. Fess conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT-APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 9830) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental general and emergency appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1934, and June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

Mr. GORE obtained the floor.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I desire to give notice of motion to reconsider the votes by which the two committee amendments on page 16, lines 5 to 9 and lines 11 to 14, were adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The notice of motion to reconsider will be entered.

POSTPONEMENT OF PROCESSING TAX IN CERTAIN CASES

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I now desire to recur to the joint resolution, the point of order concerning which I was discussing. I ask to have Senate Joint Resolution 142 read, and I should like to have it appear in the RECORD at the point where it was presented this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The joint resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That subsection (b) of section 19 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, approved May 12, 1933 (title I, Pub., No. 10, 73d Cong.), is amended by adding the words at the end of said subsection, as follows: "And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized to permit postponement, for an additional period of not exceeding 90 days, of the payment of taxes covered by any return under this title of processors of hogs whose average slaughter during the calendar year 1933 did not exceed 5,000 hogs per month." exceed 5,000 hogs per month.'

Mr. McNARY and Mr. BORAH rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. GORE. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, from a hasty reading of the joint resolution I conceive that the effort is made to exclude from the payment of the processing tax for certain periods those who slaughter hogs not in excess of 5,000 per month. I am trying to see if I analyze correctly the Senator's proposal, which, as I understand, is to delay collecting the processing tax from those packers who slaughter less than 5,000 hogs a month.

Mr. GORE. It does not remit the tax at all.

Mr. McNARY. I did not say "remit." I said delay the payment of the processing tax.

Mr. GORE. Yes; it does that.

Mr. McNARY. Under the act, when the hog is sold the purchaser must immediately pay into the Treasury of the United States the amount of the processing tax. This seems to be a plan to take that out of the A.A.A., with the exception of those slaughterers who slaughter less than 5,000 in a month. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. GORE. Yes. Packing houses which slaughtered last year on the average of not more than 5,000 hogs per month are entitled to the extension provided in this joint resolution.

Mr. McNARY. What is the delay granted by the resolution?

Mr. GORE. The purpose is this-

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I shall have to suggest the regular order.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I shall object to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. BORAH. I am not asking for the consideration of the resolution. I am offering an amendment to the resolution, which I ask to have printed.

Without objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed, as follows:

Section 36 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, is amended-

I. By striking the comma and the word "and" after the words "to reduce and refinance its outstanding indebtedness incurred in connection with any such project" in the second sentence thereof and inserting in place thereof the following: "; or, whether or not it has any such indebtedness, to purchase or otherwise acquire in connection with such project storage reservoirs or dams or sites therefor, or additional water rights, or canals, ditches or rights-of-way for the conduct of water, or other works or appurtenances necessary for the delivery of water, provided such purchase or acquisition is not intended to bring additional lands into production. Such loans * * * II. By adding at the beginning of (5) thereof, the following:

in the case of a loan to reduce or refinance its outstanding indebtedness

III. By adding at the beginning of (C) thereof, the following: "in the case of a loan to reduce or refinance the outstanding indebtedness of an applicant."

Mr. McNARY. I only desire to occupy the floor another minute. I wish to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if this bill has been referred to a standing committee of the Senate?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, it has not.

Mr. McNARY. Has the report been made upon the proposal by the administrator of the Adjustment Act, the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. GORE. No written report has been made upon it, but I have information which is reliable that the Secretary of Agriculture favors it, the Treasury Department favors it, and it is left discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury, upon a proper showing made, satisfactory to the Treasury Department, that this extension of 90 days and not more be given to packing concerns which slaughtered not more than 5,000 hogs per month last year.

Mr. McNARY. I understand that; but what security does the Government exact for the payment of this tax if delayed?

Mr. GORE. There is no express provision in the resolution upon that point, but I assume that the Secretary of the Treasury would undoubtedly require ample security.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Has the resolution been referred to a committee or to either the Department of Agriculture or the Treasury Department?

Mr. GORE. They have both been consulted about it. It has not been referred to a committee, because it only came to my attention yesterday.

I should like to say to the Senator before he interposes an objection that there are some 700 of these little concerns, these little packing houses, which have to pack and slaughter from day to day. The big concerns at the inception of the processing tax slaughtered on an extraordinary scale. The Senators know the processing tax began at 50 cents and then went to a dollar, and then $1.50, and now it is $2.25. The big packing concerns slaughtered and stored when the tax was low. The little concerns could not do that. They slaughter from day to day. They are now slaughtering and paying $2.25 and marketing their products in competition with the big concerns which slaughtered when the tax was only 50 cents.

I am advised that this is a serious embarrassment, which may result in closing down a number of these small concerns, which provide local markets for farmers and provide some measure of competition with the larger establishments. They need this money for working capital. The joint resolution defers the collection for only 90 days, not more than that. It does that only upon an ample showing made to the Secretary of the Treasury, and is limited to those who slaughter not more than 5,000 hogs per month.

As I was saying a moment ago, there are some 700 of these small concerns. I will enumerate the approximate figures as to some of the States: South Dakota has 4; North Dakota, 6; Arkansas, 7; Minnesota, 9; Nebraska, 12; Iowa, 14; Oklahoma, 18; Kansas, 26; Texas, 30; Oregon, 15; Washington, 20; California, 65; Indiana, 30; Illinois, 50; Ohio and New York, 75; Pennsylvania, 80; and so on. It is of vital concern to all these small concerns.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President. I have no doubt that it is of vital concern, but it seems to necessitate argument and a great deal of talk.

Mr. GORE. I have nothing more to say, if anyone ob-

Mr. McKELLAR. Unless we are going to dispose of it at once, I am going to object, because I think the deficiency appropriation bill ought to go forward.

Mr. GORE. The Senator is undoubtedly right about that. Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not think we should interrupt the consideration of the pending appropriation bill in order to take up a joint resolution which has not been considered by the committee, which has not been considered by any department, and which affects the processing tax. I should like to know a little more about it before we consider it.

for. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GORE. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma makes the point of no quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, if he intends to discuss the particular pending amendment. Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I rise, Mr. President, for the purpose of resisting the committee amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. Very well. I wish to do the same thing. Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me for the purpose of offering an amendment with reference to this particular committee amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to amend the committee amendment on page 86, line 7, by inserting the figures "$500,000,000" instead of the figures "$400,000,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield for that purpose?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield for that purpose; I have no objection to the amendment being disposed of, but I should like to be heard before the amendment, as amended, shall be disposed of.

Mr. BYRNES. I should like to make a statement with reference to the figures suggested and as to the amount which would be available. I think it might be of interest to the Senator from Wisconsin in the discussion of the amendment which he intends to offer.

Mr. President, I am not offering the amendment by direction of the committee. The committee view is expressed in the committee amendment as it appears in the bill. Since it was approved I have made investigation of the amount which would be available under the particular emergency relief section. I find that there will be available for public works and relief, under title II of the bill, a total of $2,186,675,000. That is the total amount which will be available for relief and for public works.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, can the Senator give us the break-down of the figure?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes. There is a direct appropriation, including $285,000,000 for the C.C.C., amounting to $899,675,000. There is a transfer authorized from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, under the authority of the bill, of $400,000,000. There is a provision for drought relief of $450,000,000. There is authority to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to purchase securities from the P.W.A., which would make possible an additional $250,000,000.

Actually at this time the P.W.A. advised the committee that they have securities not in excess of $150,000,000, but by the end of the year, in their opinion, it will be possible for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to purchase $250,000,000 of securities. The language is that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to purchase marketable securities. There is no guaranty that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will purchase that amount of securities, but it is possible under the language of the bill.

Then there is $122,000,000 available for public highways, roads, and trails, and $65,000,000 available for public building projects.

This makes a total of $2,186,675,000, which represents the figure available for relief and for public works.

I have totaled the amount which would be available for public works. There is $500,000,000 under the bill. Then there is the possible Reconstruction Finance Corporation purchase of $250,000,000, the $187,000,000 for roads, and the appropriation for the C.C.C. of $285,000,000, making a total of $1,222,000,000 available for public works as differentiated from relief.

The total amount available for relief and public works being $2,186,000,000, if we deduct from that the total sum available for public works, $1,222,000,000, plus the amount available for the drought-stricken area $450,000,000, we find there would be available for general relief purposes the sum of $514.675.000.

That amount is available for general relief purposes throughout the country. Under the language of the bill there is added to that the $450,000,000 available for relief in stricken agricultural areas, so there is made available for these two items, general relief and relief for the drought-stricken areas or stricken agricultural areas, a total of $964,675,000.

I find, after conference with the Director of the Budget, that there is a balance on hand at this time of $220,000,000 available for relief. Then under the cattle appropriation which was authorized by the Congress within the last few weeks, $50,000,000 was specifically allotted for relief. The grand total for relief, therefore, is $1,234,675,000.

If the limitation remains in the bill at $400,000,000 upon mittee was of the opinion that it could be done with the amount of money which can be transferred from appropriation of $450,000,000, and that no injury would be the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, we would lack $100,000,000, of providing the sum of money which would be essential to carry out the purpose of general relief if such relief is to be provided on the basis of 8 months, the period the committee had in mind.

In other words, the Federal relief bill at this time amounts to $110,000,000 a month. If we are to make certain that while the Congress is not in session an amount will be available sufficient to care for general relief on the same basis on which it is now being provided, it would be necessary for us to provide $880,000,000, and we would not provide that $880,000,000 if the limitation be left at $400,000,000. If it is raised to $500,000,000 there would then be provided enough money to give to Federal-relief purposes, to the administrator, Mr. Hopkins, an amount which would enable him to continue expenditures at the rate of $110,-000,000 a month for the next 8 months. The committee thought it wise to make the provision on the basis of 8 months because while the Congress will convene in January, there may be delay in the passage of a deficiency bill if there is necessity to provide additional funds to care for relief at that time.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD, Mr. COUZENS, and Mr. COSTIGAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield, and if so to whom?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota, who rose first.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I have been wondering how the Senator arrived at the figure of $450,000,000 for dought relief.

Mr. BYRNES. I did not expect to go into that just at this moment, but have no objection to doing so. The amount estimated was $525,000,000, necessarily an estimate. At the time the estimate was filed there had been no relief in any section of the country. After that estimate was filed, as the Senator knows, we did have rains in a number of the States. Reports would indicate that in some cases the rains afforded no relief, but came too late. In other sections it was the opinion that the rain would afford relief.

But the committee had in mind that the estimate is based upon doing many things. A number of them are set out in the estimates submitted by the Director of the Budget. Some of them are plainly for relief. Others could certainly be called a part of the rehabilitation program.

For instance, there is $125,000,000 for a special work program and human relief.

Then there is $75,000,000 for livestock purchases, in addition to the funds already available under the Jones-Connally Act. That money has not yet been expended. It is seriously doubted by some who have given careful thought to the subject whether the amount available under the Jones-Connally Act, $100,000,000, plus $75,000,000 could be wisely expended in the next 6 months or in any reasonable time thereafter.

The third item is $100,000,000 for shipping, processing, and relief distribution of purchased cattle. There is no way of estimating the amounts. Those who were charged with the duty of arriving at an estimate necessarily had to take round figures and approximate figures.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. BYRNES. Let me finish the items.

There is $100,000,000 for loans to farmers to finance emergency feed purchases and shipments.

There is $50,000,000 for emergency acquisition of submarginal farms and assistance in relocating destitute farm families.

Then there is $50,000,000 for work camps to afford employment in drought areas for young men transferred from cities and towns.

There is $25,000,000 for purchase of seed for 1935 planting. In endeavoring to provide ample funds for relief, the committee was of the opinion that it could be done with the appropriation of $450,000,000, and that no injury would be done to the program for the relief of those unfortunate

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a suggestion?

Mr. BYRNES. I now yield to the Senator from Wisconsin. Mr. LA FOLLETTE. These are two different items in the bill. The drought-relief appropriation comes later.

Mr. BYRNES. Entirely so. I did not want to go into it, but I was asked the question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I suggest to the Senator that I intend to offer an amendment to restore the Budget estimate, and that will raise that issue; but can we not in a more orderly way proceed to discuss the question of the first committee amendment, which limits the amount of unpreempted balances of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and thus try to separate the question of public works and unemployment relief from the drought situation?

Mr. BYRNES. I am in hearty accord with that suggestion; but I could not decline to answer the question of the Senator who had asked for that information.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President-

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Colorado. Mr. COSTIGAN. Those of us who are interested in relief and in public-works appropriations are, of course, favorable to the increase in the restriction in lines 6 to 7, page 86, from $400,000,000 to $500,000,000. There are, however, many of us who believe that that restriction should be removed altogether, and that the bill should remain as it passed the House; also that the proviso in lines 17 to 20 on the same page in the House bill should be removed, in order that the President may have ample discretion with which to deal with unappropriated balances and savings of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for these purposes.

Will the able Senator from South Carolina be good enough to indicate to us what, if any, objections he has to the adoption of that course? I realize, of course, that the proposed later amendment referred to is not in order at this

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the committee gave most careful consideration to the question of whether or not a limitation should be placed upon the amount. In the House there was a discussion as to what amount was made available by this bill, and there was a difference of opinion. Seemingly, no two Members could agree upon the amount that was made available. The fact is that after conferences with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation representatives, and learning of the commitments made by that organization, the committee was of the opinion that there should be a limitation upon the amount that could be diverted from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for carrying out the purposes of that organization in making loans to closed banks, and for other purposes, so that there would be no uncertainty. If a limitation were placed in the bill, we would know exactly the amount that was made available for relief purposes and for public works.

As to the public-works item, the committee was of the opinion that there should be a limitation of the amount for public works, because otherwise a larger amount might be transferred, and thereby lessen the amount that would be available for relief.

Having made so much of a direct appropriation, the rest of this money, $500,000,000 of it, must come out of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation treasury, and must be diverted from that organization, and to that extent lessen the ability of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to carry on its operations. Five hundred million dollars is a much larger sum than the chairman of the board of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was willing to recommend. He thought $250,000,000 was all that should be diverted from that organization-I think he finally said $250,000,000 to $300,000,000.

When we do this, we give authority to take as much as $500,000,000 from that organization. It does not mean that it will be taken if the necessity shall not arise; but if the necessity shall arise, it will be taken.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I call the Senator's attention to the fact-because I agree with the Senator from Coloradothat the provision here is-

Provided, That not exceeding $400,000,000 in the aggregate-

The Senator is now expecting to amend it, to make it $500,000,000-of any savings or unobligated balances in funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may, in the discretion of the President, be transferred and applied—

And so forth. Mr. President, if we are to put the discretion in the hands of the President as to the application of funds which he may apply in certain directions, then that discretion ought to be left absolute, and we ought not to tie him with any limited amount. So it would be infinitely better, if the design is to permit the President in his discretion to allocate the funds that may be needed for relief, to eliminate entirely the portion that is in italics immediately after the word "Provided", and let the sentence read:

Provided, That any savings or unobligated balances in funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may, in the discretion of the President, be transferred and applied—

And so forth. Why? What earthly logical reason can there be for saying that in the discretion of the President the funds may be allocated, and then limiting that discretion in the fashion that we have?

Permit me as well to say to the Senator from South Carolina that upon the computation that was made in the House, under the figures that were given by Chairman Buchanan, $173,000,000 over the $400,000,000 will be left floating in the air, as it were, wholly unallocated; but beyond that it seems to me that if we give to the President the discretion of allocation, we should permit him to have that discretion without limiting him in amount.

May I say that to me this is one of the most important parts of this bill, and one of the most important things that we are doing. There is nothing that can be done by this Congress in its closing hours that is of more importance or that can afford more happiness to our people than to give relief in almost unstinted amount as the President himself may determine during the absence of the Congress.

If the Senators agree with me in that regard, and if it be that the President should have the full authority during the absence of Congress and until January next, then we ought to leave not to his limited discretion, but, sir, to his discretion wholly, the right of allocation of the funds that may be allocated by him; and the latter part of this sentence, indeed, the last proviso-

That the amounts to be made available under the authority of this paragraph for public works under the National Industrial Recovery Act shall not exceed in the aggregate $500,000,000-

Should be stricken out.

That, however, is another story. I will reach that after the committee amendments shall have been disposed of; but I desire to deal with both in order that the discretion of the President may be unhampered and that the amount he may have at his disposal shall be the fullest possible amount.

If we say in one instance that he may exercise his discretion up to $500,000,000, there is not any reason on earth why we should not say that he may exercise his discretion up to $573,000,000, the full sum which may be possible. His discretion is one that should be permitted him in behalf of recovery, in behalf of the relief of human misery, and in behalf of that which we seek most in this session of Congress, the welfare of the human beings of the country.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the committee considered carefully the viewpoint expressed by the Senator from California. We had to recall that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is doing a most important work, and that if we should pass this bill without putting any limitation at all upon the amount of its funds that could be diverted we should leave the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in a position where it would be difficult for it to know what commitments to make in carrying out operations and activities which are essential for recovery and for relief at this time. The Senate is familiar with what is being done by that organization.

I call to the attention of the Senator from California the fact that the committee had in mind what he has in mind, that the President of the United States should have ample funds for relief, and by the limitation of $500,000,000, which is now proposed, the President will have, aside from the $500,000,000 for public works plus $250,000,000 to be derived from securities, for relief purposes alone, $1,234,675,000.

Relief now being carried on is costing $110,000,000 a month. We have based our figure on an 8-month period, but for the 6 months when the Congress will not be in session the President will have $1,234,000,000, and instead of expending $110,000,000 a month, he could, under this provision, spend $205,000,000.

Therefore, if we provide all that anyone could reasonably, or even unreasonably, anticipate, and provide $205,000,000, where we are spending but $110,000,000, we certainly will provide enough for relief. But if a condition should arise which would make it necessary to spend even more than that, the President could divert funds from money he is now expected to expend for public works, that is, $500,000,000, so that he would have even more than $1,234,000,000 for the next 6 months.

The committee was of the opinion that we should not leave the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the uncertain position of not knowing how much money it had left to carry on its activities. That was the only reason for the committee's action.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator makes a very plausible argument with his statistics, and that is all right; but that is not what is attempted to be done by the bill. The proposal is not to allocate so much for public works, so much for the R.F.C., so much for one purpose and so much for another. In this particular paragraph the committee is leaving it substantially to the discretion of the President.

The President is as interested, I hope, in the R.F.C. as in the P.W.A. or in any other relief organization, and with the President's discretion specifically provided for, he of course will take appropriate care of the R.F.C. and of every other agency. So why endeavor to limit his discretion?

It ought not to rest with me to contend about limiting the President's discretion. That ought to be a part, indeed, of the attitude of the Senator from South Carolina and of all the Senators on the other side of the aisle. They do not need me to teach anyone over there that the discretion of the President should be unhampered in matters of relief, and the bill recognizes the principle that it is his to exercise the discretion, and I do not want it limited during the period of the absence of the Congress.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the limitation is perfectly jus-

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I yielded to the Senator from South Carolina to make a statement, and I object to his further yielding the floor to everybody else to make statements.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I yielded to the Senator from California for a question. His question was a little long, but that is why I yielded to him.

Mr. JOHNSON. I apologize to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of opposing the committee amendment. Senators talk very glibly about how much money is to be needed for relief, how much money is to be needed for drought relief, how much money is to be needed for public works, and how much money is to be needed under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The fact of the matter is that no man can successfully predict what the trend of economic events will be during the time between the adjournment of Congress and the reassembling of a new Congress on the 1st day of next January. There are indications already evident that we are sliding into another slough; approaching another crisis within the crisis.

Personally, I do not believe that the amount provided, without the committee's restrictive limitation, is sufficient to provide an adequate program to meet the problem of unemployment, to meet the problem of stimulation of the great basic industries, which, even at this late hour in the depression, are still in the bottom of the trough. However, I think it the height of folly—and I say this with all due respect to the members of the Committee on Appropriations—to provide that the President could, in any emergency which might arise during the adjournment of the Congress, be limited to only $500,000,000, which might be transferred from the unobligated balances of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the purposes of emergency employment, to the purposes of increased unemployment relief, or to the purposes of public-works construction.

As nearly as I can find out, there is approximately $2,000,000,000 in unobligated authorizations for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The effect of the amendment of the committee, or even if it should be amended by the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina, would be to remove from the discretionary use of the President $1.500.000.000.

Mr. President, unless Congress wants to be called back into extraordinary session in the middle of the coming campaign, they had better provide unlimited discretion, insofar as the use of these unexpended balances in the hands of the President are concerned. All of the indices which show the trend of economic events in this country indicate that we have already reached the peak of the spurt occasioned by extraordinary expenditures which took place during the last summer, fall, and winter. For the last four consecutive Sundays the indices of the New York Times have indicated that there is a recession in business activity in the consumer goods, the lighter industries. Every Senator knows that, so far as the great basic industries are concerned, the industries which produce the durable or capital goods, they have shown, with few exceptions, very little improvement during this period of so-called "recovery."

If the amendment proposed by the committee shall stay in the bill, then there will be available only the sums which are now estimated to be necessary for the purposes of unemployment relief and public works. So far as the public works are concerned, I expect to discuss that subject at greater length in connection with an amendment which I intend to offer to the bill, and in connection with the effort of the Senator from California to remove the limitation which now is contained in the bill providing that only $500,-000,000 may be used for the purposes of the Public Works Administration.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Robinson of Arkansas in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The highest estimate I have been able to obtain of the funds which will be available if we return to the figures of the House bill, and if we strike out the limitation in the bill as it passed the House in lines 17 to 20 on page 86, as well as the restriction in lines 6 and 7, containing the amendment of the committee, is that the President would have left to his discretion, not $2,000,000,000, as the able Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] indicated, but about $1,400,000,000, plus the daily receipts of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

I rose some time ago for the purpose of asking the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] what his estimate is of the total amount which would be available for discretionary allocation by the President of the United States if these two clauses should be stricken.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have little confidence in the estimates of the amount of money which will be required for relief and for employment. In every instance all during this depression every estimate which has been submitted to cover a 6-months period or the period of a year has proved to be inadequate. If we were dealing only with material things, perhaps the inadequacy of those estimates would not be so tragic; but in this instance, Mr. President, we are dealing with human beings; we are dealing with the safety, the welfare, and the health of men, women, and children. At the close of this session of Congress let us not make the mistake which we have made at the close of every session of Congress since December 1930.

In the closing hours of every Congress I have had to stand upon the floor of the Senate and appeal for more adequate funds in order to meet the problem of unemployment relief and the problem of employment. And each time, Mr. President, the funds have been pared down and restricted, and each time the impact of that error of judgment has been directed against the innocent victims of this depression.

Why is there suddenly a lack of indication of confidence that the President of the United States will exercise wisely and well discretionary power insofar as the relief of human beings is concerned? Why should this limitation be placed in this bill? Is there a Senator here who believes that the able Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will not be able to make his needs known to the President of the United States. I have no fear, Mr. President, that its Chairman will not adequately protect the interests of that Corporation. I am certain that we can trust him as an able advocate and citizen to protect the interests of that Corporation. But let us not, in attempting to see into the future, so restrict discretion upon the part of the President that it may be necessary for him to meet inadequately the problems of human distress and human suffering which may arise after the Congress shall have adjourned.

I sincerely hope, Mr. President, that the amendment offered by the committee, even though it be amended by the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina, will be rejected.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina indicate what is his estimate of the precise amount which will be available for discretionary use by the President in the event the amendment under consideration shall be rejected, and the proviso in lines 17 to 20 on page 86 shall be subsequently stricken out? I need not say that my heart and mind, like the hearts and minds of other Senators, fully respond to and approve the eloquent appeals of the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette].

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the Senator asks two different questions. If the proviso in lines 17 to 20 should be stricken out, then there would be no limitation upon the amount of money which would be available for public works, and conceivably the funds for public works could be increased several hundred million dollars, and to the extent they were thus increased relief funds would be decreased. But the other question is an entirely different one. The limitation imposed by the committee report is $400,000,000. My amendment proposes to add $100,000,000. If that were stricken from the bill, and no limitation were provided, as I recall the figures-and there is some controversy about them, but there was available $1,700,000,000, as I remember, in the R.F.C., including all its funds-the amount of $1,700,000,000 would be available, plus direct appropriations, which amount to $899,000,000 in one case, $450,000,000 in another, and $65,000,000 in another, or for the three in all something more than $1,300,000,000. So there would be approximately three billion and a few hundred million dollars. Those would be the figures if this limitation were removed and the language simply referred to all the funds of the R.F.C. or gave the President the discretion to transfer so much as he desired from the R.F.C. for relief and from the P.W.A.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the figures given me this morning, apparently from an authentic source, indicate that the unobligated balances and savings which would be available to the President if the proviso to which the Senator from South Carolina has offered an amendment should be stricken out would be approximately $1,400,000,000 plus the daily receipts of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. That is a substantially lower figure than the one used by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] or the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator may be correct. My recollection was that it was $1,725,000,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to permit me to make an inquiry of him?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. This proviso will read, if the committee amendment shall be rejected, as follows:

Provided, That any savings or unobligated balances in funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation—

And so forth. That proviso would then limit the President even to savings and unobligated balances.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes. There is no question about that. The only question is—and I must say that my recollection is not very clear—as to the amount. It is in the testimony, and my recollection is that it would be $1,700,000,000. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan] says that his figures show $1,400,000,000.

Mr. NORRIS. The President's discretion, then, in this particular language—if the committee amendment were rejected—would be limited to the savings and unobligated balances of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and it does not seem to me that that would in any way injure or hamper the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the performance of its obligations.

Mr. BYRNES. I must say that the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation gave to the committee the impression that it would certainly do so. His statement was that all he could safely recommend was $250,000,000. There is nothing confidential about the matter. There was a vote on the question of the limitation of $300,000,000, and then it was made $400,000,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, I understand; but I think Senators who are fearful about the limitation provided for in the committee amendment are not ordinarily opposed to the limitation of discretion. If Congress were going to be in session, certainly I would be advocating the rejection of the committee amendment, and I do not believe there would be any objection to it; but no one can tell, the uncertainty is so great. The Congress will not be in session, and if the President's hands should be tied—he must act in the place of Congress when we adjourn—so that he could not meet an emergency which many of us honestly fear is likely to occur it might result in great distress which could be relieved if the restrictions did not exist which would be brought about by the committee amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Nebraska, I want again to say—and I have not the right to speak for the committee; I am only a member of the subcommittee and am not its chairman—that the committee had no purpose or intention other than to provide every dollar they believed to be reasonably necessary.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not questioning the good faith of the committee; the committee may be right, and I think the amount that would be available in case the committee amendment should be agreed to would be sufficient, in all probability; but we are facing a very great emergency and a great uncertainty. The Congress will not be in session, so that if the contingency were to arise which might very well arise, with our lack of knowledge of what may happen during the recess of Congress, the President might even find it necessary to call Congress in special session. That could be entirely avoided if the committee amendment were rejected.

Mr. BYRNES. I may say to the Senator from Nebraska that Mr. Jones before the committee stated time and time again that if the R.F.C. were permitted to continue to operate they would have available under this language from $250,000,000 to $300,000,000, and I have his testimony in my hand at this moment; but, notwithstanding that, the committee fixed it at $400,000,000, and I now seek to increase it to $500,000,000.

I wish again to repeat the statement that, if my amendment shall be adopted, there will be available for relief purposes $1,234,000,000. That includes drought relief. If the money shall be spent, as it will be spent, in the agricultural regions, it will mean that certainly there will be less demand for general relief purposes in those areas, because half a billion dollars will certainly go a long way toward relieving the conditions that exist.

Mr. Hopkins said he is spending $110,000,000 a month, and, as Congress will return in 6 months, at that rate of expenditure the amount will be $660,000,000. We make available $1,234,000,000, or really twice as much as he is now spending. The opinion of the committee was that by making available $600,000,000 more than he is now spending we would provide against emergencies that might arise between now and the time when Congress shall again be in

AMENDMENT OF BANKING AND FEDERAL RESERVE ACTS

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside to permit the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3748) to amend certain sections of the Banking Act of 1933 and the Federal Reserve Act, and for other purposes.

This bill is reported unanimously by the Committee on Banking and Currency. It consists of 18 sections, more or less unrelated to each other, each containing an amendment or a clarification of the banking laws; each of them has been recommended by the Comptroller of the Currency or by the Federal Reserve Board, or by both, and each one of them has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

It is important that the bill be enacted today, because it clarifies certain provisions of the Banking Act of 1933, which will go into effect tomorrow, 1 year after the approval of that act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that Senate bill 3748 be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not think I will object; I have no doubt whatever of the good faith of the Senator from Ohio; but I should like to call to the attention of the Senator from Ohio and of the Senate to the fact that if we agree to this request and keep on along this line for the next day and tomorrow we will learn to regret it afterward.

The Senator from Ohio asks for immediate consideration of a bill which has been reported, containing, as he says, 18 sections, each section amending some provision of existing law with relation to banking and currency. If we want to give the measure the consideration it ought to receive, I have no objection; but I wish to suggest that if we now lay aside the pending bill and take up the bill of the Senator from Ohio, and pass it within the next few minutes, as is undoubtedly expected, I think we are engaging in very dangerous business.

We do not have to adjourn tomorrow; we ought not to adjourn tomorrow. If we have some measure of this kind before us, important as this apparently is, although I have never heard the bill read and have never seen it, we ought to be willing to stay here so as to give it the proper consideration.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to say that this bill provides for administrative matters and mostly clarifying amendments to the Banking Act and the Federal Reserve Act, and I do not believe there are any serious problems involved in it.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I think we can assure the Senator from Nebraska that there are no controversial matters in the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. We have just been through a day or two of debate, during which the proposed amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act were debated, although they were not material to the subject under discussion. However, a great controversy arose, involving the very question that if they cannot buy United States bonds today, and we shall is presented here. Someone said the amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act were not controversial, that they were simply "clarifying"; someone else, who examined them afterward, said that they proposed very material changes in the law. I think likely there was an honest disagreement, but it led to a great deal of debate here, and such proposals ought at least to have very careful consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree entirely with the Senator from Nebraska, and I hope the Senator from Ohio will not make the request at this time. Let us proceed with the pending bill; we are making fairly good progress with it.

Mr. NORRIS. I think so.

Mr. McKELLAR. It probably is the most important bill which is before Congress at this time; we ought to go on with it; and I hope the Senator from Ohio will not ask that it be laid aside at this time.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I merely wish to make a statement to the Senator from Tennessee. I have been unable to make this request during the last 2 or 3 days, because I have been confined at home by illness, and I regret making the request at this time; but this is a measure of considerable importance, and the bill should be passed today because of certain provisions that go into effect tomorrow, tomorrow being 1 year after the enactment of the Banking Act of 1933. If Senators want to discuss the bill, I recognize that we will have to let it go to a later time.

Mr. NORRIS. Has it not been possible to present this bill to the Senate before today? Why wait until the very last minute?

Mr. BULKLEY. I have explained to the Senator why I was unable to do it.

Mr. NORRIS. But the bill might have been presented by some other member of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the bill has been on the calendar, and I tried my best to get it up, but it was impossible to do it.

Mr. NORRIS. It all comes back to this: We are going to try to adjourn the Congress tomorrow, and everybody is crowding here with important matters of legislation. No one wants to be discourteous; no one wants to interfere with the general program; but I wish to protest that, if we are going to make an attempt to adjourn tomorrow, we must not take up matters of great importance such as this proposed legislation appears to be, according to those who are presenting it. It is not right to the country; it is not right to ourselves; and I do not know of any reason why we should try to do it. If we cannot adjourn tomorrow, there is another week coming, and we can go on then and do the business that is necessary to be done before we adjourn.

Mr. BULKLEY. The difficulty is that certain bankers feel that they are prohibited even from dealing in United States bonds commencing tomorrow unless we shall pass one of the provisions of this bill.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the first I ever heard of it.

Mr. BULKLEY. I appreciate that.

Mr. NORRIS. But we ought not to have to wait until the day before something is going to happen and then ask for a modification. That is one of the principal reasons why the Committee on the Judiciary spent 2 or 3 years, mostly because we were opposed at every step, in considering the anti-injunction bill.

A man who wants to get a restraining order against another man waits until just a few minutes before he is sure of what is going to happen, although he may have known about it for days. Then he goes into court and pleads, "If this injunction is not granted right now, I am going to be damaged." Perhaps he is telling the truth, and the court issues a restraining order. We are now much in the same position. We are told it must be done today, or else the bankers cannot deal in United States bonds. Well, pass this bill next week, they will be able to buy them next week. I do not know any reason why we should try to do all that now, when we have before us a very important bill and are right in the midst of its consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to impress upon the Senator from Nebraska the fact that the Banking and Currency Committee during this session has been one of the busiest committees of the Senate. We had before us for consideration, among other things, the housing bill. We made a report on the banking bill just as soon as it was possible for the committee to consider it. It has been on the calendar 3 or 4 days. We had intended to have it taken up early in the week, but the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Bulkley], who was chairman of the subcommittee which considered and was in charge of the bill, has been ill. It has not been our fault that the bill has not been brought forward sooner.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not blaming the chairman of the subcommittee. I acknowledge now that I believe the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate has been one of the hardest worked committees of this session and the last session of any of the committees about which I know anything at all. I think the committee is to be commended and I do commend it for the work it has done. It has done many wonderful pieces of work.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I am informed there is going to be an amendment offered which will be controversial, with respect to the extension of the operation of private banks in accepting deposits after tomorrow. I object to the matter being taken up right in the middle of the consideration of an appropriation bill. Many of us are interested in the appropriation bill, and I think we should have the regular order. I demand the regular order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Regular order!

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, on the other side of the question just mentioned by the Senator from Michigan there are many private bankers who will go out of business tomorrow unless some relief is given them.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Michigan, as to the amendment which I think he has in mind, that it is entirely acceptable and is not a controversial amendment at all.

Mr. COUZENS. It may be acceptable to the Senator from Ohio, but it is not acceptable to the Senator from Michigan. I have a voice in the matter of legislation, notwithstanding the fact that the Democrats ride over us and write any kind of a damnable bill they choose. I am getting sick and tired of having to swallow everything the Democrats see fit to offer. The bill is entirely objectionable from my point of view in many of its provisions, notwithstanding its good intentions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Couzens] objected, and I join in his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed with an amendment the bill (S. 3231) to provide a retirement system for railroad employees, to provide unemployment relief, and for other purposes; that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Lea of California, Mr. CROSSER of Ohio, Mr. MILLIGAN, Mr. HOLMES, and Mr. REECE were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 9826. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State highway commission to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Eleven Points River in the northwest half of section 31, township 25 north, range 3 west, 8 miles northeast of Alton, on route B in Oregon County, Mo.;

H.J.Res. 370. Joint resolution to protect the revenue by regulation of the traffic in containers of distilled spirits; and

H.J.Res. 373. Joint resolution to protect the revenue by requiring information concerning the disposition of substances used in the manufacture of distilled spirits.

The message further requested the Senate to return to the House of Representatives the message whereby the House concurred in the Senate amendments to the bill (H.R. 6462) to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration; to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development; to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3645) to conserve and develop Indian lands and resources, to establish a credit system for Indians, to provide for higher education for Indians, to extend toward Indians the right to form business and other organizations, and for other purposes, with amendments; that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill, asked for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Howard, Mr. Knute Hill, Mr. Ayers of Montana, Mr. Gilchrist, and Mr. Collins of Mississippi were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

DEVELOPMENT OF INDIAN LANDS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives insisting upon its amendments to the bill (S. 3645) to conserve and develop Indian lands and resources, to establish a credit system for Indians, to provide for higher education for Indians, to extend toward Indians the right to form business and other organizations, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives, agree to the conference requested by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. Wheeler, Mr. Thomas of Oklahoma, and Mr. Frazier conferees on the part of the Senate.

RAILROAD EMPLOYEES' RETIREMENT SYSTEM

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives insisting upon its amendment to the bill (S. 3231) to provide a retirement system for railroad employees, to provide unemployment relief, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. DILL. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. Wheeler, Mr. Wagner, Mr. Brown, Mr. Hastings, and Mr. Hatfield conferees on the part of the Senate.

REGULATION OF PUBLIC-GRAZING LANDS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I understand that the House has just requested the Senate to return to the House the message whereby it concurred in the amendment of the Senate to House bill no. 6462—the grazing lands regulation bill. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate accede to the request of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H.R. 9826) granting the consent of Congress to the State highway commission to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Eleven Points River in the northwest half of section 31, township 25 north, range 3 west, 8 miles northeast of Alton, on route B in Oregon County, Mo., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ADJUSTMENT OF INDUSTRIAL LABOR DISPUTES

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask permission out of order to introduce a joint resolution and to have it referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and to make a very brief statement with reference to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas introduced a joint resolution (S.J.Res. 143) to effectuate further the policy of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas is recognized.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the joint resolution which I have introduced, and which will be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, is very brief. It contains only a few paragraphs and represents what to some of us is believed to be the minimum of legislation which is now required in connection with the settlement and adjustment of industrial labor disputes.

It is well known that the subject matter has received prolonged consideration by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor and that a bill relating to the subject is pending on the calendar. A great deal of very important legislation has been discussed and disposed of during the present session, but the subject matter of industrial labor disputes has not been taken up. There are threatened controversies which, it is thought, make necessary the existence of some machinery for the investigation of the controversies and to assist in their adjustment.

The joint resolution provides for the establishment of a board or boards by the President, authorized to investigate issues, facts, practices, or activities of employers or employees in controversies arising under section 7 (a) of the Industrial Recovery Act, or which are burdening or obstructing, or threatening to burden or obstruct, the free flow of interstate commerce.

Any board so authorized to be established is empowered, when it shall appear in the public interest, to order and conduct an election by a secret ballot of any of the employees of any employer, to determine by what person or persons or organization they desire to be represented in order to insure the right of employees to organize and to select their representatives for the purpose of collective bargaining.

The boards are given authority to require the production of pertinent documents, and under the draft as it is submitted, upon application of the board or upon petition of the person to whom an order is directed, in the enforcement of the order, an appeal may lie as in cases of orders issued by the Federal Trade Commission.

The board is authorized, with the approval of the President, to prescribe such rules and regulations as it deems necessary to carry out the provisions of the joint resolution and to assure freedom in respect to all elections. Penalties are attached for violation of the rules and regulations or for efforts to impede or interfere with the action of the board. The authority under the joint resolution expires June 16, 1935.

The hope is expressed by many Senators that it may be possible to have a report from the committee to whom the joint resolution is referred, and that sometime tomorrow, if the opportunity arises, it may be possible to take up for consideration the joint resolution.

I ask reference of the joint resolution to the Committee on Education and Labor and thank the Senate for affording me this opportunity of outlining the joint resolution.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Arkansas if the joint resolution has been introduced?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. Has it been read twice?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask that it be read twice and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The joint resolution (S.J.Res. 143) to effectuate further the policy of the National Industrial Recovery Act was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the joint resolution in the nature of a substitute therefor, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment in the nature of a substitute will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, has the joint resolution been referred?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution has been referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I desire only briefly to supplement the remarks made by the Senator from Arkansas.

A few days ago a proposal was placed in my hands by the Senator from Arkansas looking to a substitution for the so-called "Wagner bill." A conference of Republicans was called, including all members of the party and Senator Shipstead. The 36 Members of the Senate on this side of the aisle were requested to be present. We held a conference and studied thoroughly the proposal which was placed in my hands by the Senator from Arkansas. Some suggestions of modifications were made and considered and adopted. Those suggestions yesterday were placed in the hands of the Senator from Arkansas, who unquestionably consulted with the President. After further conference today, an agreement was reached by a great majority of the Members on this side to cooperate with the President, and to accept and support the proposal offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

I only hope that if the reference has not been made to the committee under the rule, after the joint resolution is read twice it may be considered without further reference. If the reference has been made, as probably it should be, I hope that almost immediate consideration may be given the joint resolution, so that we may consider it tomorrow, in the hope that we may adjourn the session tomorrow evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Oregon what the Senator, of course, knows, that a request for unanimous consent for immediate consideration would be in order.

Mr. McNARY. I am not suggesting immediate consideration. I am familiar with the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair is sure the Senator is.

Mr. McNARY. In order to keep this matter from going over, I asked that the joint resolution be read twice. That gives it such a status that it can be brought before the Senate tomorrow or can be referred to the committee tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I understand that the request was granted that the joint resolution be read twice. It is my expectation that the committee will report it promptly.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, as I understand, the matter of referring this joint resolution to the committee is a formal one. The subject matter of the joint resolution has been under consideration and study by the Committee on Education and Labor for from 2 to 3 months. We have pending on the calendar a bill which the committee favors. I understand that it is felt that the provisions of this joint resolution—which, after all is said and done, are but one or two sections lifted out of the bill pending on the calendar—should now be considered as a substitute and as a temporary measure pending the convening of the next Congress.

I see no reason why there cannot be an immediate report, because, as I said, the committee have studied the matter and are familiar with it, and there is no reason why they cannot report at once to the Senate and have the Senate make a choice as to which measure it prefers.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I wish to add to what has been said by the Senator from Massachua few moments ago, the further statement that the joint resolution is not intended to be permanent legislation on the subject.

Mr. WALSH. It is merely, as I understand, in the nature of an amendment to the National Recovery Act, which expires next June.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The joint resolution is intended to obviate the necessity of the Congress' remaining in session for a prolonged or indefinite period to deal with a very important subject matter, namely, industrial labor disputes. It is recognized, I think, by all of us who present the joint resolution, as temporary and but a partial treatment of the subject.

Mr. WALSH. I simply desire to say in conclusion that the subject matter is not new to the committee, and there is no reason why a committee meeting cannot be held very shortly and a report made.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 9830) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental general and emergency appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1934, and June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I desire to recall to the Senate just exactly what is the point of departure in the consideration of this particular amendment. I do this for the benefit of those who have not been present during the discussion.

On page 86 of the bill, on line 6, is a committee amendment. The committee amendment is:

Provided, That not exceeding $400,000,000 in the aggregate-

Then there is a reference to the subject matter of where that money shall come from; and this committee amendment has been further amended now by the committee by making the sum that shall be permissible for allocation $500,000,000.

The remainder of the provision is:

Provided, That not exceeding $500,000,000 in the aggregate of any savings or unobligated balances in funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may, in the discretion of the President, be transferred and applied to the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933 and/or title II of the National Industrial

And so forth. It will be observed that the provision first limits the amount which the President may take, although it does not specifically say that a specific amount shall be taken by him. It is simply that under this amendment he may allocate any amount from $1 up to $500,000,000 of the savings or unobligated balances of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. "He may do this", says the bill, "in his discretion."

All right. It is asserted by those who feel in the fashion that I do respecting this matter that if he is to have the discretion to determine whether he will allocate from $1 to $500,000,000 of the funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that are savings or unobligated balances, he should have the discretion to determine just exactly how much, even if it exceeded $500,000,000, he would allocate in the fashion that the bill determines. When first we accord him the discretion as to amount—because he is not obligated to allocate $500,000,000; any sum within that particular sum he may allocate as he sees fit-and when, in addition to that, we say that he may take these funds from the unobligated balances of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in his discretion, is it not far better that we eliminate entirely the question of amount that thus is inserted in the bill, and give him the discretion to do exactly as he sees fit?

I have upon my desk the proceedings that took place in the House. There the very able chairman of the particular committee having the bill in charge stated that the total setts and also the Senator from Oregon, and to what I said | amount which might be allocated under this particular section was $573,000,000. I take his figures because I am not familiar at all with the computations that have been made.

> If we say to the President that he may take from $1 to $500,000,000 and that he may have discretion to fix the sum as he sees fit, what good reason exists for setting aside $73,000,000 that are put to no purpose at all and to no particular policy at all?

> It is not a question of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; for the President will deal as justly with his creation, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and just as tenderly, as he will deal with any other appropriation of this Congress or that he himself may have been responsible for in the past two sessions. So why limit the discretion? And the point that is at issue here between the gentlemen who represent the committee and some of us who are interested is simply omitting the words italicized in lines 6 and 7:

Provided, That not exceeding [such a sum] in the aggregate of-

And letting the sentence read:

Provided, That any savings or unobligated balances in funds of the Reconstruction Pinance Corporation may, in the discretion of the President, be transferred and applied—

And so forth. That is the difference. We want to leave the discretion with the President. They leave the discretion with the President, but say that it shall only apply up to a specific sum, and upon that comes the point of difference between us. I submit that on the logic of the situationindeed, upon the facts which may confront us-it is essential that the President be left with his hands clear in the period that may exist between now and January next, that we shall not be, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La FoL-LETTE | so eloquently said, in the next 2 or 3 or 4 months, as the case may be, feeling conscience-stricken because we have not done all that might have been done for human relief in this distressful hour.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Several Senators have already expressed, for sound reasons, their concurrence in the position taken by the Senator from California; and I hope he will request the yeas and nays on this question.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is my intention.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I think the Senator from California has misunderstood the statement made by the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations on the part of the House.

As a matter of fact, the bill as it came over from the House provided for a direct appropriation of $1,172,000,000 and for commitments amounting to $1,746,000,000.

Those commitments, as the chairman of the committee in the House stated, had to be met, and those commitments were to be met by $574,000,000, which was to be assigned from the unobligated balances of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and funds to be realized by the purchase by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of certain public-works securities. These together amounted to $574,000,000. But, as far as the R.F.C. is concerned, as the Senator having the bill in charge has already stated, they have unobligated balances on hand which amount to about $1,700,000,000, and these would all be affected if the limitation were taken off.

If the limitation of $500,000,000 is made, ample funds are on hand to take care of any unemployment or to afford any immediate relief which may be found necessary during the summer. It does not seem to me that we should, without limitation, provide at the discretion of the President for the diversion of the entire working capital of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words in support of the committee amendment.

During the discussion of the conference report on the banking bill, whereby liberalization was granted to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in making loans to closed banks, I raised the question of the undirected or uncoordinated use of R.F.C. funds. It was then stated by the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency that they were quite satisfied that there were adequate funds in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to take care of the liberalization needed in the release of frozen deposits. It has been quite generally estimated and conceded that it would take about a billion dollars of R.F.C. funds to release frozen deposits.

In the housing bill, which was reported yesterday and is now on the calendar, is a provision to which I wish to direct the Senate's attention. Section 4 provides that, for the purpose of carrying out the act-

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall make available to the Administrator such funds as he may deem necessary and the amounts of notes, debentures, bonds, and other obligations which the Corporation is authorized and empowered to have outstanding at any one time under existing law is hereby increased by an amount sufficient to provide such said funds.

No estimate is provided there, but in view of the fact that $200,000,000 is appropriated for this Corporation to provide a 20-percent guaranty, or the Government's share of the guaranty provided by the bill, the total will be five times that, or another billion dollars, so that there would be a billion dollars to be called for under this measure, there would be a billion dollars under the bank releases, and certainly there will be a limitation on the money to be used for these other activities as provided in the bill. I hope the committee amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to concur very heartily in what the Senator from Michigan has said. It seems to me quite essential that we maintain the Reconstruction Finance Corporation at real strength. If we go through the various statutes which have been enacted, particularly those which have gone through the Committee on Banking and Currency, although I do not have them all in mind, I know it will be found that in almost every instance the source of the money has been the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. If the pending amendment should be agreed to, there would be a limitation on the Reconstruction Finance Corporation I fear, so that they could not perform their functions.

As was pointed out by the Senator from Michigan, we are asked to provide money for the housing program from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and the housing measure is just as important a relief measure as any other, a sounder one, in some ways, in the furnishing of adequate relief

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does the Senator mean to imply that the President would cripple the R.F.C.?

Mr. ADAMS. I mean to say that I am not willing to put into his hands the power to cripple the agencies which the Congress has created for the fine purposes we had in mind. The President might make mistakes, just as occasionally Members of the Senate do.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the Senator is providing against possible mistakes, that might be a different proposition, but of course the President, in the exercise of his discretion, will sedulously protect the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, just as he will any other agency of the Government. Does not the Senator believe that?

Mr. ADAMS. I am not prepared to speak for what the President might do. I do not know how he might grade the various agencies of the Government. Under the pending amendment, as it would be if the Senator's suggestion were agreed to, he could take all the Reconstruction Finance Corporation money and put it over into the Public Works Administration, to build post offices, or something else.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator does not mean that, I am

Mr. ADAMS. Oh, yes; I do.

Mr. JOHNSON. That the President might take all the money of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and build useless buildings?

Mr. ADAMS. He could under this amendment. I do not mean that he would; and I do not regard post offices as useless.

The point I was trying to bring out was this: That we have the housing program, which is to be financed out of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. We have the measure providing for taking the frozen assets out of the banks, for the relief of the people of the country, the money to come partly out of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. We are endeavoring to provide loans to industries, to put men to work, to come out of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. There is a multitude of those things.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely desire to make a statement, and I think it will be verified by the Senator from Colorado.

When this matter came up in the committee there were various opinions. Some wanted no limitation at all; some wanted a limitation, first, of $250,000,000; later on a limitation of not to exceed $300,000,000 was asked for. I think that was the limitation proposed by the Senator from Maine. Finally, after going over all the matters, the committee agreed to make it $400,000,000.

It seems to me that that would give a very wide discretion, and it is the result of a compromise, an adjustment, an agreement. I think, therefore, that it ought to be agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. ADAMS. It was not only the result of an agreement after conferences in the committee, but for several days the different agencies of the Government involved were engaged in long conferences in an endeavor to work out their problems, and they reached this solution and brought it to the committee in this form.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is entirely true. Not only were the various opinions of the members of the committee adjusted, but the opinions of the various departments concerned were adjusted, and it seems to me that in such a situation the amendment ought to be agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I am willing to give all the discretion in the world needed to the President; but on an 8-month basis we are providing $150,000,000 a month for relief, and if we put it on a 6-month basis, until the time when Congress will be back, it will be $200,000,000 a month, which would certainly be enough to take care of any necessity which might arise.

There are many programs, such as the refinancing of the irrigation districts in Colorado and in California, which are to be financed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I am not willing to have those programs broken down for the purpose of providing unneeded relief agencies. I would rather see men employed, if it is possible to do so, under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation than to see them reached through the agencies of relief. It seems to me it would be a very serious mistake, as far as these agencies which Congress has created are concerned, if we abandoned all provision for discretion in the President. I think the Senator from California and I agreed only recently that there was such a thing as giving the President too much discretion. I know I differed from my neighbors over here on that very issue.

Mr. LONG obtained the floor.

Mr. COSTIGAN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Is not the first question before the Senate whether we shall increase the amount specified in line 7, page 86, from $400,000,000 to $500,000,000?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina to the committee amendment was to increase the $400,000,000 to $500,000,000, and that was agreed to. The question now recurs on the committee amendment as amended.

THE SILVER QUESTION

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am sending to the desk the leading editorial in the New York Times of today, June 15, 1934, which deals with the silver question.

I very often make prophecies with regard to what will occur as the result of our action or nonaction here, and in most instances I hope to see my prophecies fail to prove true.

When I said on the floor of the Senate some days ago that | the enactment of the silver bill I feared would not help silver but would tend to reduce its price, perhaps I was hoping that, for the good of the country, I would be proven to be a false prophet. But I am advised today that silver fell 40 points, and that on yesterday silver fell 40 points, and that since we passed the silver bill, which I undertook to amend, and which I prophesied would not be productive, mayhap, of good, but of harm, there has been a reduction in the price of silver of 80 points.

There is a gloating editorial in the New York Times which depicts the defeat of the silver bloc by reason of the failure to adopt an amendment which I offered. Apparently this exultation by those opposing the remonetization of silver is justified by the facts. I send this editorial to the desk and ask to have it read, not so much to prove that what I said was true, not so much that I deem myself as being vain enough to cite to the Senate how well I understood what was ahead, but in order that those of us who are interested in silver may have from that point of view an understanding of what we have done and what we will have to do in the

I ask unanimous consent that the editorial may be read. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long] asks unanimous consent to have read from the desk an editorial. Is there objection? The Chair hears

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[Editorial from the New York Times]

NO REMONETIZATION

Before the silver bill, with all its ambiguities, was passed by the Senate it voted down an amendment directly calling for the "free and unlimited coinage" of silver "as basic primary money of ultimate redemption." By this amendment the President would have been "authorized and directed to proceed" to fix the ratio of silver to gold in the dollar, provided that the said ratio should not be at any time "at more than 70 to 1 nor less than 16 to 1." This proposal was subjected to only a brief debate, and then was rejected by a vote of 59 to 18, with 19 Senators not voting. That ended, for the present, the attempt to make the silver bill clear where it is cloudy, and to set up that bimetallic standard of value which Senator Gore had just argued powerfully never really existed at any time and could not possibly be introduced now.

The surprising thing was not that this remonetizing amendment was pressed in the Senate but that it received so small a vote. One reason given for the President's final surrender to the plea that "something must be done for silver" was that the free-coinage sentiment was so powerful in Congress that it threatened to sweep all before it. It could be stopped, so it was argued, only by the President's giving a kind word and a smille to silver. But when the thing was put to the test in the Senate the free-silver strength was less than one-third of that opposing it. It may be said, of course, that the favorable vote would have been larger if Mr. Roosevelt had not made a concession meaning little or nothing. But the vote in the Senate strongly indicates that the claims of the silver men were much exaggerated, and that if they had been squarely met, without throwing to them a sop of any kind, they would have been soundly defeated. Saying no more about that, it remains reassuring that the proposal of remonetization of silver, pure and simple, went down under an overwhelming majority. overwhelming majority.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, it will be noticed that the New York Times, which is an administration organ, says that what was passed was a bill meaning little or nothing. I am sorry that they are correct up to the present time. It means little less than nothing-60 points less than nothing on the present day's market.

I desire to say to my silver colleagues and to the balance of the Senators here, that when we come back in January I hope that events shall have proved that they are right and I am wrong. I hope that time will prove that everything which Senators hope for shall have come true and that everything that I feared would not happen shall have proved to be unfounded. But I am afraid, Mr. President, that my predictions are going to be accurate at this time as those heretofore have been, as much as I hope they will not be.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 9830) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental general and emergency appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1934, and June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGill in the chair). The question is on the committee amendment as amended. Mr. JOHNSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Davis], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. Trammell], and will vote. I vote "yea."
Mr. WALCOTT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. McADOO]. I understand that if present he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore, I am at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNaryl, who is necessarily absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], occasioned by illness. Also the absence of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuys], the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens], who are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. HEBERT. I announce the general pair between the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Keyes] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuys].

Mr. FESS (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted. Mr. FESS. I have a general pair with that Senator, but I understand that were he present he would vote as I have voted. Therefore I allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BULKLEY (after having voted in the affirmative). am advised that the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREYI, with whom I have a general pair, is unavoidably absent from the Chamber. I transfer my pair with him to the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 57, nays 25, as follows:

So the committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to. Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the next committee amendment which appears on page 86, line 24, where I move to strike out $450,000,000 and insert $525,000,000.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to enable me to offer for the committee an amendment changing the language of that amendment, and he can then offer his amendment?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Very well; I yield for that purpose. Mr. BYRNES. In behalf of the committee, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 86 it is proposed to strike out lines 22 to 24, inclusive, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

To meet the emergency and necessity for relief in stricken agricultural areas, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, $450,000,000, to supplement the appropriations heretofore made for emergency purposes and in addition thereto for (1) making loans to farmers for, and/or (2) the purchase, sale, gift, or other disposition of, seed, feed, freight, summer fallowing and similar purposes; expenditures hereunder and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid shall be determined by the President without regard to the provisions of any other laws governing the expenditure of public funds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina in behalf of the committee by striking out "$450,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$525,000,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Senate having by a large vote just indicated lack of confidence in the discretionary use of power by the President of the United States in this extraordinary emergency, it is with some lack of hope and enthusiasm that I endeavor to restore the amount provided for drought relief to the figures contained in the message of the President of the United States and in the estimate submitted by the Director of the Budget. The drought which is now affecting a great portion of the agricultural regions of the United States is unprecedented in character. It has left in its wake a trail of suffering and human misery. It has produced a crisis insofar as the animal population of that area is concerned. I visited certain portions of the State of Wisconsin recently and it is beyond my ability to describe the actual conditions which exist in those areas.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes], in response to an inquiry by the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Shipstead], indicated that certain recent rains in the drought area were the justification of the committee, in part at least, for reducing to the extent of $75,000,000 the Budget estimate and the figure recommended by the President of the United States in his message. The fact of the matter is, Mr. President, that in many of the drought-stricken areas the recent rains have come too late to be of benefit.

That the rains in recent weeks or days in many instances have come too late is demonstrated by the fact that the Department of Agriculture is almost daily adding counties to the list of emergency and secondary areas. On June 12 the Department of Agriculture added, as secondary areas, counties in Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Oregon, Wisconsin, and Wyoming. On the 14th of June the Department issued a statement or press release indicating that emergency areas had been designated that day by the Department in Arizona, Colorado, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah, Wisconsin, and Wyoming. This is a clear indication that we cannot rely upon the recent rains as a justification for reducing the estimate made by the President of the United States in his message, as supplemented by the estimate of the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, this is an extremely important discussion. I trust that we may have greater quiet on the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Senators must bear in mind that so far as the drought area is concerned, there is a cumulative effect. I hold in my hand a map showing the pasture conditions in the United States. It is one of the criteria of rainfall and of the effect of the drought. The areas may be seen by looking at this map, which is of June 1, 1931. It will be seen that the primary area in pasture condition was somewhat limited in character. In 1932 it was not so severe, although it manifested itself in that year. In 1933 the area was again confined to somewhat the same territory as in 1932; but in June 1934 we find that this whole midcontinent region, and extending as far east as the State of New York and as far west as the State of New York and as far west as the State of Newada, was involved.

I have here another map, Mr. President, showing the tame hay situation for the same years. It will be noticed that insofar as the drought condition in past years are concerned, the map shows the same cumulative effect of drought in the years 1931, 1932, and 1933 that is revealed so far as the pasture conditions are concerned, and, of course, in 1934 we find this wide-spread area affecting some of the most important agricultural regions in the United States

Here is the condition so far as the oats crop is concerned, showing the same tendency of an accumulated effect of drought in 1931, again in 1932, again in 1933, and then culminating on top of those 3 years of deficient moisture we find the terrible calamity of this year spreading over this great agricultural region of the United States.

Mr. President, I submit that it is entirely illogical to say that because we have had recent rains we may well afford to ignore the estimates of the Bureau of the Budget and the President of the United States, based upon all the information which they have been able to gather through the agency of the Agricultural Administration, the Emergency Relief Administration, and other agencies of the Government that have been mobilized and are concentrating upon this situation.

Here is my own State, one of the greatest agricultural States, one of the leading dairy States of the Union. I ask Senators to contemplate the character of the calamity that has descended upon the people of that State. The counties in red on this map are the counties which are in the so-called "emergency area." There are 17 of them. Some of them—most of them, in fact—are in the heart of one of the finest dairying sections of the world. Many of them, as will be seen, are located along the Mississippi River. In normal times they are well watered, containing many bottom lands.

The counties in black are the so-called "secondary" counties; and I may say that the distinction between emergency counties and secondary counties has only one significance. The emergency counties are counties in which the purchase of cattle is being undertaken by the Department of Agriculture; but, so far as the drought conditions are concerned, there is relatively little difference in the effect upon the farmers in the counties which are in the secondary area and those which are today in the primary area.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President-

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Approximately what proportion of the State of Wisconsin is affected by drought conditions?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There are 42 counties now designated as being in either the primary or the secondary area. There are in all 70 counties in the State of Wisconsin. But, Mr. President, every day I am receiving telegrams and letters, not only from the farmers themselves but from the county agents, from teachers in the agricultural extension work, pleading that the counties which are now in the secondary area be included in the emergency area; and, in my opinion, with all due respect to the committee which considered this matter, it is gambling with the welfare and the fate not only of farmers in the State of Wisconsin but of farmers in all other States that have been afflicted by this | situation if we are simply to assume that because, perchance, there has been a little rainfall, we can lop off from this appropriation $75,000,000.

In the past few days, Mr. President, I have had hanging upon the walls of the Senate pictures taken in some of the best dairy counties in the State of Wisconsin, showing the actual conditions that exist in those regions. Believing that those pictures could tell a more adequate story than I was capable of telling, I had hoped that they would impress upon Senators the dire distress of the farmers in my own State.

Mr. President, there is no constitutional question, there is no other question, involved here. When it came to a fight to provide funds for the relief of the unemployed in part from appropriations by the Federal Government, we met the constant resistance of those who contended that it was no function of the Federal Government to come to the relief of men and women who were out of work; but on all sides it was admitted that it had been the traditional policy of the Government of the United States since it was organized to come to the relief of its citizens who were suffering from the class of calamities which are commonly called acts of God.

The first such appropriation which I now recall was late in the late eighteenth century, when an appropriation was made by Congress to relieve the citizens of Alexandria, Va., who had been the victims of a fire. Since that time, in case after case, extending down through all the history of the Republic, in every instance where a calamity of a natural kind has been visited upon sections of the United States or upon communities of the United States, the Federal Government, be it said to its credit, has, without exception, come to the relief of its stricken citizens.

I stood shoulder to shoulder with other Senators upon this floor in 1930 and fought to the best of my ability to secure adequate appropriations to take care of the situation which confronted the farmers of the Southwest when a terrible drought afflicted the people of that region.

Mr. President, what is the break-down which the President gives in his message of the sum of $525,000,000 which he recommends to meet this extraordinary emergency? It is as follows:

- 1. $125,000,000 for special work program and human relief.
- 2. $75,000,000 for livestock purchase in addition to the funds already available under the Jones-Connally Act.
  3. $100,000,000 for shipping, processing, and relief distribution
- of purchased cattle.
- 4. $100,000,000 for loans to farmers to finance emergency feed purchases and shipments.
- 5. $50,000,000 for emergency acquisition of submarginal farms and assistance in relocating destitute farm families.
  6. $50,000,000 for work camps to afford employment in the
- drought area for young men principally from cities and towns.
  7. $25,000,000 for purchase of seed for 1935 plantings, and for loans to get seeds into farmers' hands.

I submit that it is not humanly possible for any man or any group of men to estimate what sum of money will be needed to meet the barest, urgent necessities of this calamity in the vast region of our country which is afflicted.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGill in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The action of the committee was taken very largely on this state of facts: We accepted absolutely the recommendations of Mr. Hopkins as to drought relief. The reason for cutting out the $75,000,000 was that, according to the testimony of Mr. Hopkins, that sum was to be devoted to two proposals. One was to buy marginal lands, and $25,000,000 more was to be for the purpose of buying seed for 1935. The committee thought that those two items might well be left out. That was my understanding, and I think it was the understanding of the other members of the committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I may say that that statement has already been made. I am not in favor of earmarking this money. I cannot say that $125,000,000 will be needed for this purpose, and $75,000,000 for that purpose. Events and conditions are changing too rapidly for any man or any group of men, as I said a moment ago, to sit down and decide, first of all, how much money is needed for any particular purpose, and, secondly, how much money is needed in a total amount to meet the situation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President-

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Just a moment, if the Senator will permit me.

The President, in his message to the Budget Director, submitted a tentative break-down, but in the conference which the President held at the White House-and I am sure I am not breaching any of the proprieties-he made it perfectly clear to a large number of Senators and Representatives who were gathered there that it was impossible for him, armed as he was at the time with the latest telegraphic information from all of this vast territory, to tell'exactly how much money was going to be needed for any particular purpose. He admitted frankly that these were simply the best estimates that could be made at the time.

I say that no Senator and no group of Senators and no committee can sit down and say just exactly how much money is to be needed for any particular purpose. It may be the sum which has been fixed in the President's message will prove to be totally inadequate. On the other hand, if there shall be a very fortunate turn in circumstances, if the rainfall shall be unusually bountiful in the months to come, it may be discovered that the sum of money provided will be more than is needed. Here, at least, is one place where I urge upon the Senate that it leave it to the discretion of the President to decide whether or not these sums shall be spent, and how they shall be spent. I feel certain that the President of the United States is just as anxious as is the Committee on Appropriations, or any member of it, to expend as little money as possible, and, at the same time, do a decent job of American relief, in the face of one of the worst disasters this country has ever experienced.

The Senator picks out two items in the tentative breakdown.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator misunderstood me, evidently. What the committee did was to recommend the appropriation of $450,000,000, to be used by the President for any purpose for which he saw fit to use it in dealing with this drought situation. There is no breakdown about it, there is no division about it, but the reason why the figure $450,000,000 instead of $475,000,000 was accepted, was that Mr. Hopkins testified before the committee that $75,000,000 was to be devoted to permanent improvement, rather than to relief.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What I started to say, before the Senator interrupted me, was that out of this total figure he picks two items in the tentative break-down of the President, and because, forsooth, they strike him, as a member of the committee, as being something more or less permanent in nature, he advocates their elimination.

I say that no man can tell how much money is to be needed to do the work that has to be done in the areas which have been afflicted by the drought, and I say that there is no justification in taking two items of a tentative breakdown, and, upon the basis of their being, in the minds of the Senator from Tennessee and other members of the committee of a more permanent nature, eliminating them from the total amount available to meet the situation.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. DUFFY. On last Friday and Saturday I covered in an airplane a considerable portion of the State of Wisconsin marked in red on the map on the wall, and the conditions are every bit as bad as the senior Senator from Wisconsin has described them, and I might say even worse.

It seems to me that, in spite of the fact that there were some rains last week-end, the situation is so critical and the damage already done is so great that we had better err on the side of letting the President have a little more leeway and discretion, than arbitrarily to cut off $75,000,000 from the amount he determined upon, after getting the very best advice he could obtain from the various governmental agencies.

I certainly agree with my colleague that the amendment he proposes should be agreed to, in accordance with the President's request and suggestion.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the President makes it perfectly clear in his message. He says, "These proposals and the funds required as estimated at this time are", and then gives the tentative break-down.

Mr. President, so far as those two items which the Senator from Tennessee has singled out are concerned, in the first place it may be the best part of prudence for the Federal Government to purchase right now the seed which will be needed, if it is needed at all, for distribution in 1935, before the speculators shall have reached out and optioned or purchased it, and held it for a rise against a failure of the seed crop, or a partial failure of the seed crop, at this time.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. THOMPSON. I should like to ask the date of that message.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. June 9, 1934; just 6 days ago.

Mr. THOMPSON. This year the wheat was entirely destroyed, and also the oats and barley and rye; something not known in my State as long as I have lived there, since 1881. I am thoroughly satisfied from all reports which I can get that the estimate made by the Senator from Wisconsin in regard to the drought relief is more nearly correct than that contained in the bill. I heartily concur in the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In regard to the emergency acquisition of submarginal farms and assistance in relocating destitute farm families, which is also in part the justification of the committee for reducing this amount, I may say it is perfectly obvious, Mr. President, that in some of these areas there is no possibility for the farmers to survive. It is a question, then, of whether they will be removed from this submarginal land and placed upon lands where they may have an opportunity to recapture their economic self-sufficiency or whether the Federal Government or the States or the counties will attempt to support them and their families on the areas upon which they are now located.

I desire to quote briefly, Mr. President, from the survey of the drought situation prepared and issued by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the Department of Agriculture:

Crop prospects declined seriously during May, and the country Crop prospects declined seriously during May, and the country now faces an acute shortage of pasturage, hay, and forage that will necessitate a sharp curtailment of livestock numbers, according to a preliminary telegraphic survey of the situation by field statisticians of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. Although the official estimates of crop conditions on June 1 will not be available until Friday, June 8, it is already evident that the condition of early crops is bad over a large part of the country, and the continuation of the drought from week to week is causing uneasiness regarding corn and late forage crops, which have been the continuation of the drought from week to week is causing uneasiness regarding corn and late forage crops, which have been counted on to partially make up for the marked shortage of oats, barley, and hay which cannot now be avoided. Although recent rains have relieved the situation somewhat in certain limited areas, even should good rains come immediately the shortage of pastures and feed will necessitate the reduction of livestock numbers in the worst of the drought areas.

worst of the drought areas.

The drought, which centers in the Dakotas, has seriously hurt early crops not only in nearly the whole Corn Belt but in a larger area which extends eastward to northeastern counties of New York and to the Allegheny Mountains; southward into the northern portion of the Cotton Belt; and bending farther to the south, through the western counties of the Texas panhandle and to the Rio Grande. Drought, accentuated by a shortage of about half the normal supply of water for irrigation and by local shortages of water for stock, is affecting most of the West, south of a line drawn from north central Montana to San Francisco.

In this huge drought area, pastures, spring grains, and early

In this huge drought area, pastures, spring grains, and early hay crops have been scorched by the hot weather following months of low rainfall. A heavy reduction in crop acreage is already in of low rainfall. A heavy reduction in crop acreage is already in evidence as some land could not be planted, some crops have failed to grow, and some of necessity have been pastured. Inasmuch as the present drought area ordinarily contributes a large share of the Nation's wheat, feed grains, and hay, the total production of these will be greatly reduced. Present indications are that the crops of hay and oats in particular will be much below the quantities harvested in any of the last 25 years. This may also be true of wheat, with the possible exception of last year.

As the drought in many respects has broken all previous records, so the condition of pastures and some crops will set new low records for June 1 in a number of States. A few of the States most severely affected will show lower averages than any State has previously reported on June 1 during the 40 years for which comparable condition reports have been secured. The average conditions are the security as a whole previously reported on June 1 during the 40 years for which comparable condition reports have been secured. The average conditions of pastures and of some early crops in the country as a whole are so much below any previous records for this early date that it is difficult to make comparisons or to forecast results.

The great area affected by the drought this year tends to prevent the adjustments usually made to meet logical drought conditions. Farmers whose pastures are furnishing no feed are finding it difficult to buy hay. Many who would move their stock to green pastures are finding no pasturage available. Over large areas sunsatures pastures are finding no pasturage available. Over large areas supplies are nearing exhaustion. Thousands, expecting rain, have carried their stock along by using every forkful of hay, straw, and fodder that they had on their farms.

I may say, Mr. President, that in Wisconsin some of the finest herds in the State have been pasturing upon land which is so barren of feed that they are now suffering in great numbers from a disease called soil impaction, and are having to be destroyed because they have eaten too close to the surface of the ground and have taken so much soil into their digestive canals that they are having to be destroyed.

Where hay crops have made fair growth some are cutting and feeding new hay that will be badly needed next winter.

I do not propose, Mr. President, to detain the Senate at this late hour of the day, but I do want to read briefly a couple of paragraphs from a letter which came into my hands a few days ago.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. GIBSON. I have been very much interested in what the Senator from Wisconsin has said with respect to the area covered by the drought. But there is another area which is not mentioned in the report he has read. In one county in the State of Vermont the hay crop has been practically destroyed. The pasturage is in practically a state of ruin. I am just in receipt of a telegram to the effect that one town has today made application for an allotment of $5,000 to take care of the situation in that township.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thank the Senator for his contribution. It simply confirms the contention which I am trying to support here that no man or group of men can tell what the effect of the drought will be, how far it will spread, or what its cumulative effect will be. Should we happen, Mr. President, to have a shortage of rainfall in the month of August, all the forage crops upon which many of the farmers are now depending for feed may be wiped out.

I desire to read just a few paragraphs from a letter from the farm supervisor of the State Board of Control of the State of Wisconsin, who is in charge of the various dairies which are located at the State charitable and penal institutions. Because of the nature of his work he has to travel about the State, visiting and supervising the work of caring for these dairies. He says:

I regret that it was not possible for me to talk personally with you before your departure for Washington, as I should like to lay before you a word picture of the predicament our best dairymen find themselves in as a result of an unprecedented series of both before you a word picture of the predicament our best dairymen find themselves in as a result of an unprecedented series of both winter, spring, and summer drought.

Our contact is with the better class of Holstein breeders. Last week I visited breeders at Berlin, Waupaca, Oconto, and Marinette. Of the 25 good breeders visited, only I had any silage, hay, or other fodder. These farmers had all turned their cattle to pasture. We went over the pastures while looking at the animals and found all of the cattle in pathetically thin condition and reduced in milk flow to a point averaging less than half the normal production of these herds in years past. Most cows lose from 100 to 150 pounds body weight when turned from dry feed of the barn to good pasture. The pastures into which these cattle have been turned afford not enough feed to sustain the body weight and make possible any sustained milk production. Even along the banks of streams and in bogland, through which cattle ordinarily could not travel at this period of the year due to miring, we found no grass whatever, but cracks in the soil several inches in depth. We were not on a pasture where a golf ball could not be seen at 30 rods' distance. The condition was true throughout this entire area of sandy soil.

Yesterday I visited some of the old reliable Holstein breeders in the vicinity of Argyle, Mount Horeb, Dodgeville, Mineral Point, and Barneveld. This is a territory of fine, prosperous farms where excellent herds have been maintained for many years. The soil is heavy and contains natural limestone. The territory is almost is heavy and contains natural limestone. The territory is almost nationally known for blue-grass pasture and excellent Holsteins. On a farm 8 miles from Argyle we found cattle being lifted to their feet after freshening by means of an improvised hoist made from a wire stretcher and parts of a horse saddle. On five other farms we found that it had been necessary for the farm help to assist cattle to their feet following freshening. These cattle are so thin and weak that they are not able to stand broadside against the wind. Within 5 miles of Argyle a farmer milking 22 cows marketed the day before yesterday 172 pounds of milk from a herd of well-bred cattle.

In this territory, which nominally carries over a large amount.

a herd of well-bred cattle.

In this territory, which nominally carries over a large amount of hay, we found not a single farmer with a fork full of hay or other forage on his place, nor one with any silage for summer feeding. These farmers all owned the land on which they are living, and in two cases this land had been in the family from the day it was homesteaded. These are nominally among the most prosperous dairymen of the State and have tremendous investments in cattle, land, and buildings.

Mr. President, I appeal to the Senate to restore the amount to that carried by the Budget estimate and recommended by the President in his message. Senators must bear in mind that the amendment will go to conference, there being nothing in the bill when it passed the House covering drought relief. If the amount shall be reduced, as suggested by the committee, to $450,000,000, then there will be no possibility of that amount being raised in conference. On the contrary, the amount will be in jeopardy of being reduced below $450,000,000.

The people in this vast area have a right, in view of the traditional policy of this Government since its foundation, to come to the aid of citizens in distress because of calamities brought on by act of God, to expect the Congress, before it adjourns, to provide adequate funds to meet not only the suffering of animals but the suffering likewise of men, women, and children who have worked long hours and given their all to build up their communities and the Nation, and who constitute a group of citizens in this Republic who have never failed to come to its support in times of stress.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I want to call to the attention of members of the Appropriations Committee the fact that the President's message asking for $525,000,000 for drought relief was based upon estimates arrived at after a very thorough examination of the drought-stricken areas by the Emergency Relief Corporation, by the Department of Agriculture, and by the Rural Credit Corporation. Their estimates called for $525,000,000, and were approved by the Budget and asked for by the President.

At a meeting of Senators and Members of the House representing 16 different States, Mr. Chester Davis, who laid the facts of the survey before the conference, when asked if $52,000,000, in his opinion, would be sufficient, said "It would be sufficient if we get rain." He did not say it would be sufficient or that we would need it whether or not we should get rain. He said it would be sufficient if we get rain.

In some areas there has been some rain, but I beg Senators to remember that the Secretary of Agriculture is quoted as saying that the ground is so dry that in order to stop the drought and bring on forage crops the country must have an inch of rain every week throughout the summer.

The reduction in the appropriation is evidently made on the assumption that the drought is broken. The drought is not broken. The $525,000,000 included in the amendment is assumed to take care of the damage that has already been done. We do not know what is the damage that may be encountered later. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin] said the drought exists in Vermont. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. Robinson] told me the drought in Indiana is not broken. In the Mississippi Valley, where we have had some rain, the drought and its effects are not changed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. Perhaps I may make a contribution of information as to the drought condition of the southwest. Only yesterday the Department of Agriculture was obliged to enter into the drought relief area 10 of the 14 counties in Arizona. So far from being broken in the Southwest, the drought is continuing.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I thank the Senator. The drought areas are spreading like a prairie fire and we do not know when it will stop.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if we should raise the amount to $525,000,000 and it should not be necessary to use it, the Department would not have to use it, would they?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. No, indeed.

Mr. President, to meet the devastating damage done in the drought area is like trying to put out a fire in the house. We do not know how much water will be required. The drought is still spreading, and we do not know how much money we must have in order to take care of the damage and take care of the people. The representatives of the Department of Agriculture said $525,000,000 would do if we get rain, but it is not raining in many parts of the country, and where we have had rain there has not been sufficient to break the drought.

The allocation of funds, so much for this and so much for that, is like a situation where we might undertake to fight a fire in the house and we would say we will devote so many gallons of water to this room and so many gallons to that room. The money has to be spent where it is needed. We will have to have the funds wherever they are needed and for whatever purpose it is necessary to use them.

I wish to say to members of the Committee on Appropriations that if they cut this appropriation on the assumption that the drought is broken and that it is not spreading, they acted under a misapprehension, and the consequences of that act may bring such devastating suffering and misery to the people and to the livestock as to make it necessary to call the Congress back into extraordinary session before the fall shall have passed.

I join with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] in urging the Senate to at least restore the appropriation to the amount asked for by the President, based upon the estimates of the three departments of the Government and accepted by the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Thomas of Utah in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. NYE. To the end that the Senator's argument may be slightly enlarged upon, I should like to remind him that when the issue was pending before the Appropriations Committee presentation was made by Mr. Hopkins, Secretary Wallace, and others of the need that then existed. I should like to say to the Senator that so recently as yesterday Secretary Wallace declared that the need for the amount of money which had originally been asked to fight the drought conditions had been in no degree lessened by reason of what some like to call a breaking of the drought during recent days.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I ask permission to print in the RECORD at this point a letter which I received some time ago from a Minnesota farmer's wife.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRINCETON, MINN., May 2, 1934.

Senator H. SHIPSTEAD,

Dear Senator: Just received the return from a cow we shipped Monday. Received a check for $1.33 for a cow we paid $65 for 3 years ago. She brought 75 cents a hundred; total, $5.06; expenses, hauling, etc., was $3.76; our check, $1.33. We shipped another one this morning before we got this check. I know she will bring no more, but what can we do? We have no feed and no prospect of any pasture for some time to come. We have received 5 tons of hay and some grain (drought relief), but now hay is $20 a ton and can't get it at that. It is so dry and the wind is blowing worse every day. Why should the packers be allowed to take advantage of the farmers that have to ship the stock on account of no feed? Is there a way we can be reimbursed for the loss we have to take? My husband has been in bed most of the time since last September with nephritis. I have no help except what I can hire, and that can't be much with the income we have, with a cream check from 76 cents in January to $18 for April, milking 7 cows, when interest on $13 and taxes are paid, feed $10 last month. I work until I am so tired I think I am sick sometimes. Then I had to take a $5 relief order a month, besides as much as I hate the thoughts of being on relief, as I am a Norske and brought up in the old school of trying to help others instead of being helped.

Why not permanent-disability pension as well as an old-people's |

Pension?

I am a graduate and registered nurse. Often thought, Why not a disabled and an old people's pension? It would do away with a lot of misery. I think it is very much appreciated what the Government is doing for relief, but hard to reach where it is needed most, I have been told. Two workers have been here to ask questions, etc. We have a large window out with glass to ask questions, etc. We have a large window out with cloth nailed on both the storm and inside windows sufficient head of Schaeffer's bed that keeps pounding in this awful wind. It is nerve-wracking, but their visits did not help that any. Thank you. Excuse the long letter. We know you fight our battles at Washington.

MRS. E. SCHAEFFER.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I desire to invite attention to the President's message on this particular subject, in which he said:

These wholly tentative estimates have been made upon the basis of present and probable conditions. I believe the present emergency can be effectively met by an appropriation of $525,000,000. Only such portion, of course, will be used as becomes absolutely necessary. We are dealing with a rapidly changing problem and it is important that the authorization should be flexible funds can be allotted to the several Federal agencies as required.

I will say that the last sentence deals with the last amendment that we lost.

I do not see any reason why the subcommittee should not accept the $525,000,000; and if they find that the President does not want the $525,000,000, it will be a simple matter to reduce the amount.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I think the Senators who have spoken with reference to this amendment are laboring under some misunderstanding as to the attitude of the com-

The reason why the amount of $450,000,000 was put in was because it was the highest amount that the members of the committee who were trying to support the President's program could get. Our colleagues across the aisle, acting in the utmost good faith-I do not say other than that-insisted that $300,000,000 was all that would be required; and, as a matter of fact, the division in the committee was very close.

The amount was crowded up from $300,000,000 to $350,-000,000, and $450,000,000 was the outside amount that could have been put through the Appropriations Committee by reason of the opposition of Senators who sit across the aisle.

The members of the Appropriations Committee heard the evidence.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ADAMS. I do. Mr. BORAH. I take it, then, that the amount which was put in was not satisfactory to the committee as a whole.

Mr. ADAMS. No; some wanted more and some wanted

Mr. BORAH. I was wondering how the Senator from Colorado felt about the matter.

Mr. ADAMS. Personally, I should be glad to have more; but I think there was a balance of a single vote that put the amount at $450,000,000, and I think some Senators underestimate what $450,000,000 is. We have gotten so in the habit of talking in big figures that we do not understand what they mean.

The Senator from Wisconsin says that no man can tell how much may be needed. That is true. No man can say with assurance that $525,000,000 is the amount that is needed, any more than another man can say that $450,-000,000 is needed, or another man can say that $300,000,000 or $350,000,000 is needed. It is a matter of judgment. The President gathered the evidence that he had. Before the Committee on Appropriations were the same men, or at least the heads of the departments. They gave their evidence. The evidence was given consideration, and I do not question the good faith of those who made the estimates. They were not men who were regardless of the suffering in the drought areas, nor were they ignorant of the extent of it.

I think perhaps the comment would be justified that in 1930, as I recall, a battle was waged here by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan], and the issue then was whether or not the Federal Government owed any obligation to the individual citizen, and they were defeated, if my reading of the RECORD is correct, upon the first issue.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. No; I would rather not yield until I finish. Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator has used my name.

Mr. ADAMS. Permit me to finish the paragraph in my mind please. The two Senators waged a marvelous fight, and today we find that the matter of principle for which they battled is established, and the issue now is the issue of amount. The question as to the obligation of the Federal Government to its individual citizens is a fight that has been won; and I wished to pay my tribute to the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Wisconsin, who waged that fight.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the statement which the Senator has just made prompts me to ask him to permit me to make this statement as to the distinction I tried to make in my remarks:

There has never been any question, so far as I have been able to find out, as to the responsibility of the Federal Government in coming to the relief of citizens suffering from a calamity of nature, or a so-called "act of God." At the time the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan] and I were fighting early in this depression for funds for unemployment relief, it was admitted on all hands by the most bitter opponents of our proposal that if citizens were suffering from an act of God there was no question but that the overwhelming precedents were in favor of the Federal Government coming to their aid and succor.

Mr. ADAMS. Was the Senator ever able to draw that line satisfactorily in his own mind?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. So far as I was concerned, it seemed to me that it made little difference to an innocent victim of a disaster whether it was economic or an act of God; but some Senators on this floor did draw that distinction. What I say, however, is that that issue is not involved in this case, because, beginning back in the late 1700's, in every case of serious damage from flood, fire, drought, and earthquake the Federal Government has come to the relief of its citizens.

Mr. ADAMS. I shall have to ask the Senator to make one exception. I came to Washington from a flood-stricken community in 1922, when the valley in which I lived and the city in which I lived were almost destroyed, and I was told that it was not the function of the Federal Government to grant relief in such a condition, and no relief was extended.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I shall be glad to place in the RECORD a list of all the instances in which the Federal Government has come to the relief of the citizens who were victims of flood, fire, drought, or earthquake.

I ask permission to insert in the Record the list to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE GOVERNMENT HAS BEEN GENEROUS IN THE PAST IN RELIEVING DISTRESS CAUSED BY DISASTER

It has been the traditional policy of the Federal Government of the United States to come to the assistance of citizens who, through no fault of their own, were suffering from disaster and were unable to provide for their sustenance and relief. It began in 1827, when there was appropriated from the Treasury of the United States $20,000 to assist the citizens of Alexandria, Va., as a result of a fire which swept over that city.

In 1874, Congress appropriated $190,000 for relief necessitated by a Mississippi River flood, and later they appropriated an additional $400,000.

In 1875, $150,000 was appropriated to relieve conditions created by a grasshopper plague.

In 1882, the Mississippi River again went on a rampage, and Congress granted three appropriations from the Federal Treasury to relieve the sufferers in the flood area. One was for $100,000, one for $150,000, and then, later, another appropriation of $100,000

one for $150,000, and then, later, another appropriation of $100,000 was voted in the same Congress.

In 1884, Congress appropriated $300,000 to relieve the sufferers in the flood area of the Ohio River Valley.

In the same year, on account of Ohio and Mississippi River floods, Congress appropriated $200,000.

In 1897, on the occasion of another flood on the Mississippi, Congress responded with an appropriation of $200,000.

In 1906, $1,000,000 was appropriated to relieve conditions growing out of the San Francisco fire and the earthquake; $1,500,000 additional was appropriated to relieve the sufferers from the same additional was appropriated to relieve the sufferers from the same

In 1908, $250,000 was appropriated to relieve the victims of a cyclone in Southern States.

In 1912, Congress appropriated $1,239,000 on account of Mississippi and Ohio River floods.

In 1913, Congress appropriated $654,000 to relieve flood and tornado victims.

In 1913, again the Mississippi and Ohio River flood conditions caused Congress to appropriate $130,000 to relieve suffering and

In 1914, $200,000 was appropriated to relieve conditions in the city of Salem, Mass., produced by a fire.

In 1916, appropriations were made to take care of sufferers because of floods in Southern States.

because of floods in Southern States.

In 1928, Congress appropriated $1,500,000 for the relief of persons affected by a flood in the Mississippi River.

In 1927, President Coolidge made an address to the American Red Cross in which he boasted that the supplies, material, and other services furnished by the Federal Government in that year to the victims of the Mississippi River flood amounted, in his judgment, to over $7,000,000.

APROPRIATIONS TO RELIEVE DISASTER VICTIMS ABROAD

Mr. President, we have not only extended the generosity of the Federal Government to relieve distress of victims of disaster in the United States, but we have likewise evidenced our generosity when disaster has befallen peoples of other lands.

In 1889, we appropriated $100,000 for the destitute citizens in

In 1902, we appropriated $200,000 to relieve the victims of the French West Indian earthquake.

Again, in 1909, we appropriated $800,000 to relieve the victims of an Italian earthquake.

In 1911, famine victims in China received $50,000 from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. ADAMS. In this case, of course, we are combining a depression and the drought. We have this drought fund, and we have a fund larger than that to meet the depression. It was the ultimate judgment of the committee, as a committee-not the judgment of individual members; and, of course, as the chairman of the subcommittee, I am here speaking the mind of the committee as to the result which it reached as a committee—that $450,000,000, added to the moneys available which have been detailed before, would meet the problem as the President stated it in his message adequately, while conceding, of course, that no man knows how far it may go.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I simply desire to say in that connection that Florida suffered terrible loss from hurricanes in 1926 and again in 1928. Thousands of people were drowned; cities and towns and communities were practically destroyed. Florida never got any appropriation from the Federal Government. That storm came up from Puerto Rico. Puerto Rico was terribly damaged, and I think we appropriated $5,000,000 for her relief, but nothing was appropriated to the State of Florida.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, there are two things in which we are interested. We want to provide adequate funds, and, on the other hand, we do not want to forget entirely the taxpayer. We want to go as far as we can, but there is a stopping point.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, my statement was not intended to be in opposition to this drought relief. I voted for it before and I expect to vote for it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I desire to offer to the committee amendment on page 87 an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 87, after line 21, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, however, That no funds appropriated by this title shall be loaned, granted, or donated, either directly or indirectly, to any commission, board, or instrumentality created by Congress or other public authority for the sole purpose of bringing into being or carrying into execution any self-liquidating project, unless the obligations of such commission, board, or other instrumentality shall be guaranteed as to payment of interest and principal by a State, county, municipality, or political subdivision of a State, county, or municipality, or unless such obligations are otherwise adequately secured, and the income from such self-liquidating projects shall not be accepted as adequate, and this proviso shall apply to any appropriation heretofore made and unexpended for like purposes as those mentioned in title 2 of this

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I should like briefly to explain the purpose of this amendment. In the first place, it has nothing whatever to do with the orderly processes of making loans as contemplated by the original act or by this amendment, but there is growing up what I conceive to be the most fruitful source of log-rolling and "pork barrel" legislation I have ever seen, and it ought to be nipped in the bud before it goes any further.

At this session of the Congress probably half a dozen bills have been passed creating some little commission or board. vesting in it the authority to create or bring into being some self-liquidating project, and allowing it to go to the Public Works Administration-at least that is the purpose of it-and borrow money from the Government, which is turned over to such board or commission without restriction and without regulation, and it puts up nothing at all as security except the fees or income from the project.

The proposed amendment has nothing to do with anything except such a commission or board as may be created by Congress or by some State or by some city, having nothing behind it except a license to do a particular thing.

For instance, only a few weeks ago there was created a certain bridge commission, and it was given authority to construct a bridge across a certain important river, and it was given authority to manage, control, and operate that bridge. That particular commission now has filed an application with the Public Works Administration asking for a loan of some two or three million dollars; asking that the money be turned over to it, that it may build a bridge which it will operate for 30 years, and then turn it back to the Government, or else the Government can give it to the

I do not believe that the Public Works Administrator, Mr. Ickes, will allow a thing like that to get by him, but it has been placed in a very favorable position to be acted upon soon. Pursuant to that scheme, which has been devised by some able lawyer, I do not know who, who has figured out the plan, there are now 4 or 5 or 6 other measures providing for things exactly like it which have just been passed by Congress. Last week three or four bills providing for the building of bridges were passed. It may be there are proposals to establish reclamation projects or drainage projects, but whatever they may be they are wrong and should be stopped now. To allow such a commission, without anything to back it, to go before the Public Works Administration and get money from the Government is wrong. It is true the Government is authorized to give itself credit by 30 percent of what it may give to these people, but the Government parts with it, and then at the end of the time, if it ever pays out, the Government will have a free bridge or some other project.

There is only one purpose in this amendment. The purpose is to require some State, some municipality, some political subdivision, or someone to stand behind such projects before the Public Works Administration may advance any money either as a loan or a grant. That is the sole purpose of the amendment, and I think undoubtedly it ought to be adopted because such things should not be allowed.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, under the direction of the committee. I am required to raise the point of order that not in order at this time.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I deny that it proposes general legislation or that it has anything to do with general legislation. This proposed legislation appropriates money and authorizes that it be expended by the Public Works Administration or by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The amendment places a restriction only as to the method of securing that money. It is directly in line with the legislation which we have under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the amendment is germane.

Mr. ADAMS. It is not a question of the germaneness; it is a question of whether it is legislation or not under paragraph 4 of the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the amendment is in order.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the Senate should know that the Public Works Administration is opposed to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky. They take the position that it will prevent municipalities from participating under the Public Works program.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. It has nothing whatever to do with anything excepting such a commission as may be created now, and it has nothing to do with municipalities. It interferes in nowise with their receiving benefits from the Public Works Administration. It deals with commissions which are created for the purpose of bringing into being selfliquidating projects. It means, if there is created some commission with nothing behind it, that it cannot go to the Public Works Administration and borrow money. The amendment has no sort of relationship to municipalities or States or counties. It does not even touch them. It relates only to those things which are created now by the Congress or by a State legislature or by a municipality.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to direct attention to the last part of the amendment, which reads:

And the income from such self-liquidating projects shall not accepted as adequate, and this proviso shall apply to any appropriation heretofore made or unexpended for like purposes as those mentioned in title II of this act.

It seems to be very clear that in the case of municipalities which have attempted to set up projects which are selfliquidating in character, because they collect revenue as the result of their being constructed, they would be barred under the Senator's amendment from submitting those projects and having them approved.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, it has nothing to do with any self-liquidating project, except where a commission is created to bring into being a self-liquidating project. It has nothing to do with cities that have a self-liquidating project or with States where anyone pledges anything to secure it. I tell the Senate and I want it to go on recordit means nothing to me: I am not interested in it-but I say that we have passed four or five measures in cases similar to that which I described. We will say that Jim Smith and John Jones and some others create a commission, and that commission shall have the right to construct a bridge across a certain river and operate that bridge after it is constructed. They are now here asking for a loan from the Public Works Administration to do that work, and the Public Works Administration, if it makes the loan, turns the money over to the men we have named, and there is no restriction placed around them. It will create a greater scandal in the end if it is carried out than the building of the western railroads soon after the Civil War.

Mr. ADAMS. May I ask a question of the learned Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan] as to the last paragraph? I recognize that the Presiding Officer has ruled. Will he explain the last clause?-

This proviso shall apply to any appropriation heretofore made.

Mr. LOGAN. May I say to the Senator that we have not reappropriated any funds left over. In the future when there is set up one of these commissions to bring into being cal subdivision, that they could not make such guarantee this amendment proposes general legislation; therefore it is | a self-liquidating project, it can get no money which is appropriated by this bill, or any remaining over from the previous appropriation.

> Mr. BYRNES. The counsel for the Public Works Administration takes an entirely different view from that expressed by the Senator from Kentucky. The conference of mayors of the United States also takes a different view.

> Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, this amendment was only introduced day before yesterday. I never advised with a living human being about it. If there has been a council of mayors since that time, if anyone has found out about it. they found out about it in the last 48 hours. I did not discuss it with them. It was so simple that I thought the Committee on Appropriations would put that in, or something like it, but they seemed to have misconceived the purpose of it, and so does the Public Works Administration. It does not mean anything like what the very distinguished and able Senator from South Carolina seems to think it means. It is suggested that it is violative of the Constitution, or that it interferes with the States and the municipalities or counties. It has nothing to do with them at all. It stops the setting up of dummy corporations and having them come in and getting money.

> Already millions of dollars have been voted to them. It stops turning money over to commissions which will build a bridge or something else and collect tolls and operate for a period and at the end of that time turn it over to the Government, which then will have a bridge on hand. Of course we all know that the Government at the end of 2 or 3 years will have a bridge on its hands because all of those bridges are going into the hands of the receivers.

> Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the amendment was introduced some few days ago. I did not know and I did not intend to convey that there had been a conference of mayors to pass upon this question, but the executive committee appeared before the Appropriations Committee and filed with the committee their protest against this amendment on the last day the subcommittee was in session. Their position is set forth in the hearings at page 288. Their argument was as follows:

> Under the provisions of the original Emergency Relief and Construction Act the only type of Public Works projects eligible for Federal loans was that which was self-liquidating or selfsupporting in character.

According to the provisions of the act:

"A project shall be deemed self-liquidating if such a project will be made self-supporting and financially sound and if the construction cost thereof will be returned within a reasonable period by means of tolls, fees, rents, or other charges or by such means (other than by taxation) as may be prescribed by the statutes which provide for the project."

This provision in the France of Belief and Construction Act statutes which provide for the project."

This provision in the Emergency Relief and Construction Act made it necessary for most States to pass revenue bond acts before their municipalities could properly qualify for Federal loans. Accordingly, revenue bond acts were adopted by 28 States during the past 2 years. Practically all public-works projects financed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation were secured by revenue bonds. Municipalities and other political subdivisions in many States, unable to issue additional general tax obligation bonds because of constitutional debt limitations, were able, after the enactment of revenue bond laws, to issue such bonds and the enactment of revenue bond laws, to issue such bonds and initiate the construction of much-needed water works and sewage projects as unemployment relief measures.

Municipalities in their attempts to reduce governmental expenditures and property taxes lowered their assessed property valuation to a point where no further bonding could be undertaken without exceeding their constitutional debt limit. Such communities continued to be good credit risks but were simply prevented from issuing general tax-obligation bonds due to these constitutional limitations. Municipalities in many States could onstitutional limitations. Municipalities in many States could not finance public-works projects except by issuing revenue bonds. The National Industrial Recovery Act removed the mandatory self-liquidating provisions of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act. With these restrictions removed, the Public Works Administration has accepted revenue bonds as "adequate security" as defined in the act. In fact, the Public Works Administration has recommended that States pass legislation to enable municipalities. palities and other political subdivisions of the State to issue reve-

Their position, as I gather from the brief filed, is that if the States are forced to guarantee the instrumentality, the corporation referred to by the Senator, to guarantee the payment of interest and principal by cities or by some politi-and therefore they would be precluded from participating | State of Washington which is prepared to build and desires in the loan.

Mr. LOGAN. That is an entirely new conception of the whole matter. Kentucky has more river frontage perhaps than any State in the Nation. If we are going to allow a few men to get together on a public highway and build a bridge across the Ohio River and pledge the income from that bridge, and they can get loans on that without putting up a bond or anything, without doing a thing in the world except to file an application and say it is self-liquidating in its nature, and if the Public Works Administration hold that it is, then it will grant that money without restriction and without control. I would be much better and in effect the same thing if the Government would build the bridge itself in the first place. But here we are delegating the right to some board to build it, to some board to manage it, and all the Government has as security is the promise or the pledge of the income from it without owning anything in the world behind it.

I do not believe Mr. Ickes will authorize a thing of that kind, but my information is that the Public Works Administration is desirous of having that kind of legislation. I do not know whether it is true or not. These things are being placed over there now and given a preferred position, as they are anxious to go to work building bridges and other things throughout the United States. I am opposed to it and that is the reason why I have offered the amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. There is no doubt in the opinion of counsel of the P.W.A. and there is no doubt in the opinion of the gentlemen representing the conference of mayors that the adoption of the amendment would prevent the financing of the projects of the municipalities in the country for sewerage and other projects of that charater.

Mr. LOGAN. How, may I ask the Senator, would it prevent it?

Mr. BYRNES. Because of the language that "no loan shall be made to a board or instrumentality "-

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator has not read it all. It is that "no board or instrumentality created for the purpose of bringing into being and following out the execution of a self-liquidating proposition."

Mr. BYRNES. There is no doubt about it. In the various municipalities of the country this is what has been done. Public utility bonds, as stated in the brief-

Mr. LOGAN. Yes; but what about the self-liquidating nature of the proposition?

Mr. BYRNES. It is contemplated that a portion of these loans at least should be guaranteed by revenue bonds and not merely by the guarantee by the municipality of interest, as would be required under the amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. That may be absolutely true, but this has nothing in the world to do with it, because they are not created by Congress for the purpose of bringing into being that kind of thing.

I am speaking now so far as my own State is concerned. There are two of these bridges proposed across the Ohio River, and it is provided that they shall be built and it is not proposed that they shall put up a thing on earth except a pledge of a mythical income from a mythical bridge which is to be built with real money.

Mr. BYRNES. I simply want to conclude by stating that all the bill provides is that no funds appropriated by this title shall be loaned, granted, or donated to any commission, board, or instrumentality created, not only by Congress but by other public authority, for the purpose of bringing into being a self-liquidating project. Throughout the country projects have been established for the purpose of filing applications, and the States and municipalities cannot guarantee the interest under the constitutions of approximately 28 States in the Union, in the opinion of the attorneys for the P.W.A., and I am satisfied it would do great injury to those municipalities.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question because there is a situation in my State which I think typifies the argument made by the Senator from South Carolina. There is a county in the to build a bridge across Puget Sound. The county may not under the constitution now guarantee the bonds of that bridge for the full amount. A survey of traffic conditions reveals that the traffic over that bridge would be two or three times sufficient to amortize the cost of the bridge represented in utility bonds, which are a very common type of public issue in the State of Washington. They are resorted to by cities. The survey by the Public Works Administration has revealed that there is traffic ample there to take care of the bonds. The bridge is to be owned by the county. I am not certain, from the Senator's explanation and from a reading of the amendment, whether or not it would interfere with such a project.

It is true that this is not a commission, board, or instrumentality that will handle the bridge.

Mr. LOGAN. And it does put up security for anything it borrows from the Government; does it not?

Mr. BONE. It gives these utility bonds on the bridge.

Mr. LOGAN. That is right; but the county itself issues those utility bonds.

Mr. BONE. That is right.
Mr. LOGAN. What I am driving at is the fellow who puts up nothing, who offers no bonds, who comes here without anything except a bond on a bridge that has not yet been built, and a promise to pledge its income and nothing else.

Mr. BONE. Of course my purpose in asking the question of the Senator was this: These bonds are underwritten by a pledge of revenues, and the pledge rests upon nothing except the promise to pay the bonds from revenues to be derived from the operation of the bridge. Pierce County, like all other counties in the United States-I assume that to be the case in all other States-is a municipal corporation. It has certain powers, and under the State law it may issue utility bonds on certain types of public improvements of a utility nature.

This bridge by an act of the legislature was declared to be a public utility, and the county was authorized to issue these bonds, and to pledge the traffic revenues of the bridge to amortize the bonds over a period of years; and these bonds will be pledged to the Public Works Administration to pay for the bridge. I am fearful that this amendment might be broad enough in its scope to prohibit that which was a perfectly logical suggestion to make to the United States Government.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not think the amendment reaches that. Those whom I am trying to reach by this amendment are those who do nothing except to come here to the Public Works Administration and ask for money merely by promising the income. The Public Works Administration is a commission which we have created. So far as I am concerned, the Senator may strike out the States, counties, and municipalities, and the utilities created by them; but we have started in now and have passed in the last 2 weeks something less than a dozen measures having but one thing in view, and that is to go to the Public Works Administration and get money merely by promising the income.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6462) to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes; requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. DEROUEN, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. ROBINSON, Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT, and Mr. EDMONDS were appointed managers on the part of | sacrifices of our sons and brothers drafted into war in a the House at the conference.

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 143) to effectuate further the policy of the National Industrial Recovery Act, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1447) thereon.

ISSUE OF THE HOUR

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, today conditions of Federal Government are such as never before known since the adoption of the Constitution. We should chart our course pursuant to the wisdom and high hopes of the first Republican President-Abraham Lincoln-who expressed our faith at Gettysburg.

Today, for the first time since the will of George III was the law of the land in America, the Federal powers of our Government, both executive and legislative and to a large extent judiciary, reside in the will of one man-the Constitution notwithstanding.

It is true that the constitution of the ancient Republic of Rome, 500 B.C., provided for a dictatorship in time of emergency or war. But the term of a Roman dictatorship ended in 6 months. The demand of the White House today is for unlimited suspension of the law of the land-that his emergency powers be made permanent.

The Roman name for permanent dictator, under the suspension of the constitution, was emperor. When Julius Caesar, the last of the Roman dictators, was believed to be seeking a permanent grant of emergency powers he was assassinated at the foot of Pompey's statue. The American way is better—the ballot booth in the ides of November.

The first great charter of the American Republic-our Declaration of Independence—which we have been reading on July 4 since 1776, tells us that "governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

Today the "brain trust" of the Federal new deal tells us that we shall never go back to the ideas of 1776, and that the term "consent of the governed" has been permanently changed to mean—consent of the White House in Washington.

In place of a democracy we have become a bureaucracy subject to the will of one man, as before the adoption of the Constitution. To that end the laws and Constitution stand suspended, and the White House itself demands that the suspension shall be permanent. That is the issue of the hour, which today we prepare to meet.

All bills for raising revenue—the Constitution providesshall originate in the House of Representatives, the body elected by the voters to express their lawful will in their respective congressional districts. Today, not only bills for raising revenue, but other bills of major consequence, originate in the White House. And the President has the power at his own sweet will to designate how much revenue. He has the power to put out of business any class of people in the United States that he wants to, and he now demands complete censorship of the press. The peoples' respective representatives are compelled to sit around with folded hands until someone calls up the White House. The Senator or Representative who refuses to obey the White House command and vote "me too", is branded as a man who has committed lese majesty.

Instead of a deliberative body of lawmakers assembled to express the will of the people, Congress under the new deal is presumed to be a doormat for the "brain trust" and a handy scapegoat for the blunders of the White House.

I congratulate the 295 Members of the House who, on March 12, had the courage to congeal the first major bolt from White House domination—the 295 who placed the needs of the veterans and their families, as likewise the honor of the American flag, above the commands of the White House and its patronage threats, and above the demands of the Wall Street profiteers who reaped their billions out of the foreign land.

At Verdun and on the Marne, at the St. Mihiel drive, as at Gettysburg and Appomattox, the colors of Minnesota regiments have always waved at the front of the battle line. In the ballot booth of November let us hope the people will not forget that the Executive hand which granted doles of billions and billions to bank and railway and kindred corporations—the beneficiaries of war—penned the veto on just compensation for the brave victims of that war, the sons and mothers in my State, Minnesota, and every other State in the Union.

Among the pledges of the White House incumbent, before election, as expressed in the Democratic platform written in Chicago, was this: "We advocate strict and impartial enforcement of the antitrust laws to prevent monopoly."

After election one of the boldest acts of the new dictatorship was the complete suspension of the antitrust laws for a period of 2 years and 60 days under the N.R.A.-followed by the present demand of the President of an indefinite suspension under a permanent N.R.A.

Homes and consumers have been deprived of all protection from exploiting trusts and monopolies. Not only that, but over 400 trusts already have been legalized under priceboosting codes of the N.R.A., and commanded to do that which the laws of the land for 40 years declared unlawful-namely, to form monopolies in restraint of trade to increase the cost of living of 40,000,000 families.

That is not all. The very heads of these monopolies-the high-salaried officials of the industrials and utilities whose stock boom and stock-market panic of November 1929 started the world depression-are today seated behind the throne in Washington as the President's industrial advisory board to dictate the terms of the price codes-a sustained exploitation.

Nor yet is that all of this new deal of suspending the Constitution and the antitrust laws under the N.R.A.

Though high-powered salesmanship on the New York Stock Exchange started the panic and depression, a highpowered salesman of that stock market—who describes himself as the "assistant of Barney Baruch", the Wall Street broker and preferred client of J. P. Morgan & Co.-is installed by the White House as the N.R.A. administrator. This brigadier general, who never got nearer a battle front than a "fat" office in Washington, is today in command of all American industries and utilities, both State and interstate, and all commerce, both local and interstatethough the powers granted the Federal Government by the Constitution extend only over interstate and foreign commerce. The local grist mill and store and barber shop are today "cracked down" by Washington under the pretense of "interstate and foreign commerce."

Not in the whole history of dictators and emperors from the earliest recorded time, until the present dynasty of Roosevelt II, will you read of a country where a stock salesman is made the national generalissimo to compel all industries and all trades to adopt price-boosting codes to increase the cost of living in all the homes, on all the farms, and on all consumers down to sheets on the bed, the tools of the farm, the denim in a workman's overalls, and the funeral expenses when the family is buried.

Ten years ago, the Minnesota State Legislature voted to memorialize the Federal Government to investigate and prosecute that unlawful graft known as "Pittsburgh plus" which added $10 to $13 per ton to the cost of finished steel consumed by the implement industries and the building industries of the State. Under Minnesota leadership there was finally built up a country-wide association of 29 farming States of the West and the South against the trust graft—Pittsburgh plus. The Federal Trade Commission found that Pittsburgh plus constituted a yearly robbery of $30,000,000 on the farmers of 11 Middle West States alone. The cause, begun by Minnesota and supported by neighboring States, including the American Farm Bureau, was upheld by the Federal Trade Commission under the administration of Calvin Coolidge, and Pittsburgh plus was presumably vestors. It struck off 41 percent of the 11 billions due the made an outlaw for all time.

Look what happens under the new deal. On August 19, 1933, a new steel code with a Blue Eagle is approved by the White House. The advisory board of the President in drafting that code are among the very men who invented the Pittsburgh-plus levy upon American industry. And now behold Pittsburgh plus, wearing the Roman eagle as a halo, comes to roost and takes unlawful toll from our homes, our farms, our mills and foundries, our cars and railways, all building and construction industries, and even toll from State and Federal projects. And this Pittsburgh plus and unlawful graft is declared lawful by the new dictatorship which, in November, we are to be asked to make permanent.

Mr. President, please note that the N.R.A. and its alphabetical cousin A.A.A. went into effect in July 1933. The first industrial code, cotton textile, was approved by the President July 9. Please remember July as the starting point from which to measure the economic effect of N.I.R.A.

with its "crack-down" brigadier.

From July to December, the first 6 months of the N.R.A., only one industrial country on the globe had a setback in industrial production—and that was the United States.

From July to December the industrial production of the United States dropped 25 percent—the heaviest decline for that period of the year in the whole history of the depression.

On the other hand, in the same July-December period of 1932 preceding, the last year of the original depression, there was an industrial recovery of 12 percent. The low point of the original depression was July 1932. Recovery had already begun. There was no longer during the fall of 1932 and early winter of 1933 an emergency such as to justify a dictatorship by suspension of the laws and Constitution.

Something had to be done to justify the declaration for even a temporary dictatorship, let alone a permanent one such as has been established and which can only be overthrown by a return to Congress of an anti-Roosevelt legislature. There was no normal ground for setting up in America the Fascisti program of Mussolini. There was only one way to produce a Nation-wide economic emergency—to paralyze all trade and industry—and that was to close down all banks, the 20,000 financial institutions that are the financial foundation of all business. In March 1933 that very feat of buccaneering was achieved.

The entire banking resources of the United States were locked under an edict from the White House without knowledge or authority of the lawmaking branch of the Government or without warning to the people and the business affected. The entire 20,000 institutions—solvent and insolvent, mostly solvent—were closed down by the order of the new dictatorship. All business was paralyzed. Most industries were crippled. Workmen and school teachers, farmers and merchants could not touch their savings to pay a bill for rent or food. Thus the emergency, which became the pretext for the new dynasty, was created by the administration to foster the ambition of a new Caesar with his eagles.

The N.R.A. proved a "flop." Production fell. Normal employment by industrial demand declined. New imperial devices were tried. Employment was temporarily provided by the doles of the C.W.A. until that ended in a stage of graft.

The N.R.A., which had started in July with brass-band parades and an attack of delirium tremens, was now proceding like a train of locomotor ataxia. Mills were closing. Steel production, which in July before the establishment of the codes, had stood at 60 percent of maximum capacity, had dropped below 30 percent.

Then came the desperate plunge of knocking the dollar of the fathers down to 59 cents, so as to fool the farmer, the workman, and the rest of us into thinking we are getting rich, when we are only getting 59-cent dollars for our crops and wages.

It accomplished this much. It canceled 41 percent of the foreign debt of Europe to the Treasury and American investors. It struck off 41 percent of the 11 billions due the Treasury from the Allied Powers. It struck off 41 percent of the 15 billions due from Europe to American investors in foreign securities. Thereby it was a gift of 10 billions to Europe.

That was not all. We began paying Europe $35 an ounce for an ounce of gold worth $20.67. We paid Europe a bonus of $14 an ounce which must be paid in time by American taxpayers.

The effect of the N.R.A. and A.A.A. and other dictatorial experiments drove $300,000,000 of American gold abroad during the summer months. That 300 million we sold to Europe at the world price of around $21 an ounce.

Now what happens? In the recent month of February alone, that entire 300 millions which we sold at $21 comes back at $35 an ounce—paid out of the Treasury deficit. That 300 millions comes back worth 500 millions—and the gold import dealers and Wall Street speculators make a profit of $200,000,000 at the expense of American taxpayers.

I am told that just before the passage of the bill authorizing the President to raise the price of gold, that the Wall Street bankers, Barney Baruch and his like, placed in foreign banks more than a billion and a half of our currency which, cashed into United States money after the rise, netted them something less than 41-percent profit.

And the expense of it all must be saddled on tax-payers—not merely the direct-tax payer who may "pass the buck" to his patrons, but the indirect-tax payer, the 130,-000,000 consumers in the homes, in the shops, and on the farms, who must pay for all the waste and costs of this racketeering in cost of living.

The 15,000,000 acres of growing cotton plowed under to weave a cloak for high-powered publicity must be paid for in doubled prices of cotton goods for the homes.

The 3,000,000 young pigs that are donated to the packers on the pretense that young pigs are not food must be paid for out of the cupboard allowance of the workers.

The squandering of public funds at the rate of 10 billions annually to pile up a public debt that is now about the World War peak must be paid for by taxpayers and consumers to stagger the industry of years to come—all for the high-powered advertising of a temporary dictatorship that asks to be made permanent, and all it needs to secure that permanency is the election of a supporting Congress in 1934.

Now comes the drought to aid the destruction of food and clothing. It seems to be working hand in hand with the idea of the administration, for it has accomplished the evident purpose of the administration under its "brain trust" ideas even more completely and in much shorter space of time and with less cost to the taxpayers than the administration's fool practices did. I was told that to destroy good food and throw away or waste good wearable raiment was a sin in the eyes of God.

If this administration had taken from the market and stored the surplus, as Republican Senators advocated, it would have shown some sound Christian sense. It seems almost the wrath of God is being visited upon our people because of the silliness of our rulers. In all probability this drought will not be the last, for these come in pairs or by threes, and no doubt next year will see another catastrophe of drought. The administration should conserve, not waste and destroy.

Mr. President, I entered public life as a follower of that gallant progressive statesman, Theodore Roosevelt. Consult the Federal record, and you will find that the average expenditure of the Federal Government during the 7 years of Theodore Roosevelt was about six hundred and fifty millions a year.

Roosevelt II, the "new dealer", diametrically opposite of everything Theodore Roosevelt stood for, is squandering the public funds like a drunken sailor, at the rate of nine hundred millions in a single month. He is squandering on political doles, monopoly codes, and high-powered advertising, and drawing on the Treasury deficit as much public funds in 1 year as would more than support the Federal Government during the entire 7-year period of the real Roosevelt, who stood for the Constitution and government | by the people.

In the name of economy and a balanced Budget, our new dictator cuts down by 25 percent even the lawful allowances of disabled veterans and pares down by 15 percent the pay of Government clerks. Then in the same period he distributes billions and billions to banks and railways, insurance companies and utilities, and drops hundreds of millions in Army camps and military reserves.

Balanced Budget? The deficit is now seven billions since July, and he will run it up to better than ten billions, maybe twelve, before the year is through—and his economy pretense is that he is producing a balanced Budget.

He has demanded and received from a spineless Congress the power of regulating the tariff at his own sweet will, the Constitution notwithstanding.

Now Congress has given him the power to take the $3,300,000,000 appropriated for certain specific purposes to the Public Works Administration and the two billion appropriated to the R.F.C. for specific purposes and use this money without restraint in any way he may desire. This completely abolishes the limitations in the expenditure of $5,000,000,000 which were originally enacted by Congress and puts him in the position of being sole dictator without supervision of this gigantic fund of $5,000,000,000 of the taxpayers' money.

At the demand of the White House there was originally incorporated in the pending deficiency appropriation bill a clause providing that any savings or unobligated balances in existing appropriations be transferred to the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, but the House showed some sense of justice toward the American taxpayer by changing this clause limiting it to any savings or unobligated balances of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation be given to the President to use at his discretion together with money already provided him in similar fashion to entrench further his dictatorship at the fall elections. There is therefore no restraint upon him, and if he so desires he may use this enormous amount of money to further entrench his dictatorship at the fall elections.

New deal! We have gone back to John I (1215) when the farmer barons captured him and at the point of the sword made him sign the Magna Charta which took from him and gave to the people the power of taxation. George III tried to deny to the Colonies the right of the Magna Charta and brought on the Revolutionary War. Taxation without representation was resented by the Colonies, but in the dynasty of Roosevelt II there was evolved a trick machine which was known as the "N.R.A." whose emblem was the Russian blue eagle.

Through this national racketeering association prices to the consumer could be so raised that the crowd of Barney Baruch with their 1,800 factories in foreign countries could, with cheap foreign labor, make the goods we need in this country and ship them in here over our tariff at big buslness profits.

This worked very well to skin the consuming public for about a year, but due to the newspapers getting into their code free speech along about the last of February, they again began to tell the truth to the people as to what was going on in Washington behind the scenes.

The N.R.A. has become a flop unless other power can be had through which censorship of avenues of information to the people can be maintained. Because of the N.R.A. we have had strikes and strikes, ruin and ruin, and bloodshed all over the country.

Our emperor now began to realize that if his international banker friends are to get back their $15,000,000,000 loaned to foreign nations, he would have to get control of the tariff-making power, which he has succeeded in doing. This will be an excellent method of taking care of his international banker friends and at the same time furnishes him with the implements of discipline equal to that of the Spanish Inquisition, to insure the quiescence of any developing enemy to his reelection.

At his will through the reduction of tariff, any business in the country can be put out of commission in a very short time—an excellent political club to continue the fear complex that has enveloped our people ever since his coming to power.

Why, Senators, it is only within the last few weeks that people are again beginning to write letters in criticism of this or that action of our Government where they dare sign their names.

As soon as he gets limbered up this tariff "big bertha" gun and the business men begin to understand how their lives and profit are in the hollow of his hands, the psychology of fear will again possess them and that fear will again be transferred through the business men and their advertisement to the public press, to the radio, to the movies, and to every other means of information the people have to the end that only his praises and the praises of the "slippery deal" will be the monotonous subject of their ballads. God help us.

Mr. President, the power to raise or lower the duties 50 percent amounts in actual practice to a complete surrender of the tariff-making power ordinarily exercised by Congress. More than 50 percent would amount to an embargo, and less than 50 percent would reduce a high protective tariff to the revenue basis of the Underwood Tariff of 1914. Therefore, the White House demanded on March 3, the closing day of the first year of the new dynasty, the powers that had been given him by the last Congress be made permanent and further demanded more powers, including the delegation of the tariff-making powers of Congress to the White House in indirect violation of article I of the Constitution. That is an issue which we are called to meet with our votes in the ides of November-the question of whether the people want the revenue power of government in the hands of their representatives or in the hands of a single ruler. The votes of a majority of this Congress can repeal but if His Majesty refuses to sign such a repeal, it would require two-thirds vote to override.

One point more—and one of the most vital of all if government by the people is not to perish in America. The chief advantage enjoyed by the American Republic, as against the ancient republics, is this—that we have the public press.

This is what the new dictatorship is doing to throttle an independent press. With this tariff power he can continue to make those who might oppose, fear him, and can continue to use to his ultimate purpose the established censorship under the "National Ruin Act."

First. There are 23 N.R.A. price-boosting codes raised over the materials and machinery necessary to the publishing industry.

Second. There are 400 codes on industries that advertise. The publisher is required to boost the N.R.A. and the Washington policy, or he may be deprived of advertising to support his newspaper.

Third. A drastic press censorship is in the offing by Federal control of telegraphic communications, press dispatches, and radio broadcasts.

Fourth. The press code has been installed, and the demand of editors to include therein the Constitution guaranty against abridging the freedom of the press is refused by the President on the ground that his word is enough, and that the provisions of article I have no more to do with the case than the Ten Commandments. His word stands above the Constitution!

Fifth. The White House has bought, through the R.F.C., the preferred stocks of 5,650 banks to the amount of $910,-000,000, and these 5,650 banks control the loans and credits and securities of a large share of the dailies and magazines of America.

In the extra session the President secured from Congress and from the judiciary 77 powers. This session there has been a constant passage of bills, every one a little dictatorship, every one containing some secret clause that gives him censorship of the freedom of speech; and if all this fails, he has the power of the Internal Revenue office and is using | it to further coerce his censorship.

I am told that a great magazine, one of the greatest in the country, because of its policy of free speech became obnoxious to His Majesty. Whereupon this was so conveyed to the publisher. The publisher did not desist and came back to his office to find revenue men in his office searching his files. This same thing, I am told, happened to a great Chicago newspaper and also to a great New York news-

You may recall that Mussolini—who was financed by Wall Street money to the extent of $100,000,000-was not able to destroy the independence of 7,000 self-governing communes and make them directly subservient to his despotic will, until he had established the drastic press censorship of January 1, 1925.

That issue—the preservation of article I of the American Bill of Rights, against "abridging freedom of speech or of the press "-is now before us here in America. And the same financiers who financed Mussolini are behind the new dictatorship here-which demands that the revenue power of government, the press censorship, the secret gold power, the suspension of the antitrust laws, the suspension of the constitutional guaranty of government by the people shall be transferred to the White House.

It is the old deal of 4,000 years—the Fascisti program of one-man rule-dressed up and advertised by a "brain trust" of New York "yes" men, that you now face under the name "new deal."

The issue of the hour is the recovery of the Republic to the ideals of Washington and Jefferson, of Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt—that government of the people, for the people, and by the people may not perish from the earth.

In closing permit me to call your attention to the following:

First. A press-censorship act was put on the statutes of my State to curb freedom of the Minnesota press until declared unconstitutional by a higher court as a violation of article I of the American Bill of Rights.

Second. The recent radio censorship, as I pointed out to the Senate committee investigating the subject, was imposed following the radio broadcast of Col. Charles Lindbergh giving the public the text of his letters to the White House and Secretary of War. It was an attempt to keep the truth regarding arbitrary and dictatorial Executive action from getting to the press.

Third. A so-called "M.R.A.", patterned on the Federal N.R.A., was attempted in my State, but the Minnesota State Legislature would not stand for an imitation "Brigadier" Johnson, or Olson, cracking down on the people of Minnesota after the style of Mussolini.

The "brain trusters" boast that their "revolution" has taken place and that all it will need is to be made permanent, and it can be made permanent if constant censorship of means of information to the people can be maintained.

Let us hope the vote is cast by the folks at home; that little "brain trust" hatched within a stone's throw of Wall Street will have just as much effect upon the destinies of this Republic as the shricking of a bunch of parrots. This is not Italy. It is not Russia. It is not the New York Stock Exchange with a hired crew of shouting brokerage clerks. This is the United States of America-"an indissolvable Union of indestructible States!"

I am calling this to the attention of the Judiciary Committee, which should report out my resolution 248, and a committee should be appointed to be on the job here between Congresses to keep track of every violation of freedom of the press, every attempt to threaten publishers or editors for printing the truth, every attempt to withdraw advertising from publications that tell the truth, every attempt by department heads to refuse public information to representatives of the people.

MENACE OF SOCIALISM

Recently there was mailed me a pamphlet entitled "The Menace of Socialism." The author of the pamphlet is revolution.

Charles Hall Davis, of Petersburg, Va., who is an authority on our Constitution.

The pamphlet is documented and well proves the following

The United States asserts the inalienable sovereignty of man over government. Socialism asserts the indefeasible sovereignty of government over men.

The United States stands for the supreme rights of the individual, save to the extent that the governed consent to exercise certain of those rights in accordance with the community will.

Socialism stands for the supremacy and sovereignty of a so-called "community will." (but really of a class will) in all respects.

The United States stands for theism, for a belief in, a recognition of, and a dependence upon an Almighty God, possessing intellectual, ethical, and spiritual faculties and characteristics. The socialist school of thought stands for atheism.

The Menace of Socialism includes those chapters of Mr. Davis' unpublished book, A New Federal Bill of Rights, that refer to socialism, communism, and all the other "isms" that tend to make the unthinking doubt the permanent value and greatness of the American plan of government.

In the pamphlet there are a series of foot lines—not footnotes-that in their total and in their sequence are so impressive that I consider it important to place them permanently before the Nation in the Congressional Record.

There are 22 such foot lines, reading as follows:

- The American theory and plan of government is one whereby man can govern himself without a master.
   Under the American theory of government, each human being has been directly endowed by the Creator with certain inalienable
- Holding his rights under the supreme title of a gift from the Creator, he cannot be divested of them nor restrained in their use
- by any lesser authority, save by his own consent.

  4. The purpose of American Government is ordered liberty for the individual, that is, to secure each individual in the exercise of his rights, subject to a like right of every other individual to exercise similar rights, and subject to individual liability for their
- abuse.

  5. To secure ordered liberty, the individuals consent that certain of their inalienable rights shall thereafter be exercised in conformity with regulations or laws approved by a majority of the people.
- 6. Certain rights are so individual and personal that they are not
- 6. Certain rights are so individual and personal that they are not to be exercised according to the community or majority will; such as the right to worship God as one pleases. These inalienable individual rights are withheld from governmental regulation or control, usually by a bill of rights.

  7. In order to enforce the exercise of the agreed rights under regulations or laws approved by the majority of the community, the people create an agent or servant known as "government" and delegate to it the right to administer such of their sovereign powers as they deem necessary to carry out their purposes.

  8. Individual liberty in America is the sum of the inalienable individual rights withheld from governmental control.
- 8. Individual liberty in America is the sum of the malenable individual rights withheld from governmental control.

  9. Political liberty in America is correctly defined as individual liberty plus the sum of the limitations on the governmental agent, plus the sum of the safeguards assuring the sovereignty of the people over the government.

  10. To the extent that government control is extended over rights previously withheld from its regulation, individual liberty
- is reduced.
- 11. As the sum of the limitations on government is reduced, political liberty is lessened.
- 12. When the safeguards assuring the sovereignty of the people over government are discarded, both individual and political
- 13. The rights of man and the value of citizenship depend upon the maintenance of the sovereignty of the people over their gov-
- ernmental agents.

  14. The rights of man can be preserved only if government is always relegated to its true position of servant and agent.

  15. Tyranny and despotism on the part of government can be defeated only by imposing limitations on the powers of the governmental agent.

  16. Limitations cannot be imposed and enforced by the people
- 16. Limitations cannot be imposed and enforced by the people on any government unless the governmental powers are derived - from the people.

  17. Limitations cannot be imposed on a government where the people act directly, as in a pure democracy; for no higher power exists which can control any specific exercise of their irresistible will.
- 18. The only form of government upon which limitations can be imposed and enforced by the people is a representative gov-ernment where the government agent is the creation and servant
- of the people.

  19. The people as sovereigns and as creators of the governmental agent can at any time enlarge, restrict, or abolish the powers of government, or establish such new governmental agencies as they desire.
- 20. The people can at any time change the Constitution of the United States as they desire; and under its terms a method of orderly change is provided so as to avoid the necessity for

21. Neither the governmental agent nor any branch of it can, under any circumstances, extend, restrict, discard, or violate the constitutional limitations upon its powers without destroying

22. It is hopeless to attempt to improve the American plan by grafting on it the principles of despotic government, to defeat which it was created.

Mr. President, apropos of the above thesis, I wish to read my letter of May 31, 1934, to Governor Olson, of Minnesota:

WHO WILL PAY THE FIDDLER?

MAY 31, 1934.

Gov. Floyd B. Olson,
State Capitol, St. Paul, Minn.

Dear Governor Olson: The platform on which you seek reelection reads, "We demand public ownership of all mines, water power, transportation, and communication, banks, packing plants, power, transportation, and communication, banks, packing plants, factories, and all public utilities."

Press report of your speech while the platform committee was in prolonged session indicates that you were the inspiration, if not the prime mover, of the above program. Your speech carries the phrases, "ownership of packing plants", "ownership of grain elevators", and "ownership of iron mines." Regarding the latter, you advised the convention: "The State of Minnesota can sell iron ore direct to the Government of the United States."

That you were the inspiration of the factory idea is shown by that chapter of your speech in which you suggested that the Government "set up industries to be operated by the unemployed for the purpose of manufacturing articles commonly used by Government "set up industries to be operated by the unemployed for the purpose of manufacturing articles commonly used by people, such as overcoats, shoes, and hand goods and things of that kind, and so we will have and I predict it will come in the not distant future before the summer is over, if you please."

It seems that many Farmer-Labor delegates objected to public ownership of factories, and indeed a majority by a vote of 310 to 253 referred the platform back to the committee for rewriting. But your speech seems to have turned the scale, and the platform came back with your phrases in it—"factory", "packing plants", "mines", along with banks, public utilities and means of transportation and communication.

portation and communication.

You have no public funds for this investment. What is your estimate of the total Minnesota investment in mines, banks, factories, railways, public utilities, water powers, grain elevators—in short, the total of industrial, public-utility, mine, and financial institutions of the State?

Institutions of the State?
Your total investment—without funds—may reach 10 billions. Who will buy your bonds? Minnesota institutions and financial people able to buy bonds, you are putting out of business.

Interest charges on this investment may reach several hundred millions a year in taxes. Who will pay the taxes? The people who pay the bulk of the taxes, you are putting out of business.

You speak of using the unemployed to run your manufacturing. Will you run your public utilities, banks, mines, elevators, packing plants, and railroads with the unemployed.

Even with the highest class of skilled labor under the direction of expert engineers and managers, these industrial utility and

Even with the highest class of skilled labor under the direction of expert engineers and managers, these industrial, utility, and financial institutions are having a keen struggle to show a ledger balance. What will happen to that ledger balance, when you and your officeseekers become the managers and the institutions become a political sanctuary for the unemployed?

Who will stand the losses? Who will pay the fiddler?

The banks which you propose to retire from business carried in December 1932, and possibly at this time, approximately $500,000.000 of deposits.

000,000 of deposits.

000,000 of deposits.

Let us suppose, for the sake of argument, that the voters of Minnesota in November elect a legislature committed to your project of public ownership and operation of banks.

Those banks are worthless without the $500,000,000 of deposits. What will happen to those deposits between election day in November and the opening of your legislative session in January? Are the 800,000 bank depositors of Minnesota going to wait until you and your officeholders get your clutches on their savings? You know they will not.

Perhaps a month before you read your confiscatory message to the legislature—assuming that you are elected and a socialistic legislature is elected—the $500,000,000 of Minnesota bank deposits will have been withdrawn. For bank depositors need their savings to carry on their legitimate business, pay their bills and taxes, pay wages and rents and mortgages, buy food and coal and clothes and machinery.

and machinery.

Bank depositors do not save their earnings for politicians to gamble with in socialistic experiments.

Those $500,000,000 will be withdrawn before Christmas—a week before you make your confiscatory "spiel." And then—what will your banks be worth—suppose the courts allow you to take over the banks? Those banks will be worth just the value of the office fixtures, minus the liabilities.

You will have acquired for all your labor in producing your cooperative commonwealth, on paper: First a thousand lawsuits; second, a huge liability total; third, a hundred warehouses full of second-hand office fixture. And your cooperative commonwealth will start in with just one "busted" enterprise, and that a second-hand junk shop.

Incidentally, you will have paralyzed what little business of Minnesota the "national ruin act" has left, and made yourself the laughing stock of the country. You will be popular, perhaps, in Moscow. You may be popular with the underworld of the big cities—the slums and Chinatowns that cast no votes.

What will be the effect on the people of Minnesota? What will your experiment do to Minnesota labor and capital—the homes and the farms, the mills and stores and mines? What class of people will your experiment drive from the State? What class of people will your experiment invite to the State? What class of people will your experiment invite to the State? What class of people will make Minnesota the mecca of all the followers of Karl Marx in America. You will invite the Marx element from foreign lands. You will make Minnesota sought by racketeers, bank robbers, kidnapers, even in greater numbers than during your administration of the past 2 years.

robbers, kidnapers, even in greater administration of the past 2 years.

Bank insurance in Minnesota is already at higher rates than in most of the States of the Union—as an aftermath of the crime in most of the States of vour administration. Minnesota bank-insurance have fallen.

in most of the states of the Union—as an atternate of the Union—wave of the years of your administration. Minnesota bank-insurance rates have risen—as the prices of farm products have fallen. Racketeers have done a thriving business—as farmers and wage earners, industries and trade have suffered. What will happen to earners, industries and trade have suffered. What will happen to the crime wave, on the one hand, and legitimate industry on the other, when your strong-arming racket destroys the banking resources of the State? Who will buy your bonds? Who will pay your taxes? Can you depend upon the Dillingers? Your one safeguard is this—the people of Minnesota will never elect for you a State legislature pledged to wreck the State by a socialistic gambling experiment at the expense of 800,000 bank depositors.

Those 800,000 voting depositors of Minnesota banks constitute a two-thirds majority of Minnesota's voting electorate. They are not going to vote for their own destruction.

not going to vote for their own destruction.

It is doubtful if you carry a majority even of the Farmer-Labor Party of Minnesota for your mad project. The vote of 310 to 253 in your convention—to say nothing of the working rank and file in the work shops and on the farms—demanded that your socialistic program be sent back to the platform committee for revision. They balked on the word "factory." They will balk on the word "banks" as soon as they read your platform. They will balk on railroad ownership and operation by your bureaucratic group when you ask them to put up $500,000,000 to take over Minnesota's 30 railroads—and most of these roads under Federal control.

They will balk on the proposition of taking over 500 mines owned and operated by interstate corporations—also under Federal control. But suppose, as a fairy tale come true, that you did put over the whole socialistic venture. Suppose you floated, with the aid of Moscow and the Al Capone millionaires, your ten billions of bonds? Then who will be your taxpayers to shoulder your crushing interest burden and your army of officeholders to run the industries, utilities, financial institutions of the State? You have put the biggest taxpayers out of business.

taxpayers out of business

In the past 20 years the railroads, mines, telephone, telegraph, insurance, and kindred corporations have paid into the State treasury in special taxes something like $300,000,000.

When you came into the Governor's office these companies which you propose to put out of business were contributing something like $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 a year to support the public schools and other State institutions. And you propose to stop

You propose to abolish the principal taxpayers, and then load up the State with a mountain of debt and crush the enterprise that developed the State and upon which the State depends for economic existence—yea, for political existence.

It was said of an imperial regime in ancient history: "They made a desert and called it peace."

Your arbition is to make a tunk shop and call it prosperity.

Your ambition is to make a junk shop and call it prosperity.
You are safe only in this—that the people of Minnesota believe that even in politics there is such a thing as common sense and common honesty. They will never vote you the powers of a Mussolini to destroy their Commonwealth.

Cordially yours,

It might be well to have in mind and before us at this point the Minnesota Republican platform adopted at the convention on April 13, which I place in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the platform was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PLATFORM ADOPTED BY MINNESOTA REPUBLICANS

(Following is the complete text of the platform adopted Friday by the Minnesota Republican Party.)

PREAMBLE

We, the representatives of the Republican Party in the State of Minnesota, in convention assembled, renew our pledge to the principles and traditions of our party and our constitutional form of government, and dedicate it anew to the service of our State and the Nation.

and the Nation.

We, as a party, mindful of our responsibilities and the purposes and safeguards of our Constitution, are unalterably opposed to any proposal or movement that embraces socialism or communism and that by guile and Utopian promises would enforce regimentation of our people, destroying their birthright, invading the inherent and inalienable rights and privileges vouchsafed to them in the achievements of 150 years of constitutional government.

The issue has now and at last been definitely and openly raised in Minnesota by the Farmer-Labor Party in its positive declaration in favor of the Marxian theory of the public ownership of all means of production and distribution. We accept that challenge and call upon the people of our State, irrespective of their political affiliations, to unite in opposition to this alien doctrine so destructive of all individual effort and initiative and the right we recognize the existence of unrest and discontent which have arisen as the result of a world-wide depression, but believe that there is no condition so serious but can be corrected in an orderly way under our present form of government.

This convention pledges to the people of Minnesota a progressive course of action and offers the following statement of principles:

PRIVATE OWNERSHIP

We stand for the private ownership of property as the basis we stand for the private ownership of property as the basis of our economic system. This means the ownership of the home, the farm, business, and industry. We further believe that the right to such ownership should belong to the individual and not to the State. The individual should be protected by the orderly processes of government in such ownership, and oppose concentration and centralization in the hands of a few. We demand strict regulation of all public utilities.

ECONOMY

Although our counties, townships, school districts, and other municipal subdivisions have uniformly decreased the operating cost of government, the cost of State government under the present administration has steadily mounted until the State levy is now far greater than in any other period of our history. We condemn the present wasteful and rising cost of our State government and pledge a determined and consistent course of action in the reduction of State expenditures.

Our antiquated system of taxation has grown so burdensome as to confiscate many homes and farms. We urge that the taxing system of Minnesota be completely revised and reconstructed to the end that the tax burden be justly and equitably distributed. That the object of such revision should be to eliminate the tax burden on the home owner, farm owner, and real estate.

AGRICULTURE

We demand the American market for the American farmer, by embargo on products produced in excess of domestic consumption, and we urge Congress to enact adequate laws for agricultural protection, and insist further that a tax of at least 5 cents a pound be placed upon all imported vegetable and animal fats and oils.

We demand lower interest rates on farm credit and insist that we demand lower interest rates on farm credit and insist that the farmers and home owners of the State of Minnesota are entitled to receive as low a rate of interest as is now enjoyed by industry and finance.

We favor the continued development of true cooperative marketing organizations.

We again pledge to the people of Minnesota our support of the construction of the St. Lawrence deep waterways canal.

We demand the conservation and restoration of the great natural resources of Minnesota and the elimination of politics in their administration. Our forests, waters, minerals, game, and fish belong to all the people and should be safeguarded from private and political exploitation. We demand a strict adherence to the spirit and letter of our conservation laws and vigorously oppose any illegal diversion of conservation funds. In conservation projects we demand that all parts of the State receive fair and equitable experidention. table consideration.

We believe in the principle of high wages and the restoration of the purchasing power of the working man. We favor the principle of a shorter work week and the shorter work day, with its application to government as well as to private industry, as rapidly and as constructively as conditions will warrant.

The State should encourage industry to locate and remain in Minnesota to the end that labor may be well employed and the products of the farm find ready home market.

We believe that in the future to avert a recurrence of present conditions as to unemployment some form of adequate insurance must be adopted.

must be adopted.

LIQUOR

We deplore the unsatisfactory administration of the present law controlling and regulating the sale of intoxicating liquor in this State. We pledge ourselves to an adequate and effective control of the sale and distribution of intoxicating liquor and its separation from the influence of politics.

LAW AND ORDER

The preservation of law and order is the first duty of an enlightened government to its people. Every citizen is entitled to this elementary protection of his person, his family, his home, and his property.

We charge the Farmer-Labor regime with responsibility for the growing disrespect for law and order in our State and for the humiliating crime conditions now existing there.

We recommend that adequate modern facilities and equipment be provided to all police officers. We further urge that the statutes of the State relating to criminal procedure be amended to insure prompt and effective trial of all gangsters, racketeers, kidnapers and other criminals.

We favor establishment of a State-wide police content which

We favor establishment of a State-wide police system which shall utilize, coordinate, and expand the existing local peace agencies, the State highway patrol, and the State bureau of criminal apprehension; provided, however, that the power of any State police shall be strictly limited, by statute, so as not to extend to labor disputes.

INSURANCE

We are opposed to endangering the stability of insurance by placing the business thereof under political manipulation and control through State ownership and operation, and we believe that the present private and mutual agencies, properly regulated, can most efficiently meet the insurance needs of the people.

EDUCATION

The greatest safeguard of liberty is a stable and free system of public education. We favor academic freedom and are unalterably opposed to placing the control and publication of our school textbooks in the hands of the State or under the control of any political party.

We further declare in favor of the continuance of the present teachers tenure law.

We further demand that the educational and other public trust funds of the State should be safeguarded from dissipation.

ELECTIONS

We favor and demand the immediate enactment of a law to provide for the election of all members of the State legislature with party designation.

The Republican Party is proud of the part it has played in giving to the soldiers of the State recognition for their services and relief for themselves and dependents. We trust that the national administration will as fully recognize its responsibility to the veteran. We fully appreciate the continuing obligation of the State to all disabled veterans and the duty of a just and fair policy in our attitude toward the ex-service man our attitude toward the ex-service man.

PEACE

We are a people devoted to the arts of peace. In the final analysis no nation has ever profited by war. Individuals have. To take away the incentive of private gain as a cause for war, we recommend that not only man power but all resources be drafted to the service of the country in any future conflict.

FREE SPEECH

We believe that freedom of speech, press, and assemblage are fundamental principles upon which our form of government rests. These vital principles should be preserved and protected.

RELIEF

Relief in time of emergency should be given to the needy with-out regard to party affiliation. The distribution of relief should take the form of giving to the recipient the opportunity of entering into legitimate employment whenever possible.

HIGHWAYS

The construction and maintenance of highways involves an enormous sum of money and places a severe burden upon owners of motor vehicles. All bids for construction work should be made in strict conformity with law without prejudice or favoritism rather than by Executive order. We advocate the employment of local labor on all public works.

APPOINTMENTS

Honesty demands that an appointment to public office should be given to the individual best qualified for the position, and his continuance in office should not depend in any respect upon his willingness or unwillingness to contribute to the campaign funds of any political party.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, it is our purpose and task and we pledge ourselves as a party, fully awake to present obligations and responsibilities, by resolute leadership and a determined policy, to assist in bringing to the people of Minnesota a representative government of its affairs, founded upon the principles which secure to the individual the inherent and inalienable right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of harmonices. and the pursuit of happiness.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 9830) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental general and emergency appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1934, and June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 86, after line 25, to strike out "The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to buy any bonds or other obligations issued by beneficiaries of grants from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, for the purpose of construction, financed in whole or in part by such administration;" and in lieu thereof to insert:

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized to purchase marketable securities, satisfactory to said Corporation, acquired or to be acquired by the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, and any sums paid for such securities shall be available to said Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works for the making of additional loans (but not grants) under the provisions of title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act: Provided, That the amount that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may have invested at any one time in such securities. Act: Provided, That the amount that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may have invested at any one time in such securities shall not exceed $250,000,000. The amount of notes, debentures, and bonds or other such obligations which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to have outstanding at any one time pursuant to section 9 of the Recon-struction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, is hereby increased by the sums necessary for these purchases, not to exceed $250,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 87, line 25, after the word "repealed", to insert "insofar as said act applies to enrollees in the Civilian Conservation Corps,"; and on page 88, line 7, after the word "to", to strike out "employees" and insert "such enrollees", so as to read:

Section 3 of the act entitled "An act for the relief of unemployment through the performance of useful public work, and for other purposes", approved March 31, 1933 (48 Stat. 22), is hereby repealed, insofar as said act applies to enrollees in the Civilian Conservation Corps, and in lieu thereof the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended (U.S.C., title 5, ch. 15), are hereby made applicable to such enrollees under the said act of March 31, 1933, to the same extent and under the same conditions as is provided for employees of the Federal Civil Works Administration in the act entitled "An act making an additional appropriation to carry out the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, for continuation of the Civil Works program, and for other purposes", approved February 15, 1934 (Public, No. 93, 73d Cong.).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 89, to insert:

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION

For administering and enforcing the provisions of section 9 (c) of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 195), and the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry approved pursuant to the authority of said act, and for other purposes relating to the regulation of commerce in petroleum, to be allocated by the President, and to include necessary personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations, traveling expenses, rent, and not to exceed $2,750 for books and periodicals, not to exceed $48,000 for the purchase, hire, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, not to exceed $20,000 for the maintenance, operation, and repair not to exceed $20,000 for the maintenance, operation, and repair of four motor boats, and not to exceed $60,000 for a survey of the effect of the code on labor conditions in the petroleum industry, fiscal year 1935, $2,096,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Department of Agriculture", on page 90, line 5, after the word "section", to strike out the colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That any funds allocated under the provisions of section 204 (a) (2) of such act shall also be available for the cost of any construction that will provide safer traffic facilities or definitely eliminate existing hazards to pedestrian or vehicular traffic", so as to read:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

For the purpose of increasing employment by providing for emergency construction of public highways and other related projects, fiscal year 1935, $160,000,000, to remain available until expended, which sum shall be apportioned by the Secretary of Agriculture immediately upon the enactment of this act under the provisions of section 204 of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933 (in addition to any sums heretofore allocated under such section), to the highway departments of the several States to be expended by such departments pursuant to the provisions of such section. provisions of such section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, after line 9, to strike

For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes", approved July 11, 1916, and all acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, there are hereby authorized to be appropriated the following sums, to be expended according to the provisions of such act as amended: The sum of $100,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936; the sum of $100,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937: Provided, That 50 percent of the sum apportioned to each State from the appropriation herein authorized for the fiscal year 1936 may be expended without requiring any $7,500,000", so as to read:

contribution on the part of such States and the remaining 50 percent of the sum apportioned for the fiscal year 1936, and all of the apportionment of the appropriation authorized for the fiscal year 1937, shall be matched by the States in accordance with the provisions of the Federal Highway Act, as amended and supplemented: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall act upon projects submitted to him under his apportionment of the foregoing authorizations and his approval of any such project shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Government for the payment of its proportional contribution thereto: Provided further, That no deductions shall be made from the appropriations authorized in this paragraph on account of prior advances and/or loans to the States for the construction of roads under the requirements of the Federal Highway Act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 91, line 13, to insert the following proviso: "Provided, That such sum shall be expended in accordance with the terms of H.R. 8781, an act entitled 'An act to increase employment by authorizing an appropriation to provide for emergency construction of public highways and related projects, and to amend the Federal Aid Road Act, approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes', as finally enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I move to amend the committee amendment on page 91 by the amendment in the nature of a substitute, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 91, in lieu of the committee amendment, it is proposed to insert:

And which sum is a part of $200,000,000 authorized to be appropriated by section 1 of House bill 8781 as finally enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 91, line 23, after the figures "1935" to strike out "$6,730,000; and for such purposes there are hereby authorized to be appropriated, the following additional sums: $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936; and $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30. 1937; all " and insert "$10,000,000", so as to read:

For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 23 of the Federal Highway Act, approved November 9, 1921, fiscal year 1935, $10,000,000, to remain available until expended in accordance with the provisions of such section 23.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 92, line 12, after the figures "$2,500,000" to strike out "and for such purposes there are hereby authorized to be appropriated the following additional sums: $2,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936; and $2,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937; all ", so as to read:

For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 3 of the Federal Highway Act, approved November 9, 1921, as amended June 24, 1930 (46 Stat. 805), for the survey, construction, reconstruction, and maintenance of roads through unappropriated or unreserved public lands, nontaxable Indian lands, or other Federal reservations other than the forest reservations, fiscal year 1935, $2,500,000; to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, on behalf of the committee I offer a further amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 92, after line 17, it is proposed to insert, as a center head, "Department of Interior."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 92, line 24, after the word "amended", to strike out "there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and the sum of $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937; all " and insert "fiscal year 1935,

For the construction, reconstruction, and improvement of roads and trails, inclusive of necessary bridges in the national parks, monuments, and other areas administered by the National Park Service, including areas authorized to be established as national parks and monuments, and national park and monument approach roads authorized by the act of January 31, 1931 (46 Stat. 1053), as amended, fiscal year 1935, $7,500,000, to remain available until expended:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 93, line 4, after the word "expended" to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That the location, type, and design of all roads and bridges shall be approved by the Bureau of Public Roads before any expenditures are made thereon, and all such construction done by contract shall be under the general supervision of said Bureau."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 93, line 11, after the figures "1935" to strike out "$2,000,000; and for such purposes there are hereby authorized to be appropriated the following additional sums: $2,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936; and $2,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937; all" and insert "$2,000,000", so as to read:

For the construction and improvement of Indian reservation roads under the provisions of the act approved May 26, 1928 (45 Stat. 750), fiscal year 1935, $2,000,000, to remain available until expended.

Mr. HAYDEN. On behalf of the committee, I move to strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$4,000,000."

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of that amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. The amendment is proposed to conform to the Road Act, which has passed both Houses of Congress, and now awaits the signature of the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 93, line 15, it is proposed to strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$4.000.000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 93, line 16, after the word "expended", to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That the location, type, and design of all roads and bridges shall be approved by the Bureau of Public Roads before any expenditures are made thereon, and all such construction done by contract shall be under the general supervision of said Bureau."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 93, after line 20, to insert:

The President may also, from the funds made available under this title, make allotments for the construction, repair, and improvement of public highways not to exceed the following sums: In the Virgin Islands $250,000, in Alaska $1,500,000, in Puerto Rico $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Treasury Department, Office of the Secretary", on page 95, line 5, after the word "of", to strike out "$9,000" and insert "$10,000", so as to read:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

Salaries, Office of the Secretary of the Treasury: For an additional amount for salaries, Office of the Secretary of the Treasury, under the authority contained in sections 512 and 513 of the Revenue Act of 1934, creating the Office of General Counsel for the Department of the Treasury, and authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint and fix the compensation of 5 assistants at rates of compensation of not to exceed $10,000 per annum; including necessary traveling expenses, the temporary employment of experts, and the payment of actual transportation and subsistence expenses to any person whom the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time invite to the city of Washington or elsewhere for conference and advisory purposes in furthering the work of the Department, fiscal year 1935, $100,000: Provided, That the unexpended balances of appropriations now available for expenditure by the Treasury Department, and appropriations for such Department for the fiscal year 1935, to the extent applicable to the legal activities of the Department as constituted prior or subsequent to the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1934, shall be available, during the fiscal year for which appropriated, for expenditure, under the direction of the Secretary, to carry out the provisions of section 512 of said act: Provided further, That, with the exception of any office the rate of compensation for which is specifically fixed by the terms of section 512, the lawful rate of compensation of any other office or position provided for by sections 512 and 513 of the Revenue Act of 1934 shall not be in excess of $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 96, line 3, after the word "of", to strike out "1933 and" and insert "1933"; in line 4, after the figures "1934", to insert a comma and "and Silver Purchase Act of 1934"; on page 97, line 1, after the figures "1933", to insert "for any purpose in connection with carrying out the Silver Purchase Act of 1934,"; and in line 3, after the figures "1935", to strike out "$3,000,000" and insert "$4,500,000", so as to read:

expenses, Emergency Banking Act of 1933, Gold Reserve Act of 1934, and Silver Purchase Act of 1934: For any purpose in connection with the carrying out of the provisions of any Executive orders and proclamations regarding the bank holiday, any regulations issued thereunder, and the provisions of the Emergency Banking Act, approved March 9, 1933 (48 Stat. 1), the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, approved January 30, 1934 (Public, No. 87, 73d Cong.), and section 3653 of the Revised Statutes, including costs of transportation, insurance, and protection of gold coin, gold bullion, and gold certificates transferred to Federal Reserve banks and branches, United States mints and assay offices, and the Treasury, after March 9, 1933; losses sustained by Federal Reserve banks due to abrasion of gold coin, and reimbursement to Federal Reserve banks and branches for expenses incurred by them in carrying out instructions issued by the Secretary of the Treasury after March 4, 1933; and to cover any deficiency in the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States, including interest, as authorized by the act of March 26, 1934 (Public, No. 129, 73d Cong.), arising out of the arrangement approved by the President on July 27, 1933; for any purpose in connection with carrying out the Silver Purchase Act of 1934, fiscal year 1935, $4,500,000, to be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the President and to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Internal Revenue", on page 98, line 5, after the word "business", to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Pro-vided, That no part of the appropriation made herein or heretofore made for the fiscal year 1935 shall be used to pay the salary of any person formerly employed as investigator, special agent, senior warehouseman, deputy prohibition administrator, agent, assistant attorney, assistant prohibition administrator, senior investigator, deputy production administrator, storekeeper or gauger, or any other position in the Prohibition Bureau or Alcoholic Beverage Unit, Department of Justice, who was separated from the service of such Bureau or Unit between June 10, 1933, and December 31, 1933, while in any such position in the Treasury Department, unless and until such person shall be appointed thereto as a result of an open, competitive examination to be hereafter held by the Civil Service Commission", so as to read:

BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE

Collecting the internal revenue: For an additional amount for expenses of assessing and collecting the internal-revenue taxes, including the same objects specified under this head, and under the head "Salaries and expenses, Bureau of Industrial Alcohol", in the Treasury Department Appropriation Act, 1935, and including so much as may be necessary for the compensation of one additional deputy commissioner, to be immediately available, $10,000,000; of which not to exceed $800,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, and not to exceed $71,250 for the purchase of passenger-carrying automobiles to be used on official business: Provided, That no part of the appropriation made herein or heretofore made for the fiscal year 1935 shall be used to pay the salary of any person formerly employed as investigator, special agent, senior warehouseman, deputy prohibition administrator, agent, assistant attorney, assistant prohibition administrator, senior investigator, deputy production administrator, senior investigator, deputy production administrator, storekeeper or gager, or any other position in the Prohibition Bureau or Alcoholic Beverage Unit, Department of Justice, who was separated from the service of such Bureau or Unit between June 10, 1933, and December 31, 1933, while in any such position in the Treasury Department, unless and until such person shall be appointed thereto as a result of an open, competitive examination to be hereafter held by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I propose an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 98, line 5, after the word "that", to insert the words "after October 1, 1934."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 99, to strike out:

PROCUREMENT DIVISION, PUBLIC WORKS BRANCH

PROCUREMENT DIVISION, PUBLIC WORKS BRANCH

Public buildings: For emergency construction of public-building projects outside of the District of Columbia (including the acquisition, where necessary, by purchase, condemnation, exchange, or otherwise, of sites and additional land for such buildings; the demolition of old buildings where necessary and the construction, remodeling, or extension of buildings; rental of temporary quarters during construction, including moving expenses; purchase of necessary equipment for buildings and such additional administrative expenses and salaries as may be required solely for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this paragraph), $65,000,000; such projects, including the sites therefor, to be selected by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General, acting jointly, from the public-building projects specified in Statements Nos. 2 and 3, incorporated in House Report No. 1879, Seventy-third Congress, pages 24 to 40, inclusive, and projects selected shall be carried out within the respective estimated or proposed limits of cost specified in such statements, except as Statements Nos. 2 and 3, incorporated in House Report No. 1879. Seventy-third Congress, pages 24 to 40, inclusive, and projects selected shall be carried out within the respective estimated or proposed limits of cost specified in such statements, except as such limits are authorized to be modified by the provisions of the next paragraph: Provided, That with a view to relieving country-wide unemployment the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General, in the selection of towns or cities in which buildings are to be constructed, shall endeavor to distribute the projects equitably throughout the country so far as may be consistent with the needs of the public service; and the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General may also select for prosecution under this appropriation such projects not included in such report as in their judgment are economically sound and advantageous to the public service: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to direct the preparation of all sketches, estimates, plans, and specifications (Including supervision and inspection thereof), and to enter into all contracts, necessary for carrying out the purposes of this paragraph, and he is hereby authorized, when deemed by him desirable and advantageous, to employ, by contract or otherwise, temporary professional, technical, or nontechnical employees, firms, or corporations, to such extent as may be required to carry out the purposes of this paragraph, without reference to civil-service laws, rules, and regulations, or to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, or to sections 305 and 306 of the Emergency Relief and Construction of such buildings provided for in this paragraph, the provisions of sections 305 and 306 of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, as amended, shall apply.

In order to permit the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into contracts when the bid of the lowest responsible bidder received in response to public advertisement exceeds the amount available for any p

Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works an additional sum of $2,500,000 out of any unobligated funds under the control of such administration, which total sum shall be transferred immediately upon the enactment of this act to the Treasury Department and, when approved by the President, may be used in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into contracts for public buildings in an amount not exceeding, in any one case, 10 percent in excess of the amount available therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 101, after line 20, to insert:

PUBLIC BUILDING PROJECTS

For emergency construction of public-building projects outside the District of Columbia under the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act (including the acquisition, where necessary, by purchase, condemnation, exchange, or otherwise of sites and additional land for such buildings; the remodeling or extension of buildings, rental of temporary quarters during construction, including moving expenses; purchase of necessary equipment for buildings and such additional administrative expenses and salaries as may be required solely for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this paragraph), $65,000,000: Provided, That with a view to relieving country-wide unemployment, the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, in the selection of towns or cities in which buildings are to be constructed, shall endeavor to distribute the projects equitably throughout the country so far as may be consistent with the needs of the public service: And provided further, That no projects shall be approved under the provisions of this paragraph unless they shall have been recommended by the existing Interdepartmental Board on Public Buildings, consisting of representatives of the Treasury and Post Office Departments, the Bureau of the Budget, and the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works: Provided further, That not exceeding $30,000 of the sum herein appropriated shall be expended for construction of a retaining wall on provided of the Endewly building of Engel. grounds of the Federal building at Reno, Nev.; such projects, including the sites therefor, to be selected from the public-building projects specified in statements numbered 2 and 3 incorporated in House Report No. 1879, Seventy-third Congress, pages 24 to 40, inclusive, and projects selected shall be carried out within the respective estimated or proposed limits of cost specified in such statements.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator having the bill in charge whether or not this amendment striking out language is the one which takes the publicbuilding fund out from under the Treasury Department and puts it under the Interior Department?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, it does not take it out from under the Treasury Department, but it does put it under the Interdepartmental Board, of which the Treasury is a

Mr. TYDINGS. That is different from the House provision, then?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. The House provision, as I recall, took all these matters out from under the Treasury Department.

Mr. ADAMS. No; they all fall under the Interdepart-mental Board. This amendment puts them back.

Mr. TYDINGS. It would be just as it was?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; just as the law is today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I submit an amendment in behalf of the committee, in line 23, page 102, where there was a typographical error, a transposition, and this is to correct it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "expenses" on line 4, page 102, it is proposed to insert the following words, "All necessary improvements to make such land and buildings available for the purposes intended."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I have an amendment to offer to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 101 it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by deleting the proviso in line 14, down to and including the word "works", in line 20, and to substitute the following:

And provided further, That no project shall be approved under the provisions of this paragraph unless they shall have been recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General acting jointly.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, the proviso which would be depleted by this amendment reads as follows, beginning in line 14, page 102:

And provided further, That no projects shall be approved under the provisions of this paragraph unless they shall have been recommended by the existing Interdepartmental Board on Public Buildings, consisting of representatives of the Treasury and Post Office Departments, the Bureau of the Budget, and the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works.

The amendment would restore the language of the bill as it passed the House, so as to provide that those projects should not be undertaken except upon recommendation to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General.

I offer this amendment because of an experience which I myself have had over a period of more than a year with this so-called "interdepartmental committee", and I say to Senators at this time that that is the finest buck-passing | organization I have ever encountered in my experience.

The Post Office Department in 1932 recommended a site for a post-office workshop in the city of Providence. Some negotiations were had with the city council because the site which had been chosen belonged to the city.

An agreement was reached, plans were in the making, and it is my information that architects were engaged by the Treasury Department to prepare plans. Since the establishment of this interdepartmental committee I have been trying to find out the status of that project. I have a file of correspondence extending over a period of a year.

First I wrote to the Administrator of Public Works, and I was informed that the Post Office Department had not yet reached a decision. Then I communicated with the Post Office Department, and they told me they knew nothing about the project. I then communicated with the Treasury Department, and I was informed that the interdepartmental organization was about to make an investigation to reach a determination as to what should be done.

Mr. President, I have gone around all of those activities one after the other. The most recent communication I have had was received only a few days ago, from the Administrator of Public Works, and in that communication I was informed that an investigation was expected to be made presently, and that when the report of that investigation became available they would probably know how to

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I am very much interested in the Senator's remarks, because I have had an experience similar to that of the Senator, tending to show that the Public Works Administration has deliberately, so far as I have been advised, prevented the construction of any public buildings. Will the Senator be kind enough to tell me just exactly the difference between his amendment and the committee amendment, because I am in entire sympathy with the proposition the Senator is enunciating?

Mr. HEBERT. I shall be glad to do so, Mr. President. My amendment would restore the House language in the bill and provide that those projects shall not be undertaken unless they have the recommendation of the Treasury and the Post Office Departments, which I conceive to be the proper places in which to put that authority. We will then have an end to this buck-passing to which I have referred.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield. Mr. CLARK. To accomplish what the Senator is talking about, instead of adopting the amendment which the Senator has offered to the committee amendment, is not the easier way to do it to defeat the committee amendment? Would not that more accurately accomplish what we are trying to do?

Mr. HEBERT. I think it would accomplish that end, because we would restore the House language, as I understand the procedure, and that would be satisfactory to me.

Mr. CLARK. Therefore, Mr. President, I am going to vote for the Senator's amendment to the committee amendment. Then I shall vote against the committee amendment.

Mr. HEBERT. I propose to do that same thing myself.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, to my personal knowledge it is the desire of the Post Office Department and of the Treasury Department that the House language should be retained in this bill. Since the creation of the interdepartmental committee, to which the Senator alludes, there has been practically no progress in the construction of postoffice buildings throughout the country. The restoration by the Senate committee amendment of the Commission has the effect of taking out of the hands of the Post Office Department and the Treasury Department the function of constructing post-office buildings. The Post Office Department and the Treasury Department have had a very efficient organization which has been operating for many years in the construction of buildings and in the purchase of sites.

I have personal knowledge that the inspection service of the Post Office Department is well equipped and has a regular method of selecting sites, and the Treasury Department, through the Supervising Architect, has had an efficient method of constructing the buildings.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. If I recall aright the amendment which is now in the bill, the Senate amendment, was agreed to on the theory that the Treasury Department, the Post Office Department, and the Department of Public Works had all agreed on this amendment. I have been informed today, however, that the Post Office Department and the Treasury Department did not enter into that agreement.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is my understanding. Mr. McKELLAR. That being so, it seems to me that we should restore the House language.

Mr. TYDINGS rose.

Mr. HEBERT. I yielded to the Senator from Wyoming. If he has completed his statement I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I asked the chairman of the committee a moment ago if this amendment did not take out of the hands of the Treasury Department and the Post Office Department those functions which they formerly had, and transfer them to the Public Works Administration. I was told no. My reading of it leads me to the belief that such is the case. Is that the Senator's idea?

Mr. HEBERT. My experience has been that it takes it out of the hands of everybody.

Mr. TYDINGS. Why adopt either one of the amend-

Mr. HEBERT. To restore the House language would be entirely satisfactory.

Why can we not vote down the committee amendment? The House language is much preferable to the language contained in the Senator's amendment.

Mr. HEBERT. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. DILL. The fact of the matter is that the Post Office Department and the Treasury Department have spent a great amount of money and have exercised great care through their inspectors in the selection of their sites, and the Public Works Administration has disregarded and overturned everything they have done.

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator is right in his observation.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Washington [Mr. Dill] if it is not a fact that Congress on its own responsibility has appropriated money for certain post-office sites, for certain post-office buildings, and that the Public Works Administration has deliberately and flagrantly flouted the authority of Congress in the matter?

Mr. DILL. Not only that, but they took away this appropriation which Congress made for the C.C.C.

Mr. CLARK. What is the easiest thing to do in regard to the matter?

Mr. DILL. To vote down the amendment and vote for the House language.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I add, to what has already been said, that I have been advised that Members of Congress in the other branch are insisting upon the language adopted by the House because their experience has been exactly the same as that described by the Senator from Rhode Island. The Members of the House feel that buildings which were authorized have not been constructed and will not be constructed in the event the committee amendment shall prevail.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, in order to simplify the procedure, I shall withdraw my amendment and ask for a yea-and-nay vote on the committee amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. A parliamentary inquiry. voted on the Senate committee amendment yet?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has not yet voted on the committee amendment. The question now is on the Senate committee amendment.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays. Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I ask for recognition. In justice to the committee a statement should be made, and then the Senate may vote and the members of the committee will take no exception.

Members of the subcommittee having heard this matter presented came to the conclusion that the interdepartmental committee, which is composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster General, the Director of the Budget, and a representative of the P.W.A., had passed upon certain projects. They submitted a list of 28 that were already approved and upon which construction would be begun as soon as funds were made available. They submitted an additional number that were under consideration. They were making a survey of all the public buildings in this document in order to determine what changes had taken place in the community during the last 5 years. It is utterly immaterial to us who passes upon the question as to selection. The Senate should know that in the documents referred to in the House amendment there are buildings that it will take $150,000,000 to construct, and under this amendment $65,000,000 is appropriated.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to have the Senator explain briefly the difference between the House provision and the committee amendment. As I understand the situation, it is a question of whether Congress shall provide for certain public works or the Secretary of the Interior or an interdepartmental committee set up without authority of law shall make the allocation.

Mr. BYRNES. I think I can boil down the difference to this: Under the House language the determination as to the building to be selected from the two documents referred to will be left in the hands of the Postmaster General and Secretary Morgenthau. Under the Senate amendment the determination of the buildings to be selected to be constructed out of the $65,000,000 is left to the interdepartmental committee, composed of the Postmaster General, Secretary Morgenthau, the Director of the Budget, and the representative of the P.W.A.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, did not the Senator from South Carolina understand that the four departments had agreed upon this amendment? I know I so understood, and I voted for the amendment on that assurance. Now it turns out that two of the departments have not agreed, and I think we ought to restore the House language.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, it will be necessary to amend the House provision by reinserting that part of the amendment which has been rejected which relates to the Reno post office. I offer as an amendment to the House provision the proviso appearing on page 102 beginning in line 20 and ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert, at the proper place in the House provision on page 101, the following proviso:

Provided further, That not exceeding $30,000 of the sum herein appropriated shall be expended for construction of a retaining wall on grounds of the Federal Building at Reno, Nev.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed on page 14, after line 11, to insert the following:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

For an additional amount for the Federal Trade Commission, including the same objects specified under this caption in section 1, title 1, Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1935, to enable the Commission to comply with the provisions of House Concurrent Resolution No. 32 of the Seventy-third Congress, fiscal year 1935, $30,000.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the amendment from the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before the Senator from Colorado undertakes to make an explanation let us have order. No one on this side of the Chamber can hear anything that is going on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the amendment provides an appropriation of $30,000 to the Federal Trade Commission for conducting an investigation into the milk situation, a matter that has been in question here in recent days.

Mr. BYRNES. I have no objection.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, if I may have consent of the Senate, I wish to withdraw the objection which I interposed yesterday to the consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 32, which provides for an investigation by the Federal Trade Commission. If I may be considered in order by unanimous consent, I desire to move the adoption of the resolution so the appropriation may be taken care of in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada for immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read an amendment submitted by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Smith].

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3 of the resolution it is proposed to strike out lines 21, 22, and 23, which read as follows:

There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $60,000 for the purposes of this resolution.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may I explain the situation? When the resolution came up before, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson] suggested, in view of the fact that it was a concurrent resolution, that it could not properly provide for either the authorization or the appropriation of any money. He offered an amendment, as the Senator from South Carolina appreciates.

Mr. BYRNES. I understand the situation, but I have not offered any amendment or made any motion.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In any case, no matter who offers it, the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. CLARK. Is the pending amendment an amendment to the concurrent resolution?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. This is a concurrent resolution which mistakenly attempted to make an appropriation. However, if the resolution is now passed with that language stricken out, then under the rule of the Senate it will be in order to consider the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Adams] to the appropriation bill.

Mr. CLARK. I have no objection to the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

The Federal Trade Commission shall report to the House of Representatives as soon as practicable the result of its investigations, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary remedial legislation. legislation.

The preamble was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs upon the amendment of the Senator from Colorado to the appropriation bill, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 15, after line 20, to insert the following:

tion Act, 1934, is hereby continued available for the fiscal year

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Colorado explain the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Very well. The letter of transmittal of the President is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE, Washington, June 15, 1934.

The President of the Senate.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress drafts of proposed provisions pertaining to the appropriations for the United States Tariff Commission, 1935.

The details of the proposed provisions, the necessity therefor, and the reasons for their transmission at this time are set forth in the letter of the Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget transmitted herewith, with whose comments and observations

Respectfully.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

The letter from Mr. F. W. Lowery, Acting Director of the Budget, is as follows:

BUREAU OF THE BUDGET, Washington, June 15, 1934.

The PRESIDENT.

SR: I have the honor to submit herewith for your consideration a draft of proposed provisions pertaining to the appropriations for the United States Tariff Commission contained in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1935, as follows:

SALARIES AND EXPENSES OF THE UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION. 1935

The unexpended balance of the appropriation of $785,000 for salaries and expenses of the United States Tariff Commission, 1934, contained in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934, is hereby continued available for the fiscal year 1935, and the limitation of $725,000 on the amount which may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, contained in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1935, under this head, is hereby increased to $750,000.

PRINTING AND BINDING FOR THE TARIFF COMMISSION 1935

The unexpended balance of the appropriation of $15,000 for printing and binding for the Tariff Commission, 1934, contained in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934, is hereby continued available for the fiscal year 1935.

These proposed provisions are necessary to enable the United States Tariff Commission to perform the additional duties which may reasonably be expected to devolve upon it in connection with an act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, approved June 12, 1934.

The foregoing draft of proposed provisions pertaining to exist-ing appropriations is required to meet a contingency which has arisen since the transmission of the Budget for the fiscal year 1935, and approval is recommended.

Very respectfully,

F. W. LOWERY. Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, what is the amount of the additional appropriation?

Mr. ADAMS. The additional amount is $30,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

REGULATION OF PUBLIC GRAZING LANDS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6462) to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. Adams, Mr. O'Mahoney, and Mr. Nye conferees on the part of the Senate.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 9330) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental general and emergency appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1934, and June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment which the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings] regards as a most important amendment and which he would like to explain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 58, after line 16, to insert the following:

For payment to the city of Baltimore the balance of the amount incurred and expended by said city of Baltimore to aid in the construction of works of national defense in 1863, at the request of Maj. Gen. R. C. Schenck, United States Army, and as found and reported to the Senate on May 3, 1930, by the Comptroller General of the United States, $171,034.31; also for payment to the city of New York of the sum of $764.143.75 expended by said city of New York for enrolling, subsisting, clothing, supplying, arming, equipping, paying, and transporting troops employed in aiding to suppress the insurrection against the United States in 1861 to 1865; in all. $935,178.06.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the amount of money carried in the Baltimore appropriation is contained in a bill which passed the Senate at this session of Congress, which has been audited by the Comptroller General, passed on by the Judiciary Committee, and is now on the House Calendar. It also passed at the last session of Congress. I have in my hand the report of the Comptroller who audited the account and approved it.

I think there can be no objection to it. The money was advanced to the Federal Government at its request and it is the only loan which has not been repaid. Similar loans have been repaid to all other States except Maryland and New York. I have a list of the States, but I do not want to read it unless Senators want to hear it. They are Maine, Virginia-

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, we do not want to hear them. It is bad enough to appropriate the money.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I submit an amendment which is also to take care of the tariff situation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 28, after line 4, it is proposed to insert the following:

BUREAU OF AGRICULTURAL ECONOMICS

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to collect and analyze economic data on agricultural products for use in carrying into effect the act entitled "An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930", approved June 12, 1934 (Public, No. 316, 73d Cong.), including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, printing, and other necessary expenses, fiscal year 1935, $47,670. 1935, $47,670.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I should like to know what that appropriation is for.

Mr. ADAMS. The request for this appropriation was made by the Bureau of the Budget. The provision is for an appropriation for the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, amounting to $47,670, for the purpose of making investigations to enable the carrying out of the provisions of the Reciprocal Tariff Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. I have another committee amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 42, after line 12, it is proposed to insert:

Promotion of foreign trade: For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of section 4 of the act entitled "An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930", approved June 12, 1934, including personnel services, stenographic reporting services, by contract if deemed necessary, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 41, sec 5), contingent expenses, printing and binding, and such other expenses as the President may deem necessary, fiscal year 1935, $75,000.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I should like to hear an explanation of that amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I will state that certain additional expenses naturally will be incurred in negotiating these reciprocal-trade agreements, and the President in making his request, cut it to the bone. I think the amount requested in all for that purpose was $100,000, and this is a part of that sum.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I have no disposition on earth to interfere with the legitimate expenses of the Government in negotiating the treaties which we provided for by law the other day. On the other hand, I do have a very great disposition to object to the expansion of the Tariff Commission as it has heretofore existed, and I should like to know who is going to expend this money.

Mr. HARRISON. It is certain that some additional employees will be needed in the Tariff Commission in order to negotiate reciprocal-trade agreements. I think the Commerce Department needs some assistants, too; I think the State Department needs some; but the aggregate, I think, is $100,000. The President has just sent down the letter to us.

I hope this amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. I have not seen the letter. I know that in the last campaign the Democratic Party denounced the Tariff Commission at the top of its lungs in its platform and on the stump throughout the campaign. I know that no responsible Republican spokesman throughout the whole of the campaign ever attempted to defend the Tariff Commission, and I am not disposed to expand its powers at this

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, we have already passed the item for the Tariff Commission, have we not? I should be glad if the Senator would offer an amendment to abolish the Tariff Commission.

Mr. CLARK. I should be very glad to vote for such an amendment.

Mr. BORAH. I think it would be a service to the public

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator from Idaho will offer the amendment, I shall be very glad to vote for it.

Mr. BORAH. In view of the fact that the Chairman of the Tariff Commission declared publicly that they were simply acting as amanuenses to the President, I see no reason for their existence.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator from Idaho will yield, I am certain that the Chairman of the Tariff Commission said nothing that had not been well recognized by every intelligent man in the United States heretofore.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? I think possibly there is a misunderstanding.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from Idaho has the floor. Mr. BORAH. I am ready to vote. Mr. BYRNES. I simply desire to say that this is for the Department of State, and not for the Tariff Commission.

Mr. BORAH. That is what I understood, that we have already passed the item for the Tariff Commission. That deed is done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. I submit another committee amendment which I will ask the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRIson] to explain. This is the cotton amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado, on behalf of the committee, offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 93, line 23, after line 23, it is proposed to insert:

AMENDMENTS TO AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Section 4 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:
"Sec. 4. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture shall have authority

"Sec. 4. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture shall have authority to borrow money upon all cotton in his possession or control and may, at his discretion, deposit as collateral for such loans the warehouse receipts for such cotton.

"(b) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to advance, in his discretion, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000,000 to be available until March 1, 1936, to the Secretary of Agriculture for paying off any debt or debts which may have been or may be incurred by the Secretary of Agriculture and discharging any lien or liens which may tary of Agriculture and discharging any lien or liens which may have arisen or may arise pursuant to part 1 of this title, for protecting title to any cotton which may have been or may be acquired by the Secretary of Agriculture under authority of part 1 of this title, and for paying any expenses (including, but not limited to, warehouse charges, insurance, salaries, interest, costs, and commissions) incident to corrying handling insuring and marcommissions) incident to carrying, handling, insuring, and marketing of said cotton and for the purposes described in subsection

(e) of this section.

"(c) The funds authorized by subsection (b) of this section shall be made available to the Secretary of Agriculture from time to time upon his request and with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Each such request shall be accompanied by a statement showing by weight and average grade and staple the quantity of cotton held by the Secretary of Agriculture and the quantity of cotton held by the Secretary of Agriculture and the approximate aggregate market value thereof.

"(d) It is the purpose of subsections (b) and (c) to provide an alternative method to that provided by subsection (a) for enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to finance the acquisition, carrying, handling, insuring, and marketing of cotton acquired by him under authority of section 3 of this act. The Secretary of Agriculture may, at his discretion, make use of either or both of the methods provided in this section for obtaining funds for the purposes hereinabove enumerated.

poses hereinabove enumerated.

"(e) The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to use, in his discretion, any funds obtained by him pursuant to the provisions of subsection (a) or (b) of this section or of section 5 for making advances to any agency which may have been or may be established by the Secretary of Agriculture for the handling, carrying, insuring, or marketing of any cotton acquired by the Secretary of Agriculture, to enable any such agency to perform, exercise, and discharge any of the duties, privileges, and functions which such agency may be authorized to perform, exercise, or discharge.

"(f) The proceeds derived from the sale of cotton shall be held for the Secretary of Agriculture by the Treasurer of the United States in a special deposit account and shall be used by the Secretary of Agriculture to discharge the obligations incurred under poses hereinabove enumerated.
"(e) The Secretary of Agricu States in a special deposit account and shall be used by the Secretary of Agriculture to discharge the obligations incurred under authority of part 1 of this title. Whenever any cotton shall be marketed the net proceeds (after discharge of other obligations incurred with respect thereto) derived from the sale thereof shall be used, to the extent required, to reimburse the Treasury for such portion of the funds hereby provided for as shall have been used, which shall be covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt. If when all of the cotton acquired by the Secretary of Agriculture shall have been marketed and all of the obligations incurred with respect to such cotton shall have been discharged, and the Treasury reimbursed for any and all sums which may have been advanced pursuant to subsection (b), there shall remain any balance in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, such balance shall be transferred to and taken as supplemental to the appropriation provided for by section 12 (a) of this act and may thereafter be used for and devoted to the purposes set forth in said section 12 (a)."

Section 5 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 5. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby attention of the Agriculture of the Agri

"Sec. 5. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized and directed to advance money and to make loans to the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose of providing funds with which to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to perform the duties and functions which he is directed or authorized to perform under the provisions of part 1 of this title, provided such advance of money or such loans shall not be for amounts in excess of the market value of the cotton, or the interest of the Secretary of Agriculture in the cotton, against which the advance or loan is to be made at the time such advance or loan may be applied for by the Secretary of Agriculture, plus costs, expenses, and commissions incurred incidental to handling, carrying, and marketing of such cotton. The Secretary of Agriculture shall not marketing of such cotton. The Secretary of Agriculture shall not be required to pledge or deposit warehouse receipts or other evidences of title to cotton as security for any advance of money or loans made pursuant hereto, but it shall be sufficient if the Secretary shall give to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation a written statement showing the quantity of cotton by weight and the average grade and staple of the cotton against which the advance or loan is to be made. The amount of notes, bonds, debentures, and other obligations which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to issue and to have outstanding at any one time under existing law is hereby increased by an amount sufficient to carry out the provisions of this section."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this amendment was requested of the committee by the financial branch of the Department of Agriculture.

It will be recalled that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry have reported a bill similar to this proposal. This amendment merely gives to the Secretary of the Treasury permission to advance this money on the cotton that is now pooled under a pool that was agreed to some 2 years ago; and I may say that under the very wise management of that cotton pool the Government today is seven or eight million dollars to the good. Instead of going to private bankers and having to borrow money to carry this cotton, it is provided that the Secretary of the Treasury may make the advancements and provide the funds for refinancing.

The amendment is approved by the Budget Bureau, the Secretary of the Treasury, and earnestly requested by the Department of Agriculture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment allowing common carriers to carry relief products for the drought at reduced rates without violation of the interstate commerce law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 86, after line 24, it is proposed

If, during the present drought emergency, a carrier subject to the Interstate Commerce Act shall, at the request of any agent of the United States, authorized so to do, establish special rates for the benefit of drought sufferers, such a carrier shall not be deemed to have violated the Interstate Commerce Act with reference to undue preference or unjust discrimination by reason of the fact that it applies such special rates only to those designated as drought sufferers by the authorized agents of the United States or of any State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the committee is through with its amendments, I should like to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further committee amendments?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I send to the desk the last of the committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina offers certain amendments, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 35, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

Salaries, Department of Justice: For an additional amount for salaries, Department of Justice, including the same objects spe fied under this head in the Department of Justice Appropriation Act, 1935, $335,860: Provided, That of this amount $245,460 shall be available only for transfer in addition to transfers authorized by existing law to any other appropriation or appropriations under the Department of Justice not to exceed 25 percent of the appropriation to which transfer is made, when approved by the Director of the Budget.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask to have that amendment reread.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will reread the amendment.

The Chief Clerk again read the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 35, after line 21, it is proposed to insert:

For an additional amount for traveling and miscellaneous ex-penses, Department of Justice, including the same objects speci-fied under this head in the Department of Justice Appropriation Act, 1935, $25,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 36, after line 10, it is proposed to insert:

DIVISION OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I recognize that at this late hour in the consideration of the bill it is impossible for me to obtain from the Senate the serious consideration which I believe this amendment merits. From the beginning of this depression I have contended that until we restore the purchasing power of the great masses of the people of this country we could not hope to obtain suitable conditions upon which a recovery could be predicated.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I agree very largely with the fundamental premise of the Senator from Wisconsin. Does the Senator think we have accomplished any substantial recovery by the grant of $3,300,000,000, without any limitation, without any direction, to an officer to be appointed by the President?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Public Works program I shall discuss in a few moments, and I prefer to deal with that when I come to it.

Mr. CLARK. I did not wish to interrupt the Senator. but it was my thought, when I voted for the appropriation of $3,300,000,000, that we were going to strike the unemployment situation a blow which would be immediately felt; and I have felt, throughout the existence of the Public Works Administration, that there was too much red tape, and that the object which we all voted for had not been accomplished.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I shall deal with that phase of the problem in just a few moments, and I want to be just as brief as I possibly can, because, as I stated at the outset, I recognize that at this late hour I am trespassing upon the time and the patience of the Senate.

Consistent with my view, however, that until purchasing power on the part of the masses of the people of this country shall be restored, and that all efforts at recovery which stop short of that objective will be futile, I have, since the beginning of the depression, fought for a gigantic publicworks program, to accomplish two purposes: First, to put people back to work and to distribute purchasing power, and, secondly, to stimulate the great basic industries which, it is my view, must be restored to a measure of normal activity if we are to come out of the economic crisis in which we now find ourselves.

Mr. President, we are well along in the fifth year of the depression. There are still between ten and eleven million persons in the United States totally unemployed. According to the latest figures which I have been able to obtain, there are more than 4,000,000 families receiving direct relief in this country, which means nearly 16,000,000 men, women, and children. In addition to that, there are 900,000 heads of families in the United States who are receiving relief under the set-up which was created following the demobilization of the Civil Works Administration.

Mr. President, the indexes show that there was a rise in the activity in lighter consumer goods in the industries in the fall and in the winter months. I contend that it was largely due to the extraordinary expenditures on the part of the Federal Government through Public Works, through Civil Works, and through the benefit payments extended to farmers under the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Those expenditures were running approximately at the rate of $300,000,000 a month. In recent weeks they have been very sharply curtailed, and already the indexes of the consumer goods, or light industries, begin to show the evidences of the curtailment of that purchasing power. Already they have begun to enter another period of decline. There are upon the horizon ominous signs of another crisis within the crisis which we have been experiencing since 1929.

Mr. President, the estimated deficit in normal construction and in needed construction in the United States is $13,000,-000,000. This estimate was made by the Planning and Research Division of the N.R.A.

I admit that there has been disappointment at the rapidity with which the expenditure of the $3,300,000,000 Public Works fund appropriated in title II of the Industrial Recovery Act has gotten under way. Nevertheless, it must be conceded that it was necessary to set up some organization in order that this program might be efficiently and properly administered.

I have been as critical, perhaps, as some other Senators of the slowness of that process; but the fact remains that the organization is now intact, that all its funds have been allocated to projects, and that the peak of its activity will be reached about August of the present year.

Mr. President, ever since the beginning of this depression we have from time to time endeavored to focus the attention of the Congress and the public upon the necessity for the adequacy of Public Works appropriation. If this device is to be employed at all, it must be employed upon a sufficiently large scale to effect the objectives which we have in mind. Unfortunately, in each instance when this attempt has been made the appropriations have been curtailed to the point where they have not sufficiently stimulated the distribution of purchasing power and the great basic industries.

Now we are confronted with an alternative as to whether or not we shall establish a program adequate in size so that it may be carried on as long as is necessary in order to attain the objectives of reemployment and of stimulation of the basic industries.

On the other hand, Mr. President, we have the choice of refusing to face these facts, as we have in the past; of refusing to recognize the magnitude of this crisis which confronts us, and then we shall certainly find ourselves in the same situation in which we found ourselves last October. Some hastily conceived organization will have to be set up and put into operation in order to meet the situation as it then arises.

Already the textile industry has demanded a 25-percent curtailment of its operations. Already the silk industry has had 1 week of shut-down in order to meet the situation confronting it because of curtailed purchasing power.

I recognize that there are those who say that the Federal Government cannot successfully undertake to provide such a large sum as is contemplated by this amendment. My answer is that the public debt in this country has not yet reached the point where we cannot afford to carry on expenditures of this type which add to the total national wealth. We have, in other words, Mr. President, the alternative between continuing the expenditure on a huge scale for direct relief, which undermines the morale and breaks down the spirit of the group which must accept it, or we can augment those appropriations and those expenditures, provide useful projects, and provide employment which maintains the self-respect and maintains the morale of those who receive it.

To my mind, Mr. President, there are only two courses to follow in a crisis of this kind. One is to accept the position of the orthodox economist and the orthodox statesman, who contends that the only thing which may be done in a situation of this kind is to take in all sail and attempt to ride out the storm with bare poles. The other alternative is to adopt a program of sufficient magnitude to stem the tide of the depression, to lift the level of economic activity, and to attain the objectives of recovery.

Both policies, Mr. President, cannot be followed simultaneously. It is somewhat analogous to the situation that confronts a general in a war. He may not determine to fight both an offensive and a defensive war. He must choose course, it is necessary, if the defensive be taken, that the objective necessary to achieve victory shall be attained. Otherwise, Mr. President, the morale of the troops, the morale of those who are in the noncombatant population behind the lines, is broken down, demoralized, and the Army ultimately overwhelmed.

How often may we pick these people up, give them some chance to grasp again a self-respecting mode of life, and then cut them off and put them back upon relief?

These programs, our experience demonstrates, cannot be worked out over night. It takes time for the necessary engineering data, the necessary financial data upon these projects, before they can come up and be approved.

While this amendment may perhaps seem to many Senators to carry an appropriation enormous in its size, not one dollar of it need be expended unless the exigencies of the situation demand. It is entirely within the hands of the President, under title 2 of the National Industrial Recovery Act, to cut off at any time every dollar of expenditure for Public Works by simply issuing a proclamation declaring that the emergency has terminated.

Unless a program of continuing character shall be adopted. which will permit the municipalities, the counties, and the States to undertake the necessary work in preparing these projects for submission, when we find ourselves in the next slump of this depression we shall be as unprepared for it as we were last October.

This amendment provides $1,250,000,000 for the elimination of hazards to highway traffic. There are grade-crossing eliminations in this country amounting to more than $3,000,-000,000, upon which the plans and specifications are ready. With the tremendous increase in the speed of vehicular traffic, with the tremendous increase in the speed of our trains, in the near future it will become necessary for us to eliminate these hazards to highway and other traffic.

This amendment provides $1,500,000,000 for buildings, not to be expended unless approved by the Administration of Public Works.

It provides for not less than $4,855,000,000 for non-Federal projects. Today there are more projects on file at the Public Works Administration which have come up through the various State agencies than are provided for in this amendment.

It also provides $1,000,000,000 to be expended by the Emergency Housing Corporation for the construction of slum-clearance projects. This is the only large industrial country in the world which has not, during the depression, undertaken a national program to provide decent housing for the low-income group.

The time is coming, Mr. President, when the people of the United States are going to demand that this huge expenditure for direct relief be curtailed and that these moneys, augmented with others large enough to provide a tremendous program, shall be expended for useful work, for projects which add to the total value and to the total wealth of the communities.

Upon my amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, like the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette], I am warned by the lateness of the hour and the impatience of the Senate not to indulge in any extended remarks. I had intended to submit a few comments upon the amendment and upon the policy underlying it. I have abandoned that purpose. I do, however, wish to make one or two points, because one or two propositions have been advanced which I am unwilling to see go unchallenged, even though I am the only Member of the Senate to challenge them.

I think I feel as keenly as any Member of the Senate the distress prevailing in the drought-stricken region of the country. There can be no difference of sentiment or feeling among Senators concerning such wide-spread and such intense distress.

Mr. President, if I thought the existence of an emergency could annul the Constitution of the United States I should one or the other; and once having determined upon that | Congress of the United States could add to its powers or remove the limitation upon its powers merely by declaring the existence of an emergency, I should vote for many of these appropriations.

But, sir, I still believe that the United States is a government of delegated powers; not only delegated powers, but of enumerated powers; not only of enumerated powers, but of limited powers. The United States can do no act that is not authorized by the Constitution either by an express grant of power or by necessary implication.

The fundamental distinction between Hamilton and the Federalists on the one side and Jefferson and the democracy on the other side pivoted on the point of implied power. Hamilton was a liberal constructionist-I believe they called him a latitudinarian. Jefferson was a strict constructionist, but even Hamilton himself insisted that the power to lay and collect taxes to provide for the common defense and the general welfare meant "the general welfare"; that it must be dedicated to general purposes, to general objects connected with the Government. Hamilton, as much as any one in the earlier days, denied that Congress could lay and collect taxes and expend the public moneys for private or for individual objects. Upon that point at least he and Jefferson entirely agreed.

When a policy is proposed, an appropriation is proposed, those who propose it assume the burden of proof to show the constitutional grant of authority to adopt the policy or to make the appropriation. When an appropriation is proposed two questions may arise, one a question of principle and the other a question of policy or of expediency.

When an appropriation is proposed the question arises, . does the purpose come within the express or implied authority of the Congress? If the answer be in the negative, that settles the issue, no matter how intense the sympathy inspiring the proposal. If the answer be in the affirmative, then the question of expediency or policy arises. Should the appropriation be made even though it is ascertained that the power exists?

The committee has reported an amendment providing for $500,000,000, which has been adopted. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] proposes to add $3,600,000,000. With Senators who accept his principles that is not a difference of kind. It is merely a difference of degree, a mere matter of mathematics, or at most of public finance or fiscal policy, when we once adopt the principle which underlies this character of legislation.

The Senator from Wisconsin said this afternoon that no constitutional question arises in connection with the proposal; that Congress has settled that question by a series of precedents; that no question arises as to whether this is a proper Federal function, that question having been settled by Congress through a series of precedents. How many breaches of the Constitution are required to constitute and consecrate a precedent, I do not know. I have often said that it is worse to violate a sound principle in a good cause than in a bad one. Such a violation is invoked as a precedent in support of a bad cause.

Mr. President, perhaps I am the only Member of the Congress who doubts the power of Congress to use public money for private charity. Perhaps I am the only Member of Congress who doubts the power of the Government to take money out of the pockets of one man without any return, and transfer that money to the pockets of another citizen of this Republic equally entitled to the protection of the Government.

Perhaps I am the only one who doubts that we can take public money and use it not for private charity, limited to human beings, but extend it, as proposed by one Senator this afternoon, to the beasts of the field, the dumb, driven cattle.

Do not marvel at that. There is no end. When we open the gates for one unconstitutional appropriation we cannot close it when another knocks at the gate.

Mr. President, I desire to have read at this point an extract from a veto message by President Cleveland, as a vote for many of these appropriations. If I thought the matter of antiquarian interest. A bill passed Congress in 1887 appropriating $10,000 to buy seed to be distributed amongst the farmers in the drought-stricken sections of Texas. I ask that the extract be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

VETO MESSAGE OF PRESIDENT GROVER CLEVELAND

EXECUTIVE MANSION.

February 16, 1887.

I return without my approval House bill no. 10203, entitled "An act to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seeds in the drought-stricken counties of Texas, and making an appropriation therefor."

It is represented that a long-continued and extensive drought has existed in certain portions of the State of Texas, resulting in a failure of crops and consequent distress and destitution.

Though there has been some difference in statements concerning the extent of the people's needs in the localities thus affected, there seems to be no doubt that there has existed a condition calling for relief; and I am willing to believe that, notwithstanding the aid already furnished, a donation of seed grain to the farmers located in this region, to enable them to put in new crops, would serve to avert a continuance or return of an unfortunate blight.

And yet I feel obliged to withhold my approval of the plan as proposed by this bill to indulge a benevolent and charitable sentiment through the appropriation of public funds for that I can find no warrant for such an appropriation in the Constitution, and I do not believe that the power and duty of the General Government ought to be extended to the relief of individual suffering which is in no manner properly related to the public service or benefit. A prevalent tendency to disregard the limited mission of this power and duty should, I think, be steadfastly resisted, to the end that the lesson should be constantly enforced that though the people support the Government the enforced that though the people support the Government the Government should not support the people.

The friendliness and charity of our countrymen can always be relied upon to relieve their fellow citizens in misfortune. This has been repeatedly and quite lately demonstrated. Federal aid in such cases encourages the expectation of paternal care on the part of the Government and weakens the sturdiness of our national character, while it prevents the indulgence among our people of that kindly sentiment and conduct which strengthen the heads of a common brotherhood.

the bonds of a common brotherhood.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, President Cleveland, himself not an indifferent lawyer, said that he could find no warrant in the Constitution for the appropriation of $10,000 for the relief of the inhabitants of the drought-stricken region of Texas. I think no one has supplied his want. I believe no one has cited any authority in the Constitution to make private use of public money, and that is the point I am

Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States was ordained and established, the General Government was created, to accomplish two general sets of governmental functions. One was to supervise our relations with foreign powers, which could not be done by a number of individual States acting singly, which could be done only by a general government acting as a body politic. That, of course, involved the treaty-making power, the power to declare war, the power to provide for the common defense, the raising of armies and navies, and other general objects of that description. The other general set of functions was to supervise the relations between the several States and matters of common concern to all the States, which could not be done by the States acting severally or even jointly in any other capacity than as that of a body politic.

The primary purpose, the paramount object, in the adoption of the Constitution, if one may be suggested as more urgent than another, was the desire to regulate commerce between the several States and with foreign powers. A few other general powers, some 17 specific powers, were granted in section 8 of article I.

Mr. President, in my opinion, this Government has no power to practice private charity. Its powers are limited to certain public purposes. The Union is the creation of the The Supreme Court has said that the States could exist without the Union, but that no such political entity as the Union could exist without the States. On the other hand, the States create the counties and the municipalities. There are certain functions which devolve upon them which are not devolved upon the Government of the United States and should not be assumed by the general government.

My memory as to the history of appropriations of this sort is somewhat different from that of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette]. He cites an early instance where there was a conflagration in Alexandria. I do not recall the incident. According to my recollection, and according to very high authority which I have here in my hand, from Mr. Charles Warren, the first act passing Congress in the nature of benevolence or charity passed in 1854. It donated 10,000,000 acres of public land for the establishment in the several States of asylums for the indigent insane. It was an appropriation of public lands. The distinction was clearly made at the time by the proponents of that measure that Congress could make general use of the proceeds arising from the sale of public lands, a use that it could not make of funds or revenue arising from revenue produced by taxation.

Few, if any, insisted at that time that that measure could have been financed out of revenues resulting from taxation. A distinction was made, and it was contended by the friends of the measure that it could be provided for out of the proceeds of the public lands.

That measure was vetoed by President Pierce. I shall have one paragraph read from his veto message, and shall ask that other sections may be printed in the RECORD, together with certain excerpts from other public men. The paragraph to which I refer is on page 62.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the paragraph will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

"I cannot find any authority in the Constitution for making the Federal Government the great almoner of public charity throughout the United States. To do so would, in my judgment, be contrary to the letter and spirit of the Constitution and subversive of the whole theory upon which the Union of these States is founded." He stated that he could not discover any distinction between appropriation of land for such an object and appropriation of money from the Treasury for the same object; and that both he considered to be unconstitutional.

Mr. GORE. He made the point in that message that if Congress could appropriate money for the indigent insane, outside the District, it could appropriate money for the indigent who were not insane, the poor in all the States, the dependent, the orphan, the sick, or the needy.

I ask to have the book retained at the desk, because I shall have one or two other quotations read in a moment. I shall detain the Senate only a moment longer.

That measure was passed in 1854. It was vetoed by the President, and that is the first instance or attempt of that kind in our history. According to my information and the best authority available, no appropriation for relief, even for a disaster commonly known as "an act of God", to be provided out of the general funds in the Treasury, was enacted until 1874, and that was for the relief of the flood sufferers in Alabama along the Tombigbee and Black Warrior

Mr. President, I desire to have read at this point, from pages 79 and 80, an extract from a speech by Senator John T. Morgan, delivered in the Senate—an ornament to this body when he was here, and his memory still reflects luster upon it; a leader here, a leader in his State, a leader in his section, a leader in the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

How inevitably political conditions creep into Government charity was most illuminatingly depicted by John C. Morgan, Senator from Alabama, in describing 10 years later the genesis and operation of this measure:

"In May 1874 there was an overflow that occurred in my State on the Tombigbee or the Big Warrior River, a small narrow stream whose bottom lands were not very extensive; and as soon as it was understood that some plantations had been inundated and some stock swept off, the Members of Congress then representing or claiming to represent that State brought in a bill to appropriate $400,000 for the relief of the people who had been overflowed * * and the bill was passed. The general welfare of the whole State of Alabama and of the United States was a sufficient plea in apology for giving $400,000 * *. The money was authorized to be expended on bacon and in four and other foods for human consumption. It was so expended. The overflow had passed away before the bill passed Congress and new crops were growing upon the land. * * * It was "In May 1874 there was an overflow that occurred in my State and new crops were growing upon the land.

distributed in the next October and November elections upon the highest points of the sand mountains throughout a large region of the country where the people wanted what was called in that country 'overflow bacon.' I cannot get that picture out of my mind. There was the general welfare of the people invoked, and with success, to justify this political fraud; the money was voted and the bacon was bought, and the politicians went around with their greasy hands and distributed it to the men who cast greasier ballots that they could not read. And in that way the general welfare was promoted."

"Overflow bacon"! The situation is too tragic for jest. But legislators should not close their eyes to the instincts, to the impulses, or even to the infirmities of human nature, lest we should become blind to the rights and the claims of the taxpayer.

| Musband had been an officer in the Army, and I am not certain that that constituents an exception. If it does, I sinned against my rule.

There was only one other exception. Soon after I came to the Senate this incident happened: United States soldiers from Fort Reno, in my State, were engaged in target practice and a stray bullet struck a little full-blood Indian girl about 7 or 3 years of age. Her name was Lily Smallrib. The sight of both her eyes was destroyed. She was rendered totally blind.

I offered a bill to provide a small monthly stipend for

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, in this connection I desire to have an extract read from Senator Fairfield, of Maine, a Democrat, to be found on page 73 of the same book.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Sympathy must not blind judgment or solemn obligation to support the Constitution. It was an easy matter to be generous and to give bountifully from money or means not our own. The world would be full of charitable people if they could satisfy claims upon their bounty by putting their hands into the pockets of another. * * * That is a very cheap sort of benevolence and would constitute a very small item in the great moral account. * * No more right to appropriate money out of the Treasury to purposes not contemplated by the Constitution than we had as private individuals to lay our hands upon the property of our neighbors. * * * The people were their own best almoners and would not thank or justify us for assuming that relation to them. * * relation to them.

Not one of the friends of this measure has yet attempted to ut his finger upon the provision of the Constitution which authorizes it

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask to have a few other extracts printed without having them read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

There being no objection, the extracts were ordered to be printed in the Record, and appear at the end of Mr. Gore's

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, a vast majority of the Democrats in other times have held as did Cleveland and

In this connection I wish to say one further word before I sit down. My reason for voting against these appropriations is not due to any lack of sympathy toward the distressed. I hope that I have as keen a sympathy toward all in distress as has anyone either in or out of this body. My attitude is due to an honest conviction that, under the Constitution of the United States, we have no power to make these appropriations; we have no power to take a dollar out of the pocket of one man who has earned it, giving him nothing in return, and transfer that dollar to another man who has not earned it. If that can be done by governments at all, it ought to be done by the States, where the power is not limited, as it is here in Congress. This explains why I have not been able to vote for any of these relief measures, some of which I thought meritorious, some of which appealed to me.

If I may be pardoned one personal reference before I sit down, I am now serving in my seventeenth regular session in this body, and I have served through six extraordinary sessions. I have never yet cast a vote to take $1 out of the Treasury of the United States and give it to any human being on this globe-not one. When that proposition is involved in a measure, I vote against it, no matter what else is in it, and I have voted against measures on that account which contained many provisions which appealed to my judgment and to my heart.

Mr. President, I feel that I ought to add this one closing remark. If there be an exception to that general principle which I have laid down, it is the following: When I first came to the Senate I voted for a small pension in behalf of the widow of the man who laid down his life to prove that the yellow fever was conveyed by the mosquito from one human being to another. That was a great service in behalf of science—the ultimate sacrifice in behalf of human-

I offered a bill to provide a small monthly stipend for that unfortunate victim of that accident—an unspeakable misfortune caused by our soldiers in the discharge of their duty. I was not able to secure the enactment of that measure. Perhaps it could have been enacted now. I apologize to the Senate for having made this personal allusion, but it may shed some light upon my motives and my course of action. If what I have said does not prove that I am right, it at least proves that I am consistent, which is not important, but I hope it gives proof that I am sincere in the attitude which I have assumed and maintained toward all legislation of this kind and character.

I repeat, Mr. President, I do not vote to give away the people's money. I do not vote to give away the tax-payers' money. I look upon myself as a trustee, as a sworn trustee of the public moneys, and I could not vote to violate that trust as I see it. These accumulating precedents have not changed my convictions or my sense of duty. I doubt not that the future will vindicate the wisdom of our fathers, and will demonstrate the unwisdom of the present hour. I make no doubt that children now born will rue the day and that children unborn will curse the day that this thing was done.

(The following extracts were ordered printed at the end of Mr. Gore's remarks:)

(From the veto message of Franklin Pierce, May 3, 1854, of the bill entitled "An act making a grant of public lands to the several States for the benefit of indigent insane persons.")

In the performance of this duty, prescribed by the Constitution, I have been compelled to resist the deep sympathies of my own heart in favor of the humane purpose sought to be accom-plished and to overcome the reluctance with which I dissent from the conclusions of the two Houses of Congress, and present my own opinion in opposition to the action of a coordinate branch of the Government which possesses so fully my confi-branch of the Government which possesses so fully my confidence and respect.

This bill therefore proposes that the Federal Government shall make provision to the amount of the value of 10,000,000 acres of land for an eleemosynary object within the several States, to be administered by the political authority of the same; and it presents at the threshold the question whether any such act on the part of the Federal Government is warranted and sanctioned by the Constitution the provisions and principles of which are to be protected and sustained as a first and paramount duty.

It cannot be questioned that if Congress has the power to make provision for the indigent insane without the limits of this District, it has the same power to provide for the indigent who are not insane, and thus to transfer to the Federal Government the charge of all the poor in all the States. It has the same power to provide hospitals and other local establishments for the care and cure of every species of human infirmity, and thus to assume all that duty, of either public philanthropy or public necessity to the dependent, the orphan, the sick, or the needy which is now discharged by the States themselves or by corporate institutions or private endowments under the legislation of the States. The ole field of public beneficence is thrown open to the care and whole field of public beneficence is thrown open to the care and culture of the Federal Government. Generous impulses no longer encounter the limitations and control of our imperious fundamental law; for however worthy may be the present object in itself, it is only one of a class. It is not exclusively worthy of benevolent regard. * * * If Congress may and ought to provide for any one of these objects, it may and ought to provide for them all. And if it be done in this case, what answer shall be given when Congress shall be called upon, as it doubtless will, to pursue a similar course of legislation in the others? * * The decision upon the principle in any one case determines it for the whole class. The question presented, therefore, clearly is for the whole class. The question presented, therefore, clearly is upon the constitutionality and propriety of the Federal Government assuming to enter into a novel and vast field of legislation, namely, that of providing for the care and support of all these among the people of the United States who by any form of calamity become fit objects of public philanthropy.

. behalf of science—the ultimate sacrifice in behalf of human—ity. The widow was left in straitened circumstances. Her creature of the States, not they of the Federal Union? [Extracts from Congress as Santa Claus]

But Lewis Cass voiced the view more generally held at that time, when he said that: "If you have a right, under the pretense of promoting the general welfare, or under a claim to promote the general welfare, to make any appropriation you please, without reference to governmental purposes, you are perfectly afloat—a government without a constitution." The true doctrine was, he said, that you could promote the general welfare only "agreeably to the purposes and objects of the Constitution."

Andrew P. Butler, of South Carolina, contended that "Congress is a fiduciary proprietor and bound to use the fund in subserviency to the ends contemplated, subject to the limitations specified in the Constitution itself.

So, too, John F. Farnsworth, of Illinois (Republican), said: "This is a new precedent, and if followed out to its logical consequence, we should hunt out the starving poor of every city and contribute to their relief."

Frank Hiscock of New York (Republican) stated that there were more politics in the legislation than there were provisions for support of the flooded, and that information had come to the Committee on Appropriations that "absolute injury was being done to those people by the excessive appropriations which were John Randolph Tucker, of Virginia, stated that as "the spirit of the Centennial is obedience to the Constitution", and as one of the great principles of that document was jealousy of centralization of power, it was improper to celebrate a Centennial by construing the Constitution so broadly as to give Congress power to appropriate for whatever it judged to be necessary for the general welfare. "Wrong does not become sanctified by frequent repetition", said Benjamin A. Willis, of New York (Democrat) " "It is time this spirit of restlessness and discontent which despises restraint and mocks at the doctrine of strict construction should be rebuked." Even though such appropriations may have been made in our history, "the people never acquiesced in them until absorbed by the grand problems of war and debauched by the poison of speculation, when they became nonchalant and indifferent." He pointed out that the functions of Government have been "indefinitely multiplied. It has built railroads; become parent, schoolmaster, banker, and now it built railroads; become parent, schoolmaster, banker, and now it proposes to go into the show business. Scarcely anyone stops to inquire what the fundamental law prescribes."

Said Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio: "You can only provide for the general welfare by exercising the powers that are delegated to you in the Constitution. That is the mode in which you are to provide for the general welfare, not by going outside of the express delegations of power and roaming through all the universe of things to find something that in your judgment would be promotive of the general welfare."

Senator Thomas F. Bayard objected-and it is to be noted that this was in 1884, almost 50 years ago—to any further extension "of the bureaucratic system that is covering the country all over with agencies of the General Government, instead of the natural means agencies of the General Government, instead of the natural means of relief, local knowledge, local self-government, local self-interest to attend to local affairs. * * Day by day the doctrines and practices of a paternal government are speciously and tentatively expanding over the country and the habit of popular thought is unhappily becoming accustomed to them. * * This constant intervention by government in tasks that belong to the individual and which American citizenship needs for its development and its proper exercise must cease, or ours will become as bureaucratic a government as that of Russia."

In 1887 John J. Ingalls, Republican Senator from Kansas, pointed out with great force that the legislation was "based upon an entirely mistaken apprehension of the theory of this Govern-

"It illustrates the tendency of this class of agitators to demand the continual interposition of the National Government in State and local and domestic affairs, with the result, as I believe, of and local and domestic affairs, with the result, as I believe, of absolutely destroying the independence and freedom of individual conduct and subverting the theory on which the Government is based and in the conduct of which hitherto it has reached such great results. * * It is not desirable that there should be uniformity of methods and results in the different * * * States. It is the conflict of the contrariety of opinions in this country upon these subjects that results in the greatest good to the greatest number. It is the collision and contest between opposing ideas or views of contending localities that enable us to reach the highest results in the departments of activity and government."

And Thomas Sterling, of South Dakota said: "It is the extreme of paternalism " this instruction in farm-demonstration work and home economics. " That aid which forestalls and prevents self-initiative or self-help and invites dependence of the people of the States upon the general Government in any enterprise costs too much, and the Nation itself will, in the end, feel the enervating influence of such a policy."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin will prevail, if not in the form in which it has been offered, at least in material part. I am hopeful of that result, because I am conversant with the fact that there are a great many communities which, under the Public Works Administration, have been anticipating benefits which might accrue to those communities, and they have been striving the best they knew how, with the cooperation of Public Works Administration engineers and others in authority, to accomplish approval of Members of the Senate are thoroughly conversant with a condition existing in the northwest section of the country at this time. That they are conversant with that situation has been best exemplified by the manner in which the Senate today responded to the relief needs of that stricken area.

It is of interest, or should be to the Senate, to know that the heart of the drought area, the hardest-hit portion of the drought area, seems to be North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, and Wisconsin. In that connection, it is interesting to note that a project which for months has been considered as likely of approval as a Public Works project is that involving the diversion of flood waters from the Missouri River into a great valley, into lake beds, and into streams which supply cities like Fargo, Grand Forks, Valley City, Jamestown, and Devils Lake in my own State of North Dakota; East Grand Forks, Moorhead, and Breckenridge in Minnesota; Huron, Redfield, Aberdeen, and other cities that might be named in South Dakota.

This project meets, in very large measure, a desperate situation existing in those three States at this time. As a result of the Public Works program for the past year men have been at work, spending large sums of money, and communities have authorized the expenditures of money to further the cause of this project. At the present time the Public Works Administration has in the field a commission which it is expected is going to report not later than the 1st of August of this year on the possibility of that particular project. We have good reason to believe that that commission is going to find favorably in support of the project.

However that may be, if they should find favorably, with appropriations as limited as they are in the bill at the present time for public works, I fear that we would have to conclude, no matter what the will of the Public Works Administration might be, that the prospect of having it approved as a Federal project would be quite nil.

I realize that the Senate is anxious to finish this work this evening. I am not going to take any more of its time. I ask, Mr. President, that there be incorporated in the RECORD two very recent editorials, one from a North Dakota paper, another from a South Dakota paper, revealing the very wide interest that is existing in this project at this particular time. The one is entitled "The Missouri Diversion Project", appearing in the Evening Huronite, of Huron, S.Dak.; the other is entitled "River Diversion", from the Devils Lake (N.Dak.) Journal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the editorials will be printed in the RECORD.

The editorials referred to are as follows:

[From the Evening Huronite, Huron, S.Dak.] THE MISSOURI DIVERSION PROJECT

The struggle of this entire James Valley for rehabilitation of The struggle of this entire James Valley for rehabilitation of its sources of water is one which has not received the attention it should. It may be well to admit that a short-sighted policy has contributed to our steadily receding subsoil water level. We have drained to our distinct disadvantage. Our highway engineers have put forth every effort to get the water away as quickly as possible. Those who have believed themselves to be utilitarians have sought by every means possible to "rescue" land from water. Add to these things the diminishing precipitation which has marked the past 10 years in this area, and we are faced with a situation which is extremely serious.

The receding waters of Devils Lake in North Dakota led a group of men, headed by S. W. Thompson of Devils Lake, N.Dak., to consider some plan to divert the flood waters of the Missouri River into the watersheds of the James and Sheyenne Rivers, through the construction of a huge dam near Garrison, N.Dak. Their first purpose was to fill up the basin of the lake. Further study of the situation and an awakening realization of the plight of these watersheds led to a great expansion in the dreams of these men. They saw an opportunity to contribute first to the lessening of the flood threat to the lower river and second to assure these two rivers with a flow of water the year around.

It is not necessary to rehearse the whole story of the development of the idea, the investigations which have been made by Army engineers and by engineers brought in by the proponents of the project. It has been told in these columns many times. Suffice it to say that competent engineers have pronounced it feasible, practical, and worth while. They assert that it will relieve the Missouri River of troublesome flood-stage water, enhance the possibilities of navigation, and provide a source of power when and if the time comes when it can be profitably utilized. With equal assurance they have stated that the construction of the dam will impound sufficient water to restore the great lake beds in and near Devils Lake, furnish sufficient water for impounding other large reservoirs, notably just above Jamestown, and at the same time provide a bank-full flow of water in the James and Sheyenne Rivers when nature does not adequately supply these streams. This would assure various cities with a sure supply of water, soften our devastatingly high temperatures, make tree culture much easier, and add greatly to productivity of these valleys in which a great civilization is already established but which cannot endure under present conditions. There is no thought of irrigation. There is no purpose to bring new acres under cultivation. It is merely a program to preserve the homes and farms of these valleys which have been threatened by unwise action in the past.

North Dakota groups have done valiant service in arousing an interest in is vital to their future and to the welfare of every interest in them.

True giants in the earth settled and developed this great area of rich soils. They fought the sting of the blizzard. They withstood the attacks of savage, often mistreated Indians. They built here by dint of sturdy toil the bread basket of a great Nation. The Northwest must continue to be that if the national economy remains secure.
